CHOOSE YE.

Turning from the old year to the new there is a mingled feeling of joy and sadness. We have come to love the old year as if it had some real existence of life or soul. We have been travelling in its company so constantly and so long and have taken from its hands our joys and sorrows so really that with its ceasing to be we have felt a loss as at the departure of a friend. We fall very naturally into reverie. Reverie grows serious and meditative. Why has the old year left us and the new year come? How was the changed relation effected? What will the new year be? Will we take its blessings thankfully and its cares trustingly? Whom will we serve this whole new year? Then a voice startles us. There is no one near us. We do not see any one above us. We are sure no one has spoken with a human voice. Still there is a voice saying: "Choose ye." We have heard that voice before. It was the Sabbath day. We were in the house of God. The preacher was announcing his text. These were the words he used. That put the words into our hearing. Another voice speaking through the preacher carried them to our consciences. There they have remained. We did not then see a need to decide. To-day the words come back and although the issue is not distinct the time seems opportune. The words, "choose ye," have a challenge and a call with new emphasis as we give up one friend and greet another.

Every moment may bring an issue requiring us to choose on some challenge the duty then to be done, the course to follow. But now the call is to a choice that shall comprehend and include every particular choice. We seem to be reading in the record of early times when the people had forsaken God to worship a calf which, all too readily, Aaron had consented to make. The people had neglected duty and set themselves to pleasure. They had concluded that life had no responsibilities, no stern necessities and solemn sanctions. They sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play. Then Moses came, aflame of zeal for God, solemn in the sense of duty to God and our fellow-men, and flung this word of challenge into their idle and sensuous ears: "Who is on the Lord's side?" The words stand out boldly on the sacred page and demand an answer in the beginning of this new year.

We cannot deny it, that our conscience will be clear and our conduct right if we will decide now, that in every separate issue of this year we will be on the Lord's side, if by His grace we keep to that. The service of the Lord is more honorable than any service of self or Satan. It is sure to yield happiness. It will not give what so many call happiness, a mere selfish, sensuous gratification of our baser appetites or passions, but a happiness of being on the right side, of doing the right thing, of serving the right Master. In it we shall be most useful. It may be that our cause will suffer seeming defeat and our deeds will seem to be of no avail. But they are right, as on the side of right, and their final issue of lasting victory will make us happy when final defeat of all selfish plans and deeds shall make all enemies of God and good miserable. On the Lord's side we may have to risk our lives, but they are charmed lives in His care. We may be wounded, but we have the care of the Great Physician. As a shield the Lord will defend us in the battle and if wounded carry us to a place of safety and of shelter, our true happiness will be in being safe on the Lord's side.

Yes we know all the transient gratifications, all the boasted delights of the other side. We may sit down to eat and to drink and rise up to play. Life may seem one vast play ground, and time one fine holiday. We have heard that side, with flattering speech and pleasing ventures, call the foolish children. We have found in the old former years that there are tired bodies, sleepy heads, heavy hearts, wasted strength, sensitive nerves, empty hands and powerless lives as results of any other service. We have not found on the other side, character and patience and strength and courage. We do choose. We are on the Lord's side.

Another page of this blessed Book lies open before us. It is the account of that great day when Joshua is telling the people in earnest counsel of all the way in which the Lord has led and fed them from the call of Abraham to this settlement in Canaan. It is a recital of the many and merciful ministries of God. It concludes with a challenge: "Choose ye." Israel appreciated the story. Israel attended the call. Israel answered the challenge. So will we. We will serve the Lord. As Joshua felt that he was not qualified to rule until he had first learned to serve, so will we serve the Lord first that we may be fitted to fill any station of responsibility and authority among our fellow-men. As Joshua felt that his choice was not to bow to a tyrant, such as a lordly man might be, so will we decide and hold fast to our decision that to serve the Lord is to submit to the authority of our friend ruling us for our good and the good of others.

In any question of morals, in any conflict of claims, in any struggle for right, in any social indulgence, in any public interest, we choose, we are on the Lord's side. We may not see far into the future, we may have only light enough for one step at a time, we will go in the direction shown us on the Lord's side and take one step at a time that way. It will be done very feebly. It will not be done at all in our own strength. Only this, we decide. We choose. We are on the Lord's side.

In this mind we enter the way of this new year—we cannot tell what sort of companion our new friend is to be. Indeed we do not care to know beforehand. Only this dear readers we are careful to choose to be on the Lord's side. For this year of 1894 we point two ways—on the Lord's side and on some other side. Between these two ways, choose ye.

On the second page of this issue we present our readers with an exceedingly interesting and otherwise desirable article from Dr. J. Henry Smith, entitled "Alexander Craighead—also the first of articles from parties specially qualified for the discussion of their themes. The article on "Evils of Tenement-House Life" is one the general reader ought to highly appreciate.

France and Spain just now are especially agitated by the question, how to deal with anarchists. It is a question that cannot be postponed. Spain has invited Italy to join in measures for the suppression of these foes to all government, but Italy just now is too much engrossed with other matters. In fact that question of debt, which so terrorizes individuals, has now fair Italy within its iron grasp, and it is with difficulty a ministry can be found to undertake the work of her release from the distressful situation. Crispi, the greatest Italian statesman of the day has been recalled to power for that purpose, and great hopes are centered upon him. Wars are expensive affairs and Italy with all her need for funds at home finds a war on her hands in Egypt. She has been successful however in this quarter. Among the hundreds of dead left upon the field in the last battle are said to be Mohammed Ali and most of the Emirs who fought with him.

HERE AND THERE.

On the threshold of the new year it may be well to look around and see what is going on in the world. In our own country the silver question has been laid aside if not settled, and the tariff question has not yet been drawn prominently into discussion. The conflict will be on ere many days. The Hawaiian question which has thrust itself before the public, or been thrust upon them, just now is in a state of comparative quietude. The holidays account for much of this, but the unexpected declination of the Queen of the islands to accept the remarkably favorable terms offered her, has put the politicians in somewhat of a quandary. The prospect now is that while annexation to the United States is a thing out of the question, the people of Hawaii will be left to settle matters among themselves without our interference. This seems to be what both wisdom and justice would dictate.

The present government of Great Britain—known as the Gladstonians—are in the condition of one who can hardly hold on and yet dare not let go. To dissolve now and go to the people would mean the destruction of the present government party, and to this Gladstone will not hear. Yet the marvellous ability of the premier may be said to be all that keeps the party together. Some of the late measures have increased the unpopularity of the present ministry, still they hope to retrieve with measures yet to come. A strong demand has been made that the navy shall be largely increased. The people of Great Britain demand this, yet these same people will visit their resentment upon the party that increases the budget to the extent required to accomplish it. Meanwhile the opposition serenely await the future which is to bring them forward, they hope, upon the crest of an incoming wave.

Norway and Sweden are in very strained relations to each other. Norway as the lesss important kingdom has been restive for sometime. She wishes to make her own consular oppointments and even to have her ministers in foreign countries Some eighteen months ago she took steps in the direction indicated by the passage of a bill through her legislature. Sweden has made many concessions, but regards those now taking as leading to a dissolution of the united kingdom. King Oscar refuses his consent to virtually dissolve the union which now binds the two countries. The claim is also set up that the king may issue commands to Norwegian troops only by consent of the Norwegian minister of war and council of State. On these subjects the Norwegians themselves are not entirely agreed, and war with Sweden, which is possible, will possibly bring civil war in its train.

And what shall be said of Brazil. Possibly before these lines are read a great battle may have been fought which will decide whether the present government is to stand, or the insurgents shall prevail. This has been just the situation of many days past and may be of many yet to come. The government it is clear enough, is utilizing the time to concentrate its naval forces. What the forces under Admiral Mello are to gain by delay is not so clear. Immediate action it would seem should be their policy, but some surprise may be in store for us from this quarter. It is impossible to determine amid conflicting reports which side is most advantageously situated.

The dread of an alliance between France and Russia entertained by the other European powers seems to have abated. The mercurial Parisians have had their attention diverted by the dynamite scare which could hardly be confessed to the French chambers. A proposition which may not be altogether chimerical is now brought forward by one Col. De Polignac, in a pamphlet published in Paris. It proposes that France shall ally herself with the Mussulmans of Africa. France could then ensure peace between her allies and the Spaniards, and while France would become mistress of the western Mediterranean, Spain could place sufficient artillery at Algiers to render Gibraltar untenable.

What to do with the Tramps, is fast becoming one of the questions that will demand very wise thought and very firm dealing. These tramps, of course, are shiftless and improvident—they do not expect to lay by anything. Many of them are skilled artisans, or mechanics—possibly over one-half are so. Notoriously some of the very best printers are among this fraternity. They are almost universally vicious, without being, thus far, except in rare cases, dangerously so—that is in a way to physically endanger others. Homelessness and intemperance lie at the foundation of the evil—for it is a grievous evil. Much over half of the tramps are intemperate, and none of them, presumably, have homes of their own. This last fact may well be considered in connection with the article of Dr. Rhis, on our third page.

THE OLD BIBLE.

Oliver Wendell Homes, in "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," has some fine thoughts about an old violin. When the instrument is new, its tones are dry and hard; but as one player after another pours his melodies into it, its notes become fuller, richer, softer, sweeter, till, in its old age the master's hand evokes, at every sweep of the bow, the echoes of the melodies of generations—the whispered hidden love of the young enthusiast, the passionate longing of the imprisoned artist, the stormy symphonies of the royal orchestras, and the low, soothing strains of the convent's holy hymns. "Its pores are full of music; saturated with the concentrated hue and sweetness of all the harmonies which have kindled and faded on its strings."

So it is with our old Bible: it comes to us like an ancient violin whose strings have been swept by a hundred master hands, with every grain of its wood vibrating and re-echoing the melodies of scores of generations. Into it the Psalmist, sweet singer of Israel, poured all the passionate devotion of his ardent soul; now rising to a very ecstasy of triumph and praise, now wailing forth in sad minor key the sorrows of a well-nigh bursting heart. In it we hear the wondrous mystic voices of inspired prophets, speaking of mysteries transcendent and visions ineffable. From it sounds again like a herald's blast the preaching of the apostles. The very angels of heaven have left in it the echo of their sweet song of "Peace on earth and good will to men." And a yet diviner music dwells in the words of him who spake of heavenly things which he had seen, and of the Heavenly Father whom he came to make known. Here we listen again to the thunder of Sinai, and to the loud cry from Calvary; we hear the Sons of God shouting for joy, and the voice of a great multitude, as of many waters, saying, Allelulia. We hear Deborah's exultant paean, and Hannah's humble hymn of praise; the clash of cymbals and the loud-voiced choir in the temple, and the low, soft hymns in that upper chamber in Jerusalem. Here are songs whose sweet notes have trilled from a million voices, and have cheered a million sorrowing hearts. Here are poems of infinitely varied sentiments that have given expression to the hopes, and fears, joys and griefs, prayers and praises, of hundreds of generations of human souls. Here are our noblest dramas, our sublimest epics, our sweetest lyrics.

Nor does our old Bible speak to us only of those who composed it; around it cluster hallowed memories of the saints of all ages who have poured their devotion into its pages; who have preached from its sacred texts, who have transformed its words into holy poetry, and breathed into them the breath of holy music; who, under its inspiration, have pictured celestial glories which mortal eye had not seen, and spoken of things which mortal ear had not heard, and dreamed of things which had never entered into the heart of man.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by
Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

APPOINTMENTS.

Dec. 31st, with Rev. M. A Henderson, Jan. 2nd, Mt. Airy—4th, Mocksville. Jan. 7th, with Rev. J. M. Seabrook—21st, Third Creek—23rd, Milton—25th, Leakesville—28th, Wentworth.

Who Will Go For Us?

We will begin the new, by repeating the question with which we closed the old year. Last week, after reviewing the several grounds, which the outlook in North Carolina afforded for rejoicing, we called attention to the fact that, to-day, our Southern Church has only six of her children, from this State, in her own work, five of whom are daughters, which is assuredly a matter worthy of the most careful consideration by all whom it concerns.

We will not attempt to inquire into the causes of this situation, or venture any explanation of it, but we will endeavor to improve it, by asking again with all emphasis,

WHO WILL GO FOR US?

There is no immediate, visible prospect of much improvement—at least, so far as ordained ministers are concerned. Some attention to this matter has brought out the following facts:

At Union Seminary, where most of the students from North Carolina study, there are only five young men from this Synod, who are looking forward to the Foreign Mission work—and "these are in the Junior Class;" so that, at least, three years must elapse, before any of these will be ready to go, who may find the way then clear to do so.

At Davidson College, the number, of those interested, is much larger; but with them the period of preparation is also much larger, and, as Dr. Nevius has so clearly shown, the percentage from "the student volunteers," who have really entered the field, has been very small.

This consideration, with some others, has led a great many, among whom we must put ourselves, to question the wisdom of pressing this matter too hard, upon those so far from the time of entering upon their life work.

State the needs—the obligations—the glory of this work, but do not insist on pledges. Leave the future to God's providence and Spirit. Do not try to make providence or to force the Spirit.

Looking away from these two sources, which have been in the past, as we think most unfortunately, the chief recruiting grounds, to the Church at large, we find that there are some eight or ten others, who have presented themselves. Two of these are physicians, whom we hope, within a year or too, to see in the field—one is a thoroughly competent lady, now under appointment, waiting for some improvement in the finances of the Committee. Several others are younger, and less experienced, ladies, not yet ready for service. But where are the Pauls and Silases—men tried and proven—now ready for service—known to their brethren and the churches, whose example would be the strongest missionary appeal? There is not one. Oh, for one such Pastor! This subject is too large for the end of an article. We will return to it.

Young pastors make the very best missionaries.

The demand, from every field, but especially Japan—Corea, China and Brazil is—"Send us your very best men—or none at all." "Possibly our zeal may have outrun our discretion. Possibly some have gone out, who ought to have been kept at home."

Yes, and we will continue to make mistakes—we are not infallible, but let us learn this lesson now—to send out only choice men, who have given proof of their ability and usefulness, even if we must send out fewer.

"Haste makes waste" in this line of work, very often.

"One good missionary is worth ten indifferent missionaries. You must remember that the personal characteristics of men who have to deal with natives, and especially with ignorant natives who are plunged in the depths of superstition, not only influence the people among whom their lot is cast for the time being, but they leave traces behind them that may continue for years; so that, while a good man may leave his memory green to blossom for years, an indifferent man, or one who does not understand the natives, or who rouses the prejudices of the natives, may hinder for years the progress of that enterprise which we are so anxious to further."

TO-MORROW.

We knownot what God's afterwards may be,
The clouds which seem so dark to you and me
May, on the morrow, show their golden lining.
That thorny cross, if rightly borne, may bloom
Like Aaron's rod. Its flowers and rich perfume
Showing how Duty bears its own reward.

ALEXANDER CRAIGHEAD.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS:—A little incident occurred during the sessions of the recent Synod of North Carolina in Tarboro, that occupied a few minutes only, but which your present correspondent thinks deserves a larger and wider notice. The incident is thus recorded in the brief minutes as published in your paper of Nov. 9th.

"Mr. J. C. Burroughs, through his pastor, Rev. J. A. Preston, D. D., presented to the Synod a gavel made from the historic tree which stood during more than one hundred and twenty-five years at the foot of the grave of Rev. Alexander Craighead, and which sprang from the hand-spike used in bearing his body to the grave in 1766. The committee to prepare a suitable response to Mr. J. C. Burroughs, in accepting the gavel presented by him, offered the following, which was adopted:

We would as a Synod thankfully and reverently accept this gavel and express the earnest hope and prayer that at every meeting of this venerable Synod, it may whisper the sweet words: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them," and at the same time be an incentive to heed the call still made to us who labor in the same cause, saying, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

This record and this honored name have induced me to take down and read to an attentive and interested family circle, the 14th chapter of Dr. Wm. Henry Foote's "Sketches of North Carolina, historical and biographical, illustrative of the principles of a portion of the early settlers."

The heading of this chapter is "Church of Sugar Creek—its first minister, Alexander Craighead." This church at Sugar Ceeek reported to the General Assembly last spring (1893) 217 members—five elders and four deacons—with Rev. J. L. Williamson its pastor. But Alex. Craighead, its first minister, was the first Presbyterian minister that resided in Western Carolina and the third in the State.

Alex. Craighead was ordained Nov. 18th, 1735, by Donegal Presbytery, Synod of Philadelphia. He preached a sermon by appointment on Col. 2:7, "Rooted and built up in Him and established in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving." He delivered a lecture on the 1st Psalm, and also discussed the question "Whether revelation is necessary to salvation?" He was a zealous promoter of the "Revival," and accompanied Whitfield while in Chester county, and they made the woods ring, as they rode, with songs of praise. Craighead was a Presbyterian of the strictest type, and an earnest adherent of the "Solemn League and Covenant;" indeed, for awhile,—from 1745 to 1753,—he seems to have withdrawn from the Synod of Philadelphia and "joined himself to the languishing cause of the Reformed Presbyterian Church," (i. e., the Cameronian or Seceder Presbyterian Church). About 1753, he returned to his old associates. He was an exceedingly zealous man, of an ardent temperament, devoted to the work of the ministry, and noted for preaching sermons peculiarly calculated to awaken careless sinners. Anxious for the salvation of men he favored some measures that were thought unjustifiable and dangerous, and specially unacceptable to his brethren in the Presbytery. He removed to the Valley of Virginia, and settled in Bath county, in the bounds of the present "Windy Cove" congregation. His name was enrolled among the members set off to form the first Southern Presbytery of Hanover. The defeat of Braddock on the 9th July, 1755, threw these western frontiers of Virginia at the mercy of the Indians, and their inroads were frequent and murderous. Terror reigned throughout the valley. Mr. Craighead's situation and that of his congregation was specially exposed, and he with those of his people who were disposed and able to escape, sought safety in less exposed situations, after having lived in Virginia about six years. Another reason for Craighead's removal doubtless was, that he found in this retired country—between the Yadkin and Catawba rivers—full and undisturbed exercise for that ardent love of personal liberty and freedom of opinion which had rendered him obnoxious in Pennsylvania, and was in some measure restrained in Virginia. He was ahead of his ministerial brethren, certainly in Pennsylvania, in his views of civil government and religious liberty, and to the Governor of that State, he became particular offensive for a pamphlet of a political nature, attributed to him. This pamphlet attracted so much attention that in 1743, Thomas Cookson, one of his majesty's justices for the county of Lancaster, Pa., in the name of the Governor, laid it before the Synod of Philadelphia. The Synod not yet ready for such sentiments, disavowed both the pamphlet and its author, and in very strong language and unanimously, declared that "we detest this paper, and with it all principles and practices that tend to destroy the civil or religious rights of mankind or to foment or to encourage sedition or dissatisfaccion with the civil government that we are under, or rebellion, treason, or any thing that is disloyal." In the State (or colony,) of Virginia, the disabilities upon those who dissented from the Episcopal Church were illsuited to the spirit of such a man as Alex. Craighead. As Dr. Foote says: "To fight with savages, to defend the frontiers and shield the plantations of Eastern Virginia, and that too, for men that would not yield to his congregation the privilege of being married according to the ceremonies and by the ministers of the Church to which they belonged, and who were taxed to support a ministry on whose ordinances, public and private they would not attend, could not be agreeable to a spirit that longed for all the freedom that belongs to men, and his aspirations for what he had not seen, and scarcely knew how to comprehend, indulged in latitude of thought and expression, alarming at that time even to emigrants from Ireland," more cautious and perhaps more timid than he.

In 1758, at the Spring meeting a call from "Rocky River" was presented for the services of Mr. Craighead, and soon around him, were gathered and organized Steel Creek, Providence, Hopewell, Centre, Rocky River and Poplar Tent, which entirely surrounded Sugar Creek (or Sugaw, or Soogaw, the Indian name of the creek; and in the early records of the Church written Sugaw.) These seven congregations were in Mecklenburg county, (except a part of Centre which lay in Rowan then, now Iredell.) From these came the delegates that formed the celebrated Convention that met in May 1775, and which uttered the Mecklenburg Declaration, and whose hands sustained it in the trying scenes of the Revolution.

What words can fitly express our obligations as citizens of North Carolina, to Alexander Craighead? the solitary minister between the Yadkin and Catawba, whose life and instructions formed the principles both civil and religious, in no measured degree, of that brave and patriotic section, that in the view of tories and British officers and soldiers was termed the Hornet's Nest. It was a happy thought to make the "gavel" above referred to, and present it to the Synod. That gavel is a voice from that honored grave, a voice of self-sacrifice, of piety, of patriotism, and if you will excuse the alliteration—of Presbyterianism. Such annals as Dr. Foote's "Sketches of North Carolina," as also his Sketches of Virginia. (1st and 2nd series,) ought to be read by all our citizens. They ought to be familiar in every Presbyterian home, but I fear they are not. When I read the lives, the sacrifices, the instructions and the inheritance of civil and religious liberty which such men have transmitted to us, I feel it is not irreverent nor inappropriate to say:

"O bless the Lord, my soul:
Nor let 'such' mercies lie
Forgotten in unthankfulness,
And without praises die."

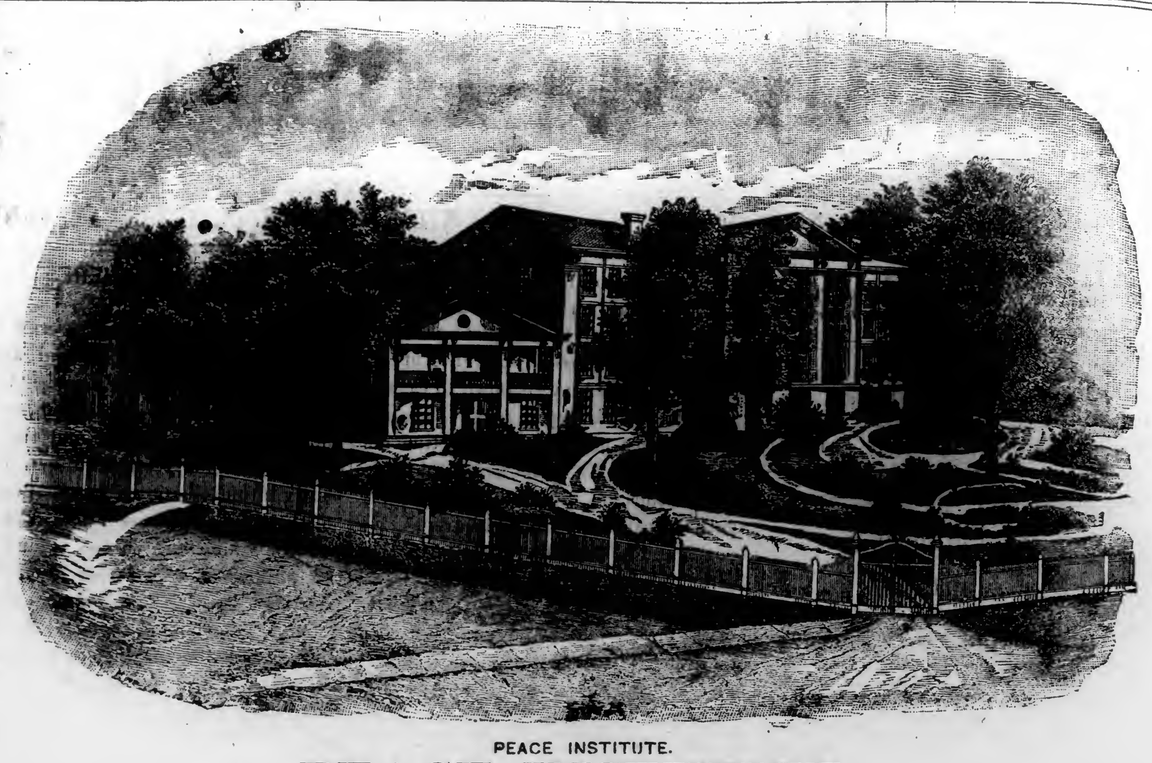
The name of Craighead, however, is linked with other names. He left two sons and several daughters, one son Thomas, licensed in 1778, an eloquent preacher and warm hearted man, who ultimately removed to Tennessee. His third daughter Rachel, was married to the Rev. David Caldwell, of Guilford county, whose fame as a scholar, and teacher and patriot, is too deeply engraved in the early history of this country and the Presbyterian Church in Central North Carolina to be forgotten. But I need not enumerate to any well read North Carolinian, the names of the descendants of Alexander Craighead or of Dr. David Caldwell. That man must be ignorant and to be pitied who does not know, and venerate the memory and thank God for the lives of such men, as Alexander Craighead and David Caldwell.

It was well for the Synod of North Carolina to accept "reverently" as well as "thankfully" the "gavel" so associated with the grave of such a pioneer and patriot and minister of the gospel as Alexander Craighead. It came from the grave of the first minister of that noble section of our State, three miles north of Charlotte, says Dr. Foote—"the present place of worship of part of the oldest Presbyterian congregation in the upper country, in some measure the Parent of the seven congregations that formed the Convention in Charlotte, in 1775.

J. HENRY SMITH.

Greensboro, Dec. 20th, 1893.

BENEFITS TO BE EXPECTED FROM THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.



[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

When the Jews are restored to their own land, and have re-established their own government, we suppose they will re-enact the civil code of this great lawgiver Moses. And then we may hope to see a Hebrew State in union with a Christian Church. All the social problems which now vex the political world will then be solved. Henry George says truly that wherever there is a social problem there is a social wrong. At the present day, these problems are utterly unmanagable and unsolvable. But the wisdom of Moses may be expected to overcome them all. Henry George advocates the possession of the land by the government, and the renting of this land to the citizens. This system would make necessary a new body of office holders; and the vast body of officials, at an enormous expense, is already the great curse of our government. The Hebrew law made the land an unalienable property of every citizen. No office-holder rented to him; it came down to him from his ancestors and he had no power to sell it away from his children. "The land shall not be sold forever; for the land is mine" saith the Lord. The owner could lease his land for forty-nine years, and in case of debt, it could be claimed by the creditor for that length of time, but at the year of jubilee it was to return to his children. Thus no drunken, spendthrift father could utterly impoverish his children; they were protected by their heavenly guardian, and were never born beggars.

It would take a volume to describe all the benefits of this divine law. Each citizen, knowing that his land would remain in his family for all future generations, would naturally spare no expense in planting, enriching and beautifying his patrimony. He and his neighbors would have every inducement to have perfect roads, strong and beautiful bridges—and handsome and comfortable churches and school houses. This system would finally result in a finer and nobler civilization than any we have yet seen. Every citizen was compelled to own a citizen's share of his native soil, or relinquish all rights of citizenship. The poor deluded French revolutionists thought the title of "citizen" was noble enough for kings and princes to bear; and when they had utterly destroyed their government, they imagined they could construct a perfect government on the principles of their great infidel philosopher, Rousseau. How totally they failed, let a modern socialist Karl Marx describe. He says: "They endeavored to free labor, but only succeeded in subjecting the more completely under the yoke of capitalism; they aimed at setting at liberty all labor powers, and only riveted the chains of misery which held them bound; they wanted to release the bondman from the clod and deprived him of the soil on which he stood by buying up the land; they yearned for a happy condition of society and only created superfluity on one hand and dire want on the other; they desired to secure for merit its own honorable reward, and only made it the slave of wealth; they wanted to abolish all monopolies and placed in their stead the monster monopoly capital; they wanted to do away with all wars between nation and nation, and kindled the flames of civil war; they wanted to get rid of the State, and yet have multiplied its burdens; they wanted to make education the common property of all, and made it the privilege of the rich; they aimed at the greatest moral improvement of society, and only left it in a state of rotten immorality; they wanted in a word unbounded liberty, and have produced the meanest servitude." They were like children playing with the dangerous cogs and wheels of a powerful steam engine, which they could no more control than they could the element. Their example has been a warning to all succeeding generations. They had genius, learning, culture of every kind, and yet their failure to improve the condition of mankind was nothing but disaster and ruin.

What Rousseau and Voltaire and other philosophers of that day failed to accomplish, would all have been successfully achieved had they taken the civil laws of the Bible as their guide. They were right in wanting to improve their condition and had they adopted the right methods would have succeeded. The laws of Moses (or rather of God) made education the common property of all. "For the priests' lips kept knowledge and the people sought the law (all law necessary for human guidance) at their months." Their numerical relation to the people gave every citizen and every citizen's child education, medical attention, free churches and free courts of justice. Our Christian bishops and deacons could and should do the same for us. The Bible gives us every blessing civil and religious.

FROM GLORY UNTO GLORY.

"From glory unto glory." Thank God that even here
The starry words are shining out, our heavenward way to cheer!
That e'en among the shadows the conquering brightness glows,
As ever from the nearing light intenser radiance flows

"From glory unto glory." Shall the grand progression fall
When the darkling glass is shattered as we pass within the veil?
Shall the joyous song of "Onward" at once forever cease,
And the swelling music culminate in a monotone of peace?

Shall the fuller life be sundered at the portal of its bliss
From the prineiple of growth entwined with every nerve of this?
Shall the holy law of progress be hopelessly repealed,
And the moment of releasing see our sum of glory sealed?

"From glory unto glory" of loveliness and light,
Of music and of rapture, of power and of sight,
"From glory unto glory" of knowledge and of love,
Shall be the joy of progress waiting us above.

* * * * *

"From glory unto glory," with no limit and no veil,
With wings that cannot weary and hearts that cannot fail;
Within, without, no hindrance, no barrier as we soar,
And never interruption to the endless "More and more."

For infinite outpourings of Jehovah's love and grace,
And infinite unveilings of the brightness of His face.
And infinite unfoldings of the splendor of His will,
Meet the mightiest expansions of the finite spirit still.

EVILS OF TENEMENT-HOUSE LIFE.

BY JACOB A. RIIS.

Author of "How the Other Half Lives," Etc.

One summer's night, some years ago, a party of ladies and gentlemen drove to Police Headquarters in New York and demanded to see the Inspector. They were going slumming, they said, and wished a guide. A policeman was sent with them, for they were persons of influence, and they drove off for a tour—not of the dives but of the tenements. By slumming they understood viewing the poor as one goes to see a collection of strange and dangerous animals.

That cab became the forerunner of very many. It got to be the fashion to go slumming. Nothing is ever so bad that some good can not be made out in it. Some people with brains and hearts found their way down among the poor and learned to know them and their trials. Their sense of justice revolted against the exhibition and they protested angrily that they were as good as their alleged betters. "They are better," they said: "their moral sense is higher." Whereupon the sarcastic remark was made that the process of slumming should be reversed. It ought to begin on Fifth Avenue.

Now, this was, perhaps, no more than a fair return, and there was some truth in it. Certainly, the poor had not given the first offense. They are better in the sense that they come much closer to each other in human comparison and pity and helpfulness than life on the Avenue will let people do there. They come down to sound first principles, all the artificial ties of life are laid aside. They have "neighbors." And when that is said the all-redeeming virtue of tenement house life is pointed out. All its other influences make for evil. For the good that is in those who dwell in them they deserve all the more credit, because it has been maintained in spite of their environment. That is bad. That it has not corrupted them through and through; that one finds the little children there pretty much such material for the teacher to mould as children are everywhere, is the marvel that made their discoverers cry out as they did. It is a tremendous argument against the inherent badness of human nature and urgent warning to all who understand the rule and the value of the home in moulding the child.

For the chief and worst offense of the tenement is, that it is a home-destroyer. Many other charges may be brought against it and justly, but that is the head and front of its offending. For whatever destroys the homes of a people, destroys surely its morals, its character, and in the end the people itself. When Rome became a city of tenements—a city without homes—it fell. How should it be otherwise? The love of country is the love of home. We fight for our flag because it waves over our homes. Men do not love a country in the abstract, anyhow not to the fighting point. They love it because it is theirs. Homeless men have no such claim. Citizenship means nothing to them. Long ago it was observed that the great cities were sores on the body politic of the Republic. We know that that is truer to-day than then, and for the chief reason that with their growth their homeless men are increasing. More of their people every year live in barracks.

What are the causes that make the tenement the destroyer of homes! The crowds are one. The worst tenements are thoroughfares rather than houses, highways for a population in sight or reach of which no man would rear a "home." The door is always slamming, night and day. In the cellar tramps and toughs camp and occasionally set the house on fire. Almost every morning that explanation is advanced to account for a tenement house fire in the night just passed. "Privacy," said an eloquent preacher for the poor once, "in a tenement house is not much more possible than in an eastern caravansary, or in the steerage of an emigrant vessel." I don't know about the caravansary, but I have been in the steerage of an ocean steamer, and I should say not as much. There is some authority, some superintendence tending toward order and decency there. In the slum tenement there is none.

It is impossible to get out of the sight and sound of one's neighbors. And such sights, such sounds? The young see and hear them early and late. The case improves in degree only, not in kind, with the tenement. A locked door keeps out the tramp, but not the crowds. They are part of the place, a very important part; they make it pay. A certain proportion of them, always very much in evidence, serves to keep the connection with the saloon unbroken. If the saloon itself is not a part of the establishment, it is sure to be next door. What cheer the tenement lacks, the tenant soon find there. It is club, the base of political interest and action. What more natural than that rum politics should be the crop? The saloon is the gainer by the compact. Such training as it affords is applied early enough to take root. It is not of a kind to encourage the home-feeling.

The extortionate rents bear their own malignant hand in the attack upon the home. They bring in the crowds in the first place. The poor crowd to reduce rents, not because they do not like elbow-room as well as those who can better afford it. They send the mother to the shop and the child to the factory when it should be learning to read in school. And their labor reduces the wage-standard, thus increasing the need. The acquaintances that lead to marriage are formed in the shop or in the street. Wifehood and motherhood find the young girl without any training for her new duties. She has none of the qualities that go to make a home, or they are not developed in her. Waste and discomfort are the logical results. Half of our tenement families live at a rate that would beggar a Crœsus, yet that barely keeps themselves. There is no contradiction in this as any one knows who has much experience with our city poor. No thrift is the typical badge of tenement house life. The husband escapes to the saloon in search of the cheer his home fails to furnish. For half the drunkenness that disgraces the tenements, the ignorance of the wives is to blame. The boys and girls take to the street.

It is there they receive their real bringing up, such as it is. It was said once by the Superintendent of the House of Refuge, who for thirty years had tried to make good boys out of bad that it was essential to have the play of the children more carefully watched than their work. It is the utter impossibility of doing that which makes the street so dangerous. It is naturally the physical growth of the chiidren which the tenement stunts. The lack of privacy at home, the lack of HOME itself, together with the influence of the street that replaces it, are leaving a stamp upon the growing generation of our city, poor that is unmistakable. The teacher who has grown grey in the west-side "ragged school" notices a distinct descent in quality of the greater crowds since the tenement replaced the shanty, which, poor and patched were yet the homestead of the old squatters. The Superintendent of Police complains that the young thieves are smarter and more reckless than their predecessors, and that there are more of them. The philosopher on crime and punishment, Dr. William T. Harris, points out in the census that "the element that becomes criminal because of lack of individuality and self-respect that comes with it," is increasing, as are the tenements. As long as thirty years ago the secretary of the Prison Association of New York had identified this class with that growing one "whose homes had ceased to be sufficiently SEPARATE, decent and desirable to afford what we regarded as ordinary, wholesome influences of home and family." Justly so regarded. We have the testimony of Rabbis and other intelligent Jewish observers to the effect that the morality of their young people in the great hives on the eastside is not what it was. They are backsliding. To me that is a profoundly significant fact. The love of home is the sound kernel in the Jew that has brought them safe through the centuries of persecution and obloquy. He has escaped from these at last to have the dry-rot of the tenement sap his very vitals. It is not that he is losing his grip on the ancient faith, not the lordly returned from oppression to freedom—not these only or altogether. It is the tenement that is his bane. Against its physical corruption he has been proof so far; against its moral corruption not. It has for him no embodiment of the home ideal.

The home is the great developer of individuality and character. The tenement is the great destroyer of both. In the end it all comes down to character in the struggle with the temptations and evils that beset mankind. That is the great and final test of all. It is on that ground, above all other, that I arraign the tenement as a danger to society and an enemy of the State. I am aware that there are homes, even in tenements, that men and women live good and useful lives there, and that children grow up in them marvelously untouched by their corruption. But I maintain that these things are in spite of, not because of the tenement, and that its influence on our city populations constitutes a great and growing danger to our land and our liberties.

The Grace of Giving.

Religious benevolence, giving of our means for pious purposes, is one of the features of a Christian life. Shall we not say it is one of the tests of consecration? The apostle calls it a grace. The Form of Government of our church classes it among the ordinances of worship. The word of God calls us to it as truly as it calls us to prayer. This sense of duty has a rightful place in every Christian's conscience.

We are to recognize that He whose is the silver and the gold is the rightful proprietor of that which we call our own. The third servant in the parable, slothful and unprofitable though he was, yet acknowledged this truth when he said, as he gave up his one talent to his Lord, "There thou hast that is thine." If the Christian in his personality is not his own, but in his body and spirit is to glorify God, surely he cannot set up a claim of exemption for that extraneous substance which God has temporarily lodged in his hands.

Different phases of consecration have had their special emphasis of illustration at different times: Now, martyrdoms for the truth. Again, ascetic renunciation of the world: At another time the ordeal of Reformation throes amid universal error. We are not speaking amiss if we say that for this age the consecration of money is one of the very manifest calls of God upon his people. Formerly the Church was more restricted in its mission. The heathen world was closed. Methods of communication and international relations and treaties were not in the providential development we have them to-day. The Church was provincial and had only its local wants. And its work not then making large demands, God did not bestow such marked wealth upon his people. But it is otherwise now. To-day two orderings of providence come together. 1. Ability of the Church to give. 2. The myriad avenues for the gospel to enter—the doors of every heathen country open, the amazing development of home countries with means of access to every corner, the facility of contact and communication everywhere, the whole earth as it were having become one neighborhood. Put these two facts together, and what do they mean? The work, and the means wherewith to do it being thus contemporaneous in the providence of God, make plain the duty of the hour.

We fail to read the signs of the times, and to interpret God's providences and to realize our trusteeship before him if we forget that he calls for the instrumentality of the purse. Money in its line is a means to the world's evangelization as well as preaching or prayer. Like Cornelius we are to send up alms with our prayers. They are to go hand in hand before the Lord. What God has thus joined together let no Christian dare put asunder. It is very significant that in the Psalm depicting the future glory of Christ's kingdom, in the same verse in which we read, "Prayer shall be made for him continually," it is also said, "To him shall be given of the gold of Sheba." The Lord puts his work upon his people. To meet the demands he gives severally, as he wills, of means thereto; now five talents, now two and now it may be but one. This is a loan. For its administration he institutes the ordinance of stewardship. He does not call in the whole principal, but he looks for a certain proportional interest rate. Such duty is irrespective of the circumstance whether our money be much or little. In our day of activity and enterprise in the work of the kingdom this kind of devotement becomes more necessary, and the Christian's pocket-book will have to be one of the tests of his character.

As a motive to faithful giving we have ever the example of the Lord Jesus, the great donor who gave himself for us. What is our silver and gold beside the flow of redeeming blood! The subject thus connects with the cross of Calvary. In sight of that spectacle and under the tender influence of its suggestion we catch the pleading refrain:

"All this I did for thee
What hast thou done for me?"

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Correspondents will please note the following changes of address :

Rev. R. M. Latimer, from Clio, Ala., to Pleasant Ridge, Ala.

Rev. Uncas McClure, from O'Fallon, Mo., to Boonsboro, Ark,

Rev. S. B. Campbell, from Quanah, Texas, to Lancaster, Dallas county, Texas.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Accident to Rev. W. B. Tidball :—The following sad news is from Taylorsville correspondence of the Charlotte Observer under date 27th ult. We have heard nothing direct, but the Observer's correspondents are apt to be reliable :

Rev. W. B. Tidball, a Presbyterian minister living some eight or nine miles from here on a little mountain farm by himself, was badly and perhaps fatally burned yesterday evening. It seems that he was burning off some rubbish on his place and fell in the fire. When found he was almost unconscious. Friends are attending the unfortunate man and doing all in their power to relieve his sufferings. His wife, who lives in Madison, was wired for yesterday evening.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Galatia Church :—Seven new members were added to this church on Sunday, December 24th. The church is vacant for the present, and one of the neighboring pastors preached a week for the people. Large congregations attended—three additional elders were elected and the church starts the new year under favorable circumstances. X. X.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Dedication :—Tuesday, December 26th, was a great day for the children in Fayetteville. The cornerstone of the new Sunday-school building, was laid by the children's own hands, after appropriate addresses and ceremonies. Within the stone was placed a history of the church and a list containing the names of more than one hundred and fifty children who have contributed to the erection of the building. The first date on the stone is 1755—a year famous in history for the Lisbon earthquake, Braddock's defeat and the preaching of the first sermon in Fayetteville, which, of course, was addressed to a Presbyterian congregation. The historical philosopher may draw the lesson from the collocation of these words.

The last date 1893, a year when "the times were so hard that the church could not afford to be economical." And through the intervening years the mercies of the God of the Covenant have been abundantly bestowed and unto children's children. So we wrote on the stone in the Hebrew tongue, His name, "Jehovah." X. X.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. T. R. Sampson :—Having been called to Birmingham to attend a meeting of the ad interim committee on Foreign Missions appointed by the last General Assembly, has been obliged to cancel the appointments at Mt. Airy, Mocksville and Buffalo, on the 2d, 4th and 7th of January.

Acknowledgement :—The heart of many a pastor is made to beat with joy and gladness, because of tokens of esteem and affection received on Christmas occasions. None more so than the heart of the pastor of Matthews church, on reception of a handsome and valuable one, from the ladies of his charge, presented to him at the Christmas tree given the children of the Sabbath-school, Saturday night, Dec. 23d, 1893. He desires thus to express his thanks for and appreciation of the same.

Many were the little hearts made glad by presents received from off that Christmas tree. May each one of them be made doubly glad by receiving God's Christmas Gift in their hearts. PASTOR.

Mt. Gilead :—The congregations of Pee Dee, Sharon and Wadeville have always been very kind to their pastor. We very often receive nice candies, apples, oranges, canned fruits, jellies, nuts, hams, chickens and turkeys. We have not wanted turkey since Thanksgiving and judging from the number that are coming in from Christmas we shall not want any soon. Truly, God through the kindness of his people is feeding us "with the finest of the wheat and with honey out of the rock." May those members who have been so kind, realize the truth of the words of our Lord Jesus who said : "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

VIRGINIA.

Thompson Valley Church, Tazewell County :—Rev. Thomas Mowbray was installed pastor on 12th ult.

Bay View :—Seven united on profession recently. The congregation is very small, but will build a church at Cape Charles if help sufficient is forthcoming.

Nottoway :—Ten persons received since fall Presbytery—six on profession and four by letter.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Warm Springs :—At our fall communion we had the pleasure of welcoming six new members. Since our last meeting thirteen have been received. Rev. M. B. Lambdin was with us and his preaching was greatly enjoyed. Rev. Wm. T. Price also preached once and was gladly heard.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Lexington Presbytery :—At a called meeting in Lexington on the —— day of December, steps were taken to reorganize Ben Salem church. Another called meeting will be held in Staunton, Dec. 28th, at 3 p. m., for the purpose of dissolving the pastoral relations of Rev. F. L. McCue and Burnsville and Sutton churches and of dismissing him to the Presbytery of Greenbrier, if the way be clear.

Death of Rev. J. K. Spence :—This brother died at Goodwater on 20th ult., after an illness of nearly four months. He was fifty years of age and had been in the ministry thirteen years.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Central Church, Montgomery :—A large congregation thronged the handsome auditorium of the new Central Presbyterian church Dec. 17th, when the building was occupied for the first time. The sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. Neal L. Anderson, Rev. 3 : 8. "Behold I have set before an open door."

The dedication services have been postponed until the arrival of the organ which is being built especially for this church and is promised by Jan. 15th. Within the past two years one hundred and three members have been received ; a large per cent. of them came in on profession of faith.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. R. M. Latimer :—At a meeting of the Presbytery of South Alabama, held at Montgomery Dec. 21st, Rev. R. M. Latimer was dismissed at his own request to the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa. Mr. Latimer takes charge of the Pleasant Ridge church.

TEXAS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. S. B. Campbell :—Leaves the Texas Panhandle chiefly on account of the great falling off in the Sustentation Fund in connection with the failure of the crops for the past two years, and returns to his old charge at Lancaster.

LOUISIANA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Jackson :—Rev. M. B. Shaw writes, Dec. 25th : We are rejoiced to report that yesterday seven members were received into this church, Jackson, Louisiana. This makes seventeen additions since October and we are confident that more will follow. Praise God for His mercy and Grace.

KENTUCKY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Goshen, Louisville Presbytery :—On the evening of December 21st, 1893, we closed a very interesting meeting at our Goshen church. Brother Sullivan, of Christiansburg, was with us and preached eight very impressive sermons. The remark, "I like to hear that man preach," was not infrequently heard. He preached the old fashion gospel, holding up faithfully before the unbeliever the divine looking glass and showing him himself as a lost and helpless sinner, an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, a stranger from the covenants of promise, as having no hope and being without God in the world. He then in his own earnest, affectionate and inimitable way pointed the sinner to Jesus, by whose blood he is brought nigh to God and in whom believing he has everlasting life, and urged him to accept this Saviour at once as his only hope of salvation. Six persons confessed Christ, and all six united with our church. Three were baptized. One also joined by letter from the M. E. Church, South, making seven additions altogether.

We bless the Lord for sending us his faithful servant just when he did, and for all the rich blessings enjoyed through him.

PASTOR.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Stratton :—On 31st ult., Rev. Dr. J. B. Stratton preached his 50th annual sermon in the Presbyterian church, Natchez. The account as we find it in the Savannah News says : "Nearly every eye was wet with tears when he said that to-day's sermon was his valedictory, for within another year he would reach his four score, and in the very order of nature could not hope to celebrate another anniversary."

Dr. Stratton was born Dec. 24th, 1815, and was first a lawyer. He graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in class of 1840, was ordained by the Presbytery of Mississippi Dec. 31st, 1843, and has been pastor of the church at Natchez from that time to the present.

Presbytery of Tombeckbee :—Met in Meridian First Presbyterian church in called session. Rev. J. E. Jones was received into the Presbytery from Central Mississippi Presbytery and was installed pastor of the church where the session of Presbytery was held. He is a man of marked ability and will be welcome among us. Rev. J. W. Roseborough sought advice from Presbytery in regard to leaving his present work at Columbus and entering evangelistic work in Missouri. The Presbytery after considering the matter advised him to remain in Columbus. Candidate J. E. Lindsey was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry and will leave for the Congo in February. His examination and sermon were very gratifying proofs to Presbytery of his progress and of the thorough work done at Tuscaloosa Presbytery. Adjourned.

DOMESTIC.

The New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says : The Presbyterian Board of Home and Foreign Missions are to have a million-dollar building erected for their office use at Fifth avenue and Twentieth street. The plans are not yet completed, but the intention is to erect a handsome office building ten stories in height. The property on which it is proposed to build formerly belonged to Robert L. Stuart. It has a frontage of 192 feet on Twentieth street and 92 feet on Fifth avenue.

ON FUTURES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS.—In your issue of Dec. 21st, I find an article on "Futures," from your pen. May the Lord bless that article to the conversion of thousands of church members. Will you permit me to say a few words through your paper, on this subject ?

I believe that many do not see any difference between speculation in cotton, and dealing in futures. If you tell them there is danger of loss to the buyer of futures, they will tell you there is the same danger to the cotton speculator. If you tell them that the man who buys cotton futures is not buying the real stuff, they will tell you that they can demand the cotton and have it delivered.

But, Mr. Editor, we know that it is wrong and it is our duty to point out the sin in this diabolical practice. You call it gambling. What is gambling ? Gambling is hazarding money, or property, on the issue of a game of chance, or upon an event in which a person receives money for which he pays no equivalent, or loses without receiving any equivalent.

Now, the man who buys futures knows that he is either to gain without giving any equivalent, or to lose without receiving any equivalent. Let me see whether the cotton buyer is guilty of gambling. When he buys cotton he pays the seller an equivalent in money let the price be what it may. And when he sells he gives the purchaser an equivalent in cotton. He pays, and receives the market price. The buyer of futures, does neither. He buys months in advance at a price below what he hopes it will be worth. If it turns out favorably to him, he receives the difference without giving any equivalent. He has paid nothing for handling, storage and insurance, &c. If he loses, it is clear loss. Besides this he is aiding those who prey upon the industries of our land, and helping to bankrupt our government. I have to acknowledge that I do not know all about the ways of the gambler, but I have seen most horrible results from his legitimate (?) transactions. Now, if dealing in futures is gambling, many of our church members are gamblers. But I do not believe that they consider it gambling, else they would desist.

Is a gambling church-member a proper object of judicial process ? Yes. Of what crime is he guilty ? He is guilty of a violation of the Eighth Commandment. How has he violated this law ? By unjustly enriching himself to the detriment of others ; or, by a hazardous transaction impoverished himself, or diminished his means. Both of which are forbidden in the Eighth Commandment. Permit one word more : You seem to deplore the departure of this age of the world from the word of God. Let me tell you about a nice church member whom I knew. I could not convince him that dealing in futures was wrong. He was a prosperous man, but I never suspected him of dealing in futures. He wore a smiling face, and was liberal to church and objects of benevolence. But one day he lost nearly everything thing he had in futures. He borrowed money. Then lost $7,000. He never defended it any more. Then the cold sweat stood on his brow, and he could not sleep.

But enough for this time.

E. C. M. EXPLAINS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I fear that my dear brother Miller has some cause for supposing that I reflected too severely upon him in my article on the "Big Meeting." But I assure him that it had never occurred to me that "the past five years" just about covered the period of his pastorate in that church ; that I was very far from believing him to be responsible for any erroneous ideas prevailing there ; that he is about the last man I should charge with trying to "get up a revival" or using "artificial pressure" ; and that I was not accusing his and my old church of any fault but one which is well-nigh universal.

But, I was calling attention to a wrong idea of the protracted meeting that is working serious harm in all our churches ; and, to illustrate, I simply mentioned the facts of my one year's pastorate in that church. These facts were, that there was a lack of solicitude about conversions and professions of religion all through the eight months previous to the "meeting" ; that the church register showed that accessions to the membership were very rare except during and just after protracted meetings ; that inquiries during our meeting showed that the congregation had not, during the year, been praying and working for the immediate conversion of souls, but had evidently been waiting for the "meeting" as the one harvest time when the church was to be revived and increased ; and that when these results did not follow our meeting, the congregation became somewhat restless and showed some tendency to resort to a little artificial excitement.

Now for all this I blame neither any one former pastor nor that one church itself. But I repeat my protest, that something must be radically wrong when souls that are sinning and dying all the year round must wait for Summer time and a big meeting before professing their Saviour ; when a pastor cannot have the sweet consolation of leading month by month his sheep into the fold, but must wait for the call of some strange Shepherd ; and when the ripe fruits of our ministry cannot be gathered except by such a violent shaking of the branches as must bring tumbling down upon us the rotten and immature ones. CHRISTMAS AT THE "MANSE."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The above caption will, no doubt, be suitable for more articles than this one. Yet mention will be made in this only of the Hickory "Manse." The Christmas dinner was anticipated by the appearance of the "necessary Christmas turkey" many days in advance, the result of the forethought of a forecasting and provident elder. But it is hard for any one to outstrip a Scotchman ; and so it came to pass, that another one of these "annual necessities" appeared at the "Manse" with the compliments of a Scotch deacon.

Another, perhaps fearing his pastor might not be able to reach the church on Sabbath, provided him an assistant in the form of a beautiful cane. During the morning of Christmas day frequent visits to the front door were necessary, and each one was rewarded with some kind remembrance from the good people of the church, and of some upon whom the pastor has no pastoral claims. These gifts being collected were found to consist of cigars. silk handkerchiefs, gloves, &c.

While the pastor and his wife were quietly taking tea as the guests of a parishioner, a messenger came, saying, "Come home at once ; the house is full of company." On arriving it was found that quite a company of ladies had gathered, prepared to "pound" the pastor in first class style, and according to the most approved methods, except, fortunately, no "broomsticks" were brought into requisition. As soon as examination could be made, it was found that many packages of sugar, coffee, &c., remained to sweeten and stimulate for future usefulness. And now, Mr. Editor, as this pastor has received a "caning" from a robust and lusty Deacon, a "pounding" from many "willing" hands, and has passed safely through many "dinings" and "teaings," you will, doubtless, agree that his powers of endurance are certainly great. Let him, in closing, express the hope that the blessing of the "Giver of every good and perfect gift" may abide upon this people ; and that, at the last, the Master may say to each of them, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

PASTOR.

Called Meeting of Orange Presbytery.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Orange Presbytery met in Westminster church, Greensboro. December 28th.

The pastoral relations of Rev. J. E. Fogartie with Chapel Hill and New Hope churches were dissolved ; and he was dismissed to the Presbytery of South Carolina. The pastoral relation of Rev. H. T. Darnall with Durham church was dissolved, and he was dismissed to the Presbytery of Norfolk. These brethren were directed to declare their respective pastorates vacant.

A call was received from Greensboro First church for the services of Rev. E. W. Smith, as co-pastor of Rev. J. H. Smith, D. D. This call was accepted and the following commission was appointed for the installation : Rev. J. McL. Seabrook to preside, institute the pastoral relation, and charge the pastor ; and Rev. S. O. Hall to charge the people. The time for this service was left to be determined by the pastor elect and the officiating ministers.

A call from Leaksville church for the services of Rev. C. W. Robinson for one-fourth of his time was docketed. Rev. E. W. Smith was granted permission to supply the Asheboro church, at its request, one Sabbath in each month till the spring meeting of Presbytery. Presbytery granted the request of Lexington church for the services of Rev. D. M. McIver as stated supply for one year. Candidate S. M. Rankin was granted a letter of transfer to Presbytery of Fayetteville. Rev. E. C. Murray was elected stated clerk of Presbytery.

In view of the present needs of Presbyterial Home Missions, it was ordered that the January collections be appropriated to that cause.

The following ministers were appointed to visit vacant churches before spring meeting of Presbytery :

Hillsboro, Dr. J. H. Smith, W. R. Coppedge, and E. C. Murray ; Wentworth, S. O. Hall ; Bethesda, D. I. Craig ; Little River, J. L. Currie ; Fairfield, E. C. Murray ; Chapel Hill, Dr. J. H. Smith ; Worthville, R. E. C. Lawson ; New Hope, R. W. Culbertson and Dr. J. H. Smith.

WILMINGTON PRESBYTERY.

ASSEMBLY'S HOME MISSION.

Postal cards informing each church of its apportionment for this cause have been sent out, but my attention has just been called to the mistake (whether a slip of the pen or of the types I cannot now tell) of saying that the collection was for December. JANUARY was the month intended. This month has heretofore been given to Presbyterial Missions, but will for the future be given to the Assembly's Home Missions, and the collection for Presbyterial Missions will be taken in February.

PEYTON H. HOGE,
Chairman.

TO FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

Neither the minutes of the last meeting of the Presbytery as written by the Temporary Clerks and approved by the Presbytery, nor any paper that passed from the Temporary Clerks hands into mine, contained any allusion to an order which afterthought and the corroborative recollection of of brethren assures me was made. The order is not in the printed minutes because I had no warrant to put it there even if I had recalled it while I was preparing the copy for the printers. The printed minutes are correct throughout according to the copy furnished me. The order should be known and it is, according to my recollection, as follows : That a committee consisting of Rev. A. J. McKelway, Rev. D. D. McBryde, Rev. Rev. J. W. Johnston, L. Shaw, Esq., and Dr. J. W. McNeill be appointed to aid the Home Missions Committe in raising funds for Presbyterial Home Missions, especially in Johnston county.

P. R. LAW,
Stated Clerk.

Dcember 30th, 1893.

THE JANUARY COLLECTION.

The General Assembly asks that contributions be made in January for the General Assembly's Home Missions. The fund is to be used in supporting Home Missionaries and Christian schools and in the erection of church buildings in Florida, Arkansas, Texas, the Indian Territory and if the funds be sufficient in New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California.

There are not less than seventy members with their families now on the ground, anxiously asking "what support can the Assembly's Committee promise us for 1894 ?" In addition our Assembly ought to place not less than three additional evangelists in Florida, four in Arkansas, eight in Texas, and in New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California we now have no work at all. We ought to occupy that ground.

There is not one dollar in the Treasury and the Committee cannot promise anything to these missionaries until they hear from the January contribution.

The Committee asks for $60.000.

If the churches will contribute to this missionary work seven and one half per cent of the amounts they paid last year for support of pastors who ministered to their own spiritual welfare the $60,000 will be raised. Very weak churches are asked to give five per cent, churches of medium strength to give seven and one half per cent, and strong churches to give ten per cent of the amounts raised by them last year for pastor's salaries. This will average seven and one half per cent of those salaries, the Church over.

Will any single individual or any single congregation invest for Christ in this work as much as $1,000 ? If so, it will secure the services of one good evangelist for a whole year ?

Societies, Sabbath-schools and individuals are asked to contribute and the contribution will be placed to the credit of any church named in the letter of remittance.

Mark and Luke tells us, that Jesus, when on the earth sat over against the Treasury and beheld how the people cast money into the Treasury—many that were rich cast in much. A poor widow cast in a farthing—our Lord said that she had given more than they all, for the rich had given of their abundance, (excess,) while she had given all her living. Let your contribution be from your heart, to Christ, according to the ability He has given you. In that day in which we shall stand before Him, a day for many near at hand, He will reward abundantly for all that was done to Him—out of love.

Please be prompt. We must let those seventy or more missionaries know very soon, what they can depend on—and new, aggressive work should be begun at once.

Jesus sits over against this empty Treasury to-day and He will behold how His people contribute in January to the planting and upbuilding of His kingdom in the States and Territories named.

Respectfully,

J. N. CRAIG,
Secretary.

The Columbia Desk Calendar,

which is issued annually by the Pope Manufacturing Company, of Columbia Bicycle fame is out for 1894, much improved in appearance. It is a pad calendar of the same size and shape as those of previous years, having a leaf for each day, but its attractiveness has been heightened by the work of a clever artist, who has scattered a series of bright pen-drawings through its pages. It also contains, as usual, many appropriate and interesting contributions from people both bright and wise.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

January 14.—Adam's Sin and God's Grace.

Gen. iii. 1–15. Commit vss. 13–15.

Golden Text.—"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22.

Topic—Man is tempted and sins.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. On the connection and to get the point of view, read Genesis ii. 8–25, observing especially (1) God's bountiful provision for man's wants (vss. 9, 16); (2) Man's responsibility and competency (vss. 15, 19, 20); (3) the test of loyalty (vs. 17); (4) the seal of God's favor (vs. 9, "the tree of life"); (5) the "help-meet" found (vss. 21–25).

NOTE. The tree of knowledge of good and evil was not so called because by eating it they would become acquainted with the difference between the two; but because it was the visible symbol of God's authority, and by it they knew that obedience to His will was good and disobedience, evil. So the tree of life did not magically produce immortality, as some have wrongly inferred from Gen. iii. 22—that whole verse is biting irony—but an outward sacramental seal of God's favor so long as they remained holy. As there was only one tree prohibited they evidently had the right to eat of it before the Fall.

Second Step. Read over the lesson carefully to see what the passage before us says on these points:

(1) The Serpent's two temptations, vss. 1, 4, 5.
(2) The working of temptation, vs 6.
(3) The immediate consequences of sin in—
  (a.) Their shame before each other, vs. 7.
  (b.) Their shame before God, vs. 8.
  (c.) Mean excuses and accusations, vss. 10–13.
(4). The curse on the Serpent, vs. 14.
(5). The promise of a Deliverer, vs, 15.

Third Step. Write out a summary of the whole lesson, and then compare with the one below, correcting yours or improving ours as you see fit.

SUMMARY. The Serpent addressing the woman suggested that God had unnecessarily restricted them in their food, but the woman replied by quoting God's words in their true form. He then so perverted the name of the tree as to insinuate that the restriction was due to God's jealousy of their development under the magical influences of this tree. The temptation worked in her heart until she sinned, and induced her husband to sin with her. The wretched delusion was at once exposed when instead of finding themselves gods, they found themselves naked. Hearing God's voice they hid from His presence. Adam excused his hiding by his consciousness of his nakedness, thereby revealing that he had sinned. Accused of his sin he excused himself by accusing his wife, and God for giving her to him. The woman then accused the Serpent, whom God condemned to grovel at the feet of man, and in pronouncing the Serpent's curse gave the promise of a deliverer before pronouncing man's sentence.

Fourth Step. Note difficult words, etc., and study your helps for explanations:

Serpent (vs. 1). Satan in the form of a serpent, see Bible Reading below.

Eyes opened (vs. 7). Consciousness of sin.

Upon thy belly (vs.14.) Some have strangely imagined that the serpent had before this walked erect and scientific sceptics have made merry over it. The words are not addressed to the animal but to the fallen archangel, as though God said, "You have chosen the form of a serpent, that shall indicate your doom—to grovel in the dust and at last be trodden under foot."

Fifth Step. Take up principal topics and study them in the light of other passages of God's Word.

(1). The Serpent,—his personality, nature and doom.—Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2: 2 Cor. xi. 3, 14; John viii. 44; Rom. xvi. 20.
(2). The deceitfulness of sin.
  "Pleasant to the eyes."—Job. xxxi. 1; Prov. vi. 25; Matt. v. 28; Prov. xxiii. 31, 32; 1 John ii. 16.
  General.—Jas. i. 13–15; Prov. iv. 15; Heb. iii. 13.
  The only safeguard.—Prov. iv. 23; Ps. xxvii. 14.
(3). Man's state by the Fall.
  Alienated from God.—Eph. iv. 18.
  Corrupt.—2 Pet. i. 4.
  Helpless.—Rom. v. 6.
  Hopeless.—Eph. ii. 12.
  Condemned.—Rom. v. 18.
(4). The Wounded Deliverer.
  Gen. iv. 4; xxii. 8; Is. liii. 5; Zech. xiii. 7; John i. 29; Rev. v. 6.
  (It will be interesting to trace the promise of the "Seed of the woman," through Shem, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, David to one who was "blessed among women.")
(5). Our relations to Adam and Christ.
  Study carefully Rom. v. 12–21, and Golden Text.

Sixth Step. The practical lessons of this story are so plain and have been so brought out in the other steps as not to need separate treatment. The subtilty of the tempter, the deadly nature of sin, and the abounding grace of God are the leading lessons.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

First Step. All lesson papers put away and Bibles closed.

Second Step. Question on the Topic, Golden Text and connection.

Third Step. Draw out the story of the lesson from the class as described last week, until the story is fixed in their minds.

Fourth Step. Open Bibles (not Lesson Papers). Question on difficult points noted and ask for questions from the class. Do not magnify difficulties.

Fifth Step. Have a ten minute Bible Reading on those of the topics suited to your class. Do not be discouraged if they are slow in finding places, and do not find their places for them. Give out enough texts to go around—if there are so many on one topic, and when all have found their places call for the reading, bringing out in a word the point of each. Make your own list of texts and do not use those we give without looking out each one. Some may not be appropriate for your class.

Sixth Step. Clinch the teaching of the lesson by Catechism, Questions 12–20.

General. The danger and insidiousness of sin should be pressed upon the scholars more than the theological questions involved. A good text to leave in their minds is Matt. xxvi. 41 (1st clause.)

Prize Questions.

Quite a gratifying number of responses has been received for the first week. We hope to form a very pleasant acquaintance with these young people before the year is out. Others need not be discouraged from beginning because some have the start of them, but all should see the importance of starting early, as the difference of a single question would determine the prize. By the way, would it not be a good idea for the Sunday-school Agent in each Presbytery to get some one to offer a prize to the one who answers the largest number from that Presbytery. A whole State is rather large for just one prize.

We have been asked whether these answers must be found without any assistance. We expect every one who sends an answer to have searched it our for themselves, but a hint or suggestion to put one on the track of the discovery is all right. The object is to stimulate Bible study and the end will best be secured in this way, for otherwise scholars might get discouraged and not try at all.

It is not necessary to write out the question; only give the number. In giving a reference first give the name of the book, then the number of the chapter, followed by a period (.) or colon (:) and then the number of the verse, without writing out the words "chapter" and "verse."

Our friends who missed some answers will note that John i. 3 teaches that Christ made everything that was made, and Rev. x. 6 that God created all things, but they do not teach that all things were made out of nothing; and that Moses does not belong to the Patriarchal Period but marks the beginning of the Period of the Judges: and though he was not in the line of Christ's ancestry we could not speak of him as outside of the chosen family. Enoch is also incorrect. He was in the direct line of Christ's ancestry, and lived before the "Patriarchal Period" which begins with Abraham. One answer to Qu. 3 evidently misunderstood the question. We will not always discuss wrong answers, but we are anxious to start our young friends right.

We have received some answers from teachers. We will always be glad to examine answers from teachers and publish them when correct, but as the prize is not open to them they should always state that they are teachers.

The answers to the questions of Dec. 21, are as follows:

1. Heb. xi. 3; 2. Melchizedek; 3. Ex. iii. 6. (or 15, 16).

Correct answers were sent in by the following persons:

Jas. A. Whitsett, Greensboro, 1, 2, 3.
Willie Arrowood, Laurinburg, 1, 2, 3.
J. B. Gill, Statesville, 1, 2, 3.
Chas. E. McMillan, Wilmington, 1, 3.
Carrie E. Clayton, Caldwell Institute, 2, 3.
Katie Monroe, Whitehall, 1, 3.
Rebecca C. Graham, Keyser, 2, 3.
Bettie Overcash, Statesville, 1, 2, 3.
Annie M. Cromartie, Garland, 1, 2, 3.
James P. Sutherland, Laurinburg, 1, 2, 3.
Beatrice T. McEachern, Millprong, 1, 2, 3.
Isabel Robeson, Westbrook, 1, 2, 3.
Thos. Oliver Coppedge, Cedar Rock, 1.
Fannie Dickson, Gastonia, 2.
Duncan Darroch (Teacher) Paolia, 1, 2, 3.
Chas. Phillips Russell, Rockingham, 1, 2. 3.
Estelle McIver, Gulf, 1, 2, 3.
John McLean (Teacher), Red Springs, 1, 2, 3.
W. N. McLean, St. Paul's, 2, 3.

Answers to the questions given this week must be received not later than Monday, Jan. 15th, and mailed not later than Saturday, 13th. They should be addressed to Dr. Hoge, as stated at the head of the column.

7. In what places (not including genealogies) is Adam mentioned in the Old Testament outside of the Pentateuch? (Notice margin and Revised Version.)

8. After we see the cherubim at the gate of Eden where do we next find them?

6. (a) Where do you find a description of the cherubim in the Old Testament? (b) Where in the New?

Teachers' Exchange.

HOW OUR TEACHERS CAN HELP US:

1. By letting us know what they want in the preparation of the lesson. We think we are guiding them into the best system of study, but we will be glad to modify our plan in any way that will make it more helpful. We hope none of the teachers were discouraged by our "First Step" last week. To read "the whole of Genesis" would have been an admirable thing to do; but we wrote "the whole of Gen. i."

2. By contributing your experience for us to use as we have opportunity for the benefit of others.

3. To aid in extending the circulation of the paper. We have not a dollar of pecuniary interest in the paper, but we want our work to tell for God as much as possible If you can help us to reach twice as many teachers you will double the usefulness of our work.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Grip has taken hold on many of the people of Greensboro. In the family of our good friend W. S. Moore there are five cases.

Greenville Reflector: Register of Deeds Harding tells us that there has been a decrease of 20 per cent. per year for the last two years, in the number of mortgages given in Pitt county. This speaks well for the condition of the county.

Chatham Record: We regret to hear that Mr. Eli Phillips, of Bear Ceeek township, accidentally killed himself one day last week. It is satd that he was driving a cow out of his lot and punching her with a gun, which he had in his hand. She whirled around and struck the gun in such a manner as to make it shoot off, and the load went into his body.

Henderson Ledger: "As an evidence of better and more prosperous times, the receipts in the register of deeds' office have fallen off about one-half. There are also more cancellations of mortgages and deeds than for many years past. It is indeed gratifying to learn that the industrious farmers of our county are becoming more independent of the ruinous mortgage system."

Lumberton Robesonian: Mr. C. Allen, an aged invalid residing on White Oak, in Howellsville township, about ten miles from Lumberton, was burned to death at his house last Friday. Mr. Allen, who is eighty years old, has been a paralytic, unable to walk, for seven or eight years. He lived alone and on the day above named, he was burned to death; it is not known, of course, whether he or the house was first ignited, but he was found a few rods from the house with all his clothes burned off just he death relieved his sufferings.

DOMESTIC.

A Chicago man having received news that his child was dying in New Orleans chartered a train from the Illinois Central railroad to go thither. He and his wife were carried at the rate of 1,000 miles in 1,000 minutes and it cost him about $1,000.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has decided, an appeal from a lower court, that in spite of licensure designating location a saloon keeper is responsible for any damage to property arising from contiguity of his business thereto.

The New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes to that paper: There is a barroom here much frequented by politicians, which since 1878 has made it a practice to distribute the proceeds of the sales on December 24 among the employers of its two places. The sum thus apportioned this year was $15.448. To the credit of our reputation for temperance this is a falling off from the total of the last two years. In 1892 the amount was $17,271; in 1891 it was $15,941. The record of the previous years was as follows: 1890, $13,941; 1889, $13,301; 1888, $11,832; 1887, $11,038; 1886, $10,820; 1885, $8,796; 1884, $8,276; 1883, $7,406 1882, $5,850; 1881, $5,163; 1880, $3,583; 1879, $2,562; 1878, $1,183. Moralists will find a fruitful theme in this bill for drinks and cigars in one New York saloon for only one day in the year. It has some eight thousand and odd other rivals.

FOREIGN.

In Russia the weather is abnormally warm.

The prospect looks brighter in Bombay. That exchange will improve is now looked for since the effort to boom silver has collapsed.

The Spanish government continues to unearth and arrest with a view to punishment the anarchists who were concerned in throwing the bombs that recently caused such loss of life. Three more have been arrested.

Anti-tax riots are occuring near Palermo in Italy. A mob in Valguarnera in an attempt to arrest a socialist were repulsed, but they afterward set fire to the town hall, the post-office, the magistrate's office, the residence of the mayor, and the police commission and several other citizens All are badly damaged or destroyed.

DIED.

Mrs. ELIZA WARD MORTON, was born in Jacksonville, N. C., January 22d, 1869, and departed this life in Wilmington, N. C., Saturday, December 30th, 1893. Just as her husband State Senator George L. Morton was about to enter upon the new office of Postmaster this sorrow came upon him and is a cloud over the whole community. Two little girls, one an infant, are left motherless. Mrs. Morton was a consistent member of St. Andrews Presbyterian church and was buried from that church, December 31st, 1893.

SAY SOES.

Who would dare venture on the journey of life if compelled to begin at the end?

The promptness with which Ayer's Cherry Pectoral stops a hacking cough and induces refreshing sleep is something marvelous. It never fails to give instant relief, even in the worst cases of throat and lung trouble, and is the best remedy for whooping cough.

Rapid growth of the finger nails is considered to indicate good health.

No Quarter

will do you as much good as the one that buys Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. This is what you get with them: An absolute and permanent cure for Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick and Billious Headaches, and all derangements of the liver, stomach, and bowels. Not just temporary relief, and then a worse condition afterward—but help that lasts.

Don't haw, and blow, and spit, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and be cured. 50 cents; of druggists.

A species of acacia, which grows very abundantly in Nubia and the Soudan, is also called the "whistling tree" by the natives. Its shoots are frequently, by the agency of the larvae of insects, distorted in shape and swollen into a globular bladder from 1 to 2 inches in diameter. After the insect has emerged from a circular hole in the side of this swelling, the opening, played upon by the wind, becomes a musical instrument nearly equal in sound to a sweet toned flute.

The prudent and provident mother makes it a rule to keep Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in the house. She has tried it before and she well knows that when her little ones have croup it will surely cure them.

Dr. Deems' scheme of life:

"The world is wide
In time and tide
And—God is guide;
Then, do not hury.

"That man is blest
Who does his best
And—leaves the rest;
Then, do not worry.

MARY'S MEMORIAL.

"Let her alone." And at the Master's word
The stern rebuke is hushed. The while the air
Is heavy-laden with a perfume rare,
As Mary pours her gift upon her Lord.

"Let her alone." "Her costly offering,
With love and sacrifice so richly fraught—
A goodly work on me, her Lord, hath wrought.
Her royal gift doth honor to her King."

"Let her alone." "What she hath done this day,
While ages roll shall unforgotten be.
Where'er the Gospel's preached from sea to sea,
It shall be a memorial for aye."

O blessed words of comfort! Understood
So well by tired Marys of to-day.
What joy if e'en of me the Master say:
"Let her alone." "She hath done what she could."

From Cleopatra down through the long now of Byzantine, Roman, French, English and German queens there are not a few distinguished as the possessors of rare feminine beauty. Though for the sake of Mary Stuart wars were waged and many a bold leader risked his life to deliver her from prison, though Katherine the Great, of Russia, was imposing and majestic, though Marie Antoinette was graceful beyond description, yet no queen of the past or present can bear comparison with Louise, of Prussia. Her beauty was the reflex of a really pious and devoted soul that holds communion with Heaven. When crown and country were lost, when the whole nation suffered misery and humiliation, Queen Louise as wife, as mother of her children and of her country, sympathized and endured as only such a woman could. Such suffering pierced the very core of her heart and was the direct cause of her early death.

But Queen Louise still lives in the hearts of an ever-grateful nation. Her life and death aroused the statesmen and the soldier to avenge the wrongs which she and her country had suffered from the usurper.

Queen Louise lives not only in song and history, but in colors and in marble. Painting and sculpture are the common property of all nations; they appeal through the senses to the soul and are understood without any commentary.

The next representation of Queen Louise was painted by Kannegiesser, long after her death; she appears life-size, in royal attire and, crowned; but in vain we try to reproduce here that loveliness and grace so peculiarly her own. The artist, George Kannegiesser, was born in Mecklenburg in 1814. He was the court painter of the Duke of Mecklenburg, brother of Queen Louise, and he is especially known as a painter of historical subjects.

The picture that most appeals to our hearts is made by Karl Steffeck, famous for his horse and war scenes, and director of the Academy of Art in Konigsburg. He represents the queen in the time of her suffering, when the French possessed the whole country, and the royal family had to fly to its utmost frontiers. Here we see the queen in a plain white dress, at her hand two of her sons, boys of nine and ten years respectively. This canvas is noble in conception and execution. In these three figures we see whole episodes of the German history. This picture hangs in the Gallery of Konigsburg, the city of coronation of the Prussian kings.

But the familiar picture, photographs of which are sold in this country, was made in 1879 by Gustav Richter and bought by the Museum in Cologne. Whether we have seen the original painting or not, we are irresistibly drawn to this photograph. Richter, the happy man of the world, represented the queen in the happy moments of life, while she was still enjoying the pleasures of her station, and residing in one of her charming summer castles, in Potsdam. In this pointing she is going down the marble steps into the garden. Her face and figure are full of divine grace, every feature proving her right to be called "the Aphrodite on the throne."

But the best representations of Queen Louise are in marble, and it is from them that the painters drew their inspiration. The marble group of Queen Louise and her sister Frederica, in possession of the Prussian royal family, was made by Gottfried Schadow, when both these princesses had scarcely developed into womanhood.—Independent.

Things Useful.

How to Clean White India Rubber.—Take some lukewarm water and a clean piece of flannel. Wet the flannel, soap it with any good laundry soap, and with it rub the India rubber, which will speedily become as clean as new.

Oysters and Macaroni.—Put a layer of boiled macaroni in a deep dish and over this a thick layer of oysters; season with cayenne, salt and grated lemon rind; add a gill of cream to a quart dish, strew with crumbs, dot with butter and bake in a quick oven.

To Stop the Creaking,—It is very annoying, especially to an invalid, to have the bedstead creak with every movement as if protesting against being burdened. When this happens, take out the slats and wrap the ends of each in newspaper. There will be no more groaning and squeaking.

Baked Cauliflower.—First wash and then boil tender in salted water. After draining it transfer to a baking dish, pour around it about a pint of white sauce described below, dust it with fine crumbs and a little grated cheese, dot it with butter, and then bake fifteen minutes in a hot oven, until nicely browned. For the sauce, stir a heaping tablespoonful each of butter and flour over the fire until they bubble, gradually add a pint of boiling water, and season with salt and pepper.

Plum Charlotte.—Use fresh plums if in season; failing them, one quart of canned. Place the fruit in a pan on the back of the range to heat, and add sugar to make very sweet and rich. Cut four slices of light stale bread, trim off the crust, and soak in juice. Take a mold and put in some of the plums, then a slice of soaked bread, and so until all are used, pouring the remainder of the juice over all. Set in a cool place until thoroughly cold, usually the next day; turn from mold, and serve with cream.

LEAVES.

That's what Sick Headache does, when Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are taken. These tiny, sugar-coated, anti-bilious granules cure it completely. They're the smallest, the easiest to take, and the most natural remedy. No disturbance, no unpleasantness, no reaction afterward. One little Pellet at a dose regulates the whole system. Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Dizziness, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels are prevented, relieved, and permanently cured.

They're the cheapest pills you can buy at any price, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

Things that seem to help Catarrh may be doing harm. Poisonous, irritating snuffs and strong, caustic solutions only drive it from the head to the lungs. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures Catarrh. It's mild, soothing, cleansing, healing. Its proprietors promise $500 or a cure.

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER I.

The twilight of a cold November day had closed, and the shades of night were falling around a humble cottage, in a lonely glen, in the Highlands of Perthshire, when a poor couple who resided there, John Martin and his wife, sat down by the decaying embers of a turf fire, to consult together if they could devise any plan to raise enough money to pay their rent, which should be due at the rapidly approaching Martinmas term, for as yet they were almost totally unprovided with the means of doing so.

The causes of this deficiency were not far to seek; for the season throughout had been wet, cold, and backward, and John, who was but a poor cottar, was almost entirely dependant on the produce of a small piece of ground, which he rented along with his cottage, and on which he was in the habit of raising oats and potatoes. But this year his crops had almost entirely failed, and a good deal of sickness in his family had been the means of nearly exhausting what little money he had. The prospect of an early and severe winter, too,—for already a fall of snow covered the ground, and the frost was keen and biting,—increased his anxieties, as such a state of the weather seemed, for the present at least, to blight his hopes of obtaining employment in the fields.

John was a decent, industrious, sober man, and though piously disposed upon the whole, was rather of a desponding disposition; and now, as "things seemed," to use his own expression, "to have been going entirely against him of late," his spirits had sunk to the lowest pitch, and all the efforts of his wife to cheer and encourage him, by holding out brighter hopes for the future, proved unavailing. She was of an entirely different disposition from her husband, being not only piously inclined; but in truth and reality a servant of God, and a humble follower of Christ. She was a lineal descendant of one of those worthies, who, in the time of the persection under the second Charles, had "sealed their testimony" to the reality of the principles they professed with their blood; and she inherited a large portion of the noble spirit which had distinguished her ancestors, for her courage and hope, even in the most trying circumstances, never had been known to fail; and her trust in God, and reliance on His Allsufficient aid, in "times of trouble," were strong and enduring. And now, having put her three children to bed, and seen them fall asleep, that they might not interrupt the conversation between her husband and herself, she was trying to inspire him with confidence similar to her own, while she suggested any expedient likely to avail them in their present emergency. She could, however, think of nothing better than to propose an application to their landlord, to see if he would grant them a "a little time." To this plan John strongly objected; for though the proprietor of his cottage and ground was a great and wealthy nobleman—whose estates covered many miles of the surrounding county—whose forests abounded with deer and other game, his rivers with fish, and his pastures with cattle—who lived in great state and splendor, and "fared sumptuously every day"—yet there was about John Martin, a native pride, or perhaps, to speak more correctly, a strong sense of honor and integrity, which he shared in common with most of the Scottish peasantry, and which made him shrink from the thought of "owing any man anything," let his situation be ever so superior to his own, or his rank ever so high; so he told his wife that he would be reduced to the last extremity before he would bring himself to consent to make such an application.

"Well then, John," said Marion, after a moment's reflection, "since that is your determination, I see but one other thing we can do, and that is, to sell our cow, in order, if possible, to make out the necessary sum.

"What! sell poor crummie!*" exclaimed John, in a tone of mingled surprise and dismay; "and what then will our children do for milk? You know it is their chief dependenoe in the way of food; and besides, even if that were not the case, I'm sure it would break their hearts to part with her, she is such a favorite with them! No, Marion, you must try to think of something else, I can never consent to that."

"I know it will be hard on them, poor things! but they must learn to put up with greater hardships still, if it be God's will to appoint them; and if times mend with us, we can buy them what little milk they require. And I can think of nothing else, John. You know you would not borrow the money, even if you knew any person who could lend it; and as you will not ask delay of the duke, there is nothing for us that I can see but to part with the cow."

"It seems hard for us to part with our one cow, for the sake of a man who has so many of his own, and so much of this world's wealth besides," replied John, doubtfully; "and to think that when it is gone, we shall, in a manner, have little or nothing else to depend on."

"'Though the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation," said Marion, gravely. "Oh, John! remember, that though we should be deprived of all else, we have still our God; and ought we not to believe his own blessed promises? and to feel that, 'He who spared not his own Son, but freely gave him up to death for us," will surely not withhold any 'good thing' from those who love and trust him? I know it is hard to flesh and blood to submit to all that our God appoints for us; but ought we not to try? It was a good saying of an old divine, 'we ought to trust even when we cannot trace;' and if you will but try to do so, dear John, I am persuaded you will find, that, in spite of present appearances, God has much good in store for us yet."

Nurse Powell's Giant.

HOW HE INTRODUCED HIMSELF.

It was one night when Nurse Powell was putting the Wentworth children to bed, that a wonderful thing happened.

The Wentworths had been out in the country to spend Christmas. And it was so cold at Grandmamma's that Nurse said they all, from Bobbie down, must wear their all-wool flannels.

Lillie began to get ready for bed in her room, but she felt so tired she went in to Nurse Powell, the same as Winnie or Baby would.

"You don't 'pear to have a mite of strength," said Nurse, drawing her flannel vest up over her head.

"What's that?" said Lillie.

Nurse gave the sleeves an extra pull, and when the woolen garment fell away from Lillie's warm little arms some tiny sparks went flying along after it, with a soft crackling noise. They acted for all world like little starry fairies, who were trying to get a chance to rest their tiny feet on Lillie's arm.

"That's Electricity," said Nurse Powell, taking hold of the other sleeve, and giving it a quick little jerk.

"Hear it crackle?" she said, as another spark flew out. "Your little vest is just alive with it."

"Oh!" said Lillie, "is it the same kind of Electricity they have in the cars?"

"Yes," said Nurse Powell. "There isn't but one kind of Electricity, but it can be put to all sorts of use."

"You haven't told it right Nurse Powell," Robbie called from his room. "Wool is a conductor through which the electric current can work."

"Then I haven't got any Electricity in me, have I, Robbie," said Lillie, "the same as the street cars have when when the sparks flash out down underneath them?"

Of course a little girl like Lillie could not understand a grown-up science.

"I believe you have," said Robbie, who was wide awake always on the subject of Electricity. "And I believe everybody has, too. Electricity is a good deal more than most folks think it is."

"See here, now, Master Robbie," spoke up Nurse Powell, "you go off to sleep, and let Electricity alone for to-night. Time enough for you to talk on such a subject as that when you can't wake up the children."

"You tell me, then," whispered Lillie, for the baby commenced to stir, and Nurse said "Hush!" and began to sing softly:

"By-lo, swing low—swing low—low—low;
Baby is going to By-lo land, By-lo land,
And of babies he'll meet a gay little band,
All swinging low, low, low—By-lo.

Run right into your room, like a good girl," said Nurse, when she had finished her lullaby song, "and don't talk any more to-night.

"You mustn't ask me about Electricity," she said, as she tucked Lillie into her snug little bed. "Uncle Jim is the one to tell you about that. I know this much; like everything else in nature it is subject to law—the law of attraction and repulsion.

"Your brother Robbie declares that Electricity has just as much to do with the bubbles that we saw floating on the water last summer, when we went down the harbor on the big steamer, as it does when put to the use of running the street cars; but I don't know about that.

"Some cold day you rub Tabby's fur the wrong way, and see how the sparks will fly."

Nurse bent over to kiss Lillie goodnight.

"But you must remember, darling," she added, giving her cheeks a loving pat, "that you have to study into the doings of Electricity, and find out the way to put this power into use. That is what all the wires you see overhead, on the street car tracks, are doing. They are putting Electricity to use.

"Listen, dearie," said Nurse, giving her another good-night kiss—she had staid so long, it seemed to her that she must say good-night over again. "I know a story about a giant, and I'll tell it to you the next Children's Evening. He's introduced himself to-night."

"Nurse," said Robbie, "come here."

"I can tell you the name of that giant," he whispered, as Nurse went into his room. "It is Electricity."

"Sh!" said Nurse, putting up her forefinger. "You mustn't spoil the story by telling beforehand."—Greta Bryan, in Our Little Men and Women.

"Only the Scars Remain,"

Says HENRY HUDSON, of the James Smith Woolen Machinery Co., Philadelphia, Pa., who certifies as follows:

"Among the many testimonials which I see in regard to certain medicines performing cures, cleansing the blood, etc., none impress me more than my own case. Twenty years ago, at the age of 18 years, I had swellings come on my legs, which broke and became running sores. Our family physician could do me no good, and it was feared that the bones would be affected. At last, my good old to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took three bottles, the sores healed, and I have not been troubled since. Only the scars remain, and the memory of the past, to remind me of the good Ayer's Sarsaparilla has done me. I now weigh two hundred and twenty pounds, and am in the best of health. I have been on the road for the past twelve years, have noticed Ayer's Sarsaparilla advertised in all parts of the United States, and always take pleasure in telling what good it did for me."

Mother Urged Me

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 27th, 1893.

One of the most remarkable documents ever prepared has been presented to President Cleveland and Secretary Gresham. It is a memorial to the rulers of the world asking them to pledge themselves to the adoption of international arbitration. The memorial which has attached, in addition to the signatures of many prominent Americans, the autographs of the commissioners of the forty nations which participated in the World's Fair, reads as follows: "To the governors of the world: The undersigned, citizens of many countries, gathered at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, in the United States of America, recognizing the advantages accrueing to those nations which have pursued the policy of arbitrating international disputes, and desiring that like benefits may in the future be enjoyed by all nations, and deeming this a fitting opportunity, do hereby join in this memorial to all our various governments, praying that they will unitedly agree, by mutual treaties, to submit for settlement by arbitration all such international questions as shall fail of satisfactory solution by the ordinary peaceful negotiations. And for this the petitioners will ever pray. It is requested that a copy of this memorial shall be presented to each of the governments of the world." Both the President and Secretary Gresham assured Mr. Willam E. Blackstone, of Chicago, who had the honor of presenting the memorial on behalf of the World's Columbian Commission, of their sympathy with the sentiments expressed therein, and further that as soon as fac-similes of the memorial can be prepared they will be formally delivered to the rulers of every nation by representatives of the United States government. The moral effect of this memorial, officially approved by the government of the United States, cannot fail to be great. It is through such agencies that the hideous monster, will eventually be banished from the earth.

The crusade of the temperance people against the use of intoxicating liquors at New Year's receptions, while it has not banished liquor altogether upon those occasions, has gradually lessened the number of them who set it before their guests. The work is still being kept up in that line and in addition to personal appeals a public meeting of the W. C. T. U., adopted the following:

"Resolved, That we the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, deprecate the custom of offering wine or any other intoxicating liquor, either on the day on which we celebrate the birth of the Prince of Peace, or at New Year's receptions, and that we most earnestly and lovingly plead with our sisters, of whatever station in life, that they do not put this snare in the way of the fathers, brothers, husbands and sons of our city."

It is always interesting to hear a missionary relate his experiences among the far-away heathen, and it was doubly so to hear Mr. William H. Sheppard, a negro born in Virginia, who has spent four years in missionary work among the cannibalistic tribes of Central Africa. Mr. Sheppard who was introduced to his first Washington audience by Senator Morgan, of Alabama, has, in addition to his missionary work, made discoveries in Africa of sufficient importance to have caused him to be elected a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, of England. He gave vivid descriptions of the changes which the missionaries have brought about in the men who were only a few short years ago ferocious cannibals. After each address Mr. Sheppard distributed samples of African made cloth and exhibited a collection of knives and weapons also made by the natives of that country. He will return to Africa at the close of a short lecture tour in this country and resume missionary work.

There are fewer Christmas entertainments in Washington Sunday-schools this year than for a long time and very much less money has been spent upon those that have been given than has usually been devoted to this purpose. The reason is that the money has been devoted to relieving the distress existing among the unemployed people of the city. It is creditable to the children that they have in many Sunday-schools themselves suggested that no entertainment be given and that the money intended for that purpose be given to the poor.

The gamblers who are trying to establish daily horse-racing here thought that District Attorney Birney was not in earnest when he threatened them with arrest if they attempted to race again. They raced yesterday and true to his word the District Attorney had them arrested. The churches are taking action to show their appreciation of the efforts of the District Attorney to suppress this gambling scheme. At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Gurley Memorial church a resolution was adopted commending the action of the District Attorney and appealling to all Christians and moral people to aid him to maintain the law and banish this pernicious influence from our midst. The outcome is anxiously awaited by Washington people.

For Dyspepsia

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. B. B. Pettitt, Sherman, Texas, says; "I have used it in dyspepsia with great success. I think it is a fine remedy."

On our second page see the advertisement of Peace Institute, undoubtedly one of the best schools for girls in our country.

Dr. J. J. SUMMERELL: It is my wish to add my tribute to the memory of the good man, the faithful officer, the efficient physician whose name heads these lines. He has been for a long time ruling elder in the Presbyterian church at Salisbury and helped by his counsel, his example and his purse, to give that church its high stand among the churches of Synod. He was one of the best men it was ever my privilege to meet and carried out the Bible requirement of doing justly, loving mercy and walking humbly with his God.

It might pay you to write to them.

EBENEZER.

"Here I'll raise my Ebenezer, Hither by thy help I'm come."

These words of an old hymn have been the song of our hearts in many a weary day without any waiting to consider their historic origin and their spiritual meaning. On the battle field of Aphek, Israel had been defeated, the Philistines had slain many, "and the ark of GOD was taken." On this very battle field where they had suffered defeat, victory had returned to Israel, not by might nor by power. From the former defeat the ark of GOD had been carried to the temple of Dagon in Ashdod and then to Gath and Ekron, every where accompanied with a blight upon the idols of Philistia until the Philistines returned it with new kine on a new cart to Beth-shemesh. It was placed in the house of ABINADAB for twenty years. All this time Israel was in subjection and paid tribute to the Philistines. Only one man was on the LORD'S side. That man was SAMUEL the seer. Through all those years he had been true to his later words, "GOD forbid that I should sin against the LORD, in ceasing to pray for you; but I will teach you the good and the right way! Only fear the LORD and serve Him in truth with all your heart." He had prayed. He had taught the fear of the LORD. He had preached repentance until the people did repent and turn to GOD.

Thus the people were prepared to receive the blessing from the LORD. They had disastrous defeat at Aphek because they were sinners against GOD, full of self-trust and superstition. Now repentant, SAMUEL calls them to assemble just where they had been defeated. They came in such numbers that the Philistines think they mean to go to war and throw off the foreign yoke. That was an ultimate purpose of the prophet but his first desire was to have Israel renew their allegiance to GOD. This being done, they could meet the enemy—not by their hand or their bow, but by the might of the LORD of hosts. Thus were the people made ready and the prophet prayed. Instead of looking to arms and military tactics and drill and practice, they looked to GOD in prayer and the Philistines were discomfited and subdued and Israel had a great victory just where they had been defeated. There they set up this stone as a memorial and put on it this word Ebenezer, which means, "a stone of help;" and said, "Hitherto hath the LORD helped us."

If Israel had been victorious before, they would have said they had helped themselves. They would have gloried in their leaders and their men, in their arms and their fighting. They are to learn that victory belongeth unto the LORD and help cometh from the LORD which made heaven and earth. This is the key to many of our experiences in fighting against our personal sins and shortcomings. We have fought in our own strength. We have taken refuge and put hope in superstitions. We have said that our fathers were faithful and we have kept the family Bible on the centre tables. Nevertheless we have been unfaithful sometimes even to rebellion and witchcraft. And all this time we have hoped to conquer. That could not be until we would return to the LORD and trust only in Him. Then and then only can we conquer whether in the conflict for personal purity and prosperity, or in questions of public good or moral reforms or national honor and virtue. We have failed in our efforts to uphold a good cause and in our battles for the welfare of our fellow-man because we have not taken the LORD as our Leader and have not fought under Him.

Here is the only hope against the vile tyranny of the saloon curse and the inroads of free-loveism and the loose divorce laws and the violation of Sabbath laws. We are not to fight battles against these evils or for any great reform with the armament of legislation or the delusion of compromises, but with return unto the LORD and by His power. When the children of GOD return to Him in repentance and prayer; when they give up the social glass and moderate drinking and the occasional visits to barrooms; when they live according to the law of GOD in marriage, faithfulness and personal purity; when they refuse to disobey GOD'S laws of the Sabbath and of national fidelity the prayers of some SAMUEL will prevail and victory will be given by the help of the LORD.

When we are defeated and the enemy comes in like a flood whether in personal struggles against personal weakness or sin, or in the fight for moral reform, we are not to be discouraged and dismayed. It is time then to consider the moral and spiritual causes of our defeat not of superstition, but of faith. It is time to go back to the very field where we were defeated and to remember that neither the place nor the cause we represented gave occasion for defeat, but some lack of trust in GOD, some self-trust, some self-seeking, some sinful indulgence that we may heartily repent and trust in GOD.

When the victory comes where the defeat was before it is time to be thankful. It is time to tell GOD in our praise and renewed consecration how thankful we are that he has helped us. It is time to make some memorial before our fellow-men and to write upon some pillar of our joy, the glad and solemn thankfulness of our hearts and to call it our Ebenezer. If we have ability we may do this by building some church or chapel, or home, or infirmary. We may endow some charity or provide for some poor and worthy students. In some way we may make our pillar of memorial.

This may be a good thought for the year now nearly two weeks gone, to mark the goodness of GOD, and to acknowledge His help by placing some Ebenezer at every place of help. The poor may give a cup of cold water, or light up some street or dark alley, or sorrowful home with a smile; or smooth some pillow, or plant some seed of flower or truth, or place some penny for the perishing. It will be a true and lasting memorial though not of stone, but in the mind of GOD if not in the memory of those we help. Is it not time to be grateful when we have so many times the help of GOD? It is no excuse to plead that a stone to mark each mercy is needless and a way to do some good thing is not open. The world is not most in need of great deeds and a stone must finally fall away to dust as that first pillar has fallen. But a tear of sympathy, a sigh in prayer of the loving heart, a word, a look and any little kindness which any one can do will not perish, for the real memorial shall be a deed of kindness and of help, and the memory of it will not fade from some grateful heart and will be kept and nothing can blot it out forever, because it is written in the book of GOD.

THE PREVALENCE OF THE SUICIDAL mania is to be noted. The cause usually is business depression. Sometimes the honest debtor, oppressed with shame and mortification at trouble innocently brought upon others, resorts to this means of escape from mental torture. But cases of this kind do not occur so often as to warrant the conclusion that frequency of suicides betokens an elevated and proper moral sense. Usually the self-destroyer is one who has run a life of dissipation, or reckless extravagance—oftenest both—to a point from which it seems that there is not a step further to go. With no pleasure in the retrospect and no hope in the future, in despair, the wretched victim plunges to his doom.

HERE AND THERE.

TWENTY YEARS AGO HE WOULD have been called mad who would have ventured the prediction that in 1893 the United States government would refuse to allow transportation to lottery tickets or circulars, and that 1894 would open with the Louisiana Lottery expelled from the country and not a single lottery authorized by law in the entire land; yet such is the case, and it is matter of rejoicing.

SO FAR AS APPEARS THERE IS NOT A single State in the Union which will authorize the brutal prize fights. Public condemnation among moral men apparently is universal.

THE ABOVE FACT LEAD US TO BELIEVE that the next generation will see the liquor saloon as absolutely abolished as the prize fight or the lottery—and why not? One corner grocery in a large city does infinitely more harm to body and soul of its immediate victims, and to those related to or dependent upon them, than would a lottery establishment in every State in the Union, and causes more deaths and brings in more wretchedness than many scores of prize fights.

WHY THEN IS IT THAT CHRISTIANS, even, seem afraid to attack the saloon, and our church courts, which unsparingly denounce the lottery, suddenly become seized with overpowering scruples about getting away from pure ecclesiasticism when the suppression of the saloon is mentioned? The reason is not far to seek, nevertheless, the saloon is doomed. Such an engine of iniquity must inevitably yield in time to the moral forces directed against it.

"FOR THE PRESENT." THE CATHOLIC STANDARD after stating very positively that "Catholics never did and never will, approve the exclusion of religious teaching from the schools and other public institutions of a Christian country, goes on to say, "yet, being sensible people and the majority of their fellow-citizens not being yet convinced of the justice of the Catholic contention, they are content for the present to exercise their right of providing for their own children in their own way, and wish to live in peace with all mankind." It then calls a halt on this everlasting "so-called School Question." Cardinal GIBBONS also deprecates agitation at present. The times are not propitious; the plan is postponed, but the purpose is not abandoned.

WE ARE NOT AT ALL SORRY THAT the matter of "machine politics" is being discussed by the papers. We do not go so far as to say that every one who countenances dishonest methods, or means by which voters are defrauded of their just rights at the polls—or by which elections are carried as behooves a few known as "bosses," are personally dishonest. It is one of the anomalies of morals that men as to their own conduct infinitely above rascality, or dishonest dealing of any kind, will countenance and often even encourage methods that promise to insure partisan success. We are told that there are good men in North Carolina who avow they will not sanction machine methods by voting for men put forward by corrupt means, nor whom it is proposed to elect by fraud or force. We are glad to hear it. No party that resorts to such methods deserves to succeed, and eventual ruin to any party that depends upon such methods is as certain as anything future can be.

WE DO NOT INTEND IN EVERY ISSUE to call special attention to the good things we offer, but we must be pardoned for begging our readers not to overlook the rare poetic gem on our second page, and the article "Recent Educational Advances" by Dr. Wm. DEWITT HYDE. The article on 7th page "A Page from the Biography of a Tamandria" will be found specially interesting to children and even those above them.

SEVERAL HUNDRED PERSONS NOW owe subcription for the current year; some for the year past and may be others, and some hundreds will feel perhaps that any other time will do as well to pay as now. We beg a reconsideration. NOW, is the time, we beg you to consider, as the time to pay. Please do not delay payment.

IT SEEMS TO HAVE BECOME NECESSARY to explain that we do not by a new subscriber mean merely a change of address in the same family. We could have no conceivable object, in merely desiring to have an address changed from one person to another—though some of our friends seem to have thought so. The object in offering a reduced price to new subscribers for the first year is to induce people who do not take the paper to do so, the presumption being that any one who knows the paper knows it is worth its price—but some people do not know the paper, and so it is given them on trial. There is no injustice done to any one in this—none at all. A new subscription please remember is a paper going into a new family—a family not now taking the paper.

THANKS FOR THE WORDS OF APPRECIATION that we have been receiving at the forward move we are making, and better even than that, at the active efforts some of our ministers are making to put the paper in every family—recommending and urging from the pulpit and pushing the matter up by canvass or otherwise. We feel encouraged.

We find this going:

The Rockingham Rocket has made a new departure for North Carolina newspapers. It publishes the name of a subscriber who owes $7.32 for subscription and refuses to pay the bill, and says other names will be added from time to time unless the bills are paid.

It may not be a bad plan. Still, we would not care to disgrace one who could not pay his bill—and one who is able and refuses to pay would be too callous to realize his shame.

HOME MISSIONS IN MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY—AN EXPLANATION.

Presbytery's Committee met to-day. The financial condition of the work made the meeting a painful one. We owe some money now. More money will be needed speedily, and yet no collection in sight before June. The committee was forced to do something. We did the only thing which seemed possible, viz: We issued a request to the sessions to appropriate ten per cent to Assembly's and Synods work each, and instruct our treasurer to apply remainder to Presbytery's work. This request had reference simply to January and February collections. That the entire collections be sent to treasurer with above instructions. The matter will then be referred to stated meeting of Presbytery. We regretted this necessity exceedingly, but there was no help. We owe the money to our men—it is promised. If we had promised a subscription to a man in China and afterwards heard of greater need in Africa and could not make both, we would be forced to abide by our contract.

But our own work is both urgent and hopeful; as much so as in any part of our Church. Mecklenburg has twenty counties, in only three of which is there a church able to stand alone, without either aid or grouping; and only one county which has more than one such church. Surely we need our money, and the work is very hopeful.

It is the prayer of the Commitee that all of the sessions will accede to our request, and that a liberal collection will be sent to R. A. Dunn, Charlotte, N. C., from both months. There has not been a time since the war, when money was so needed; nor has there been a time when the work was more hopeful. Precisely the time which calls for personal self-denial.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by
Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

APPOINTMENTS.

Dec. 31st, with Rev. M. A Henderson, Jan. 2nd, Mt. Airy—4th, Mocksville. Jan. 7th, with Rev. J. M. Seabrook—21st, Third Creek—23rd, Milton—25th, Leakesville—28th, Wentworth.

Where are the Pauls and Silases?

An examination, last week, of the sources from which it has been usual to expect recruits, for the Foreign Mission work, revealed the facts that there is, at present, in eight only one lady, who is ready to enter upon the service. It is true there are other students, ladies and physicians, who may be ready, after several years. Meanwhile North Carolina must continue to occupy a low position, in the ranks with her sisters, in the number of her children engaged in this work, unless some other source of supply can be opened up.

We believe there is such a source, and we are convinced that it has been too long neglected, from which the Church may confidently expect to obtain vast valuable additions to her force. It has been the policy, or practice, of the Committee to appoint, almost exclusively, young men recently graduated, or even before graduation, from the Seminaries. Our manual calls especially for men of this class, and this seeming preference, or something else, has led most of our ministers to feel, on entering the pastorate, that the way to the foreign field was blocked, and so they have ceased to consider the question of their responsibility, or call, to it any further.

It is not impossible that this practice might be and should be slightly modified, and thus some evils, which have given trouble in the Church, be cured, many difficulties avoided, and not a few positive benefits secured.

The present practice sends out absolutely inexperienced men, often, to do the most difficult work. They have to organize and train churches and form Presbyteries, with no practical, and sometimes very little theoretical, knowledge of the workings of either. If we needed to cite any other than our own experience, we would call attention, simply, to the pathetic appeal from one of the missionaries, in a China station recently, "Pray for us for we are all young in this station." The same thing was heard again and again in Korea.

The present practice virtually appoints men on professional, or individual, recommendation of outside parties, and they are sent to the Presbyteries, with the appointment in the pockets, for Presbyterial confirmation.

Now if the courts would simply postpone action, for a while, and the candidates be expected to spend sometime in active work, at home, or, better still, if they should be selected from among those who have been in the ministry, for a year or two, it does seem that the following advantages would necessarily be secured.

Time would be given for the candidate to try his gifts, and know his own ability and his own tongue, which would save him some discouragement under most trying circumstances, in a foreign land and an unknown tongue. He would see something of the difficulties of the home work and not imagine that they were all in the foreign field. It is well for this idea to be got out of a man.

Then too he could become known to his co-presbyters, what is now almost impossible, and he would go recommended not by professors who, with all their ability, are often the very worst judges of what a man will do, but by those who know what he has done and can do.

In many cases also the congregations, ministered to, will assume the support of one who goes from among them. Certainly greater interest will be awakened. No lessons are so impressive as these. All, who have experience in this matter, will be able to testify to this. Some slight changes, along this line will produce good results.

Men tried and known, Pauls and Silases in this sense, are more valuable than John Marks in undertaking such difficult enterprises. There are difficulties in the way in carrying out such a policy, but they are not greater than those now encountered.

We may consider some of these hereafter, but we would say in closing that Carey was 32, Morrison 25, Judson 25, Livingstone 27 when they went to the field—and our own Lane and Boyles were men of maturer years—and experience.

Let us think on these things.

ANSWERED AT LAST.

"I WONDER WHY!"

It was the burden of a woman's thought.
Sometimes she breathed it with a dreamy sigh,
Anon she smiling said, "I wonder why!"
As if a heavenly trance her spirit caught.
Then might the needle slip
Unheeded through her fingers; on her lip
Fluttered the fragments of a blissful prayer,
And had a beauteous angel left the skies,
And poured his songs upon the quivering air,
He scarce had brought more rapture to her eyes.

For years ago
One summer dawn her startled feet had trod
Some steps adown that vale which all below
Must come to journey!—happy those who know
That it will lead them to the light of God.
Could she be dying thus?
Death always seems for others, not for us;
And yet what meant that pressure at her heart,
This surge that swept her brain, this flickering breath;
What made all sights and sounds so far depart,
This awe that was not fear? It must be—Death!

And then no more
She suffered. Her sensations were the same,
But oh, so changed the character they bore.
She ceased her struggles to regain Life's shore;
The goal before her knew another name!
She yielded to the spell
Of those long waves that softly rose and fell,
How fierce against her spirit had they beat.
How roughly stunned her senses when she tried
To battle through them to the hither side!
But now they soothed her with a cadence sweet
As on she drifted with the outward tide.

And now she saw
The world, a round red ball, receding slow
Thro' spaces vast; an ever-deepening awe
Transfused her being, seemed her soul to draw
To heights undreamt of, bathed in roseate glow.
Yet vaguely had she heard
The stir about her form, each cautious word
Breathed by the doctors; past and future. met
In shifting scenes her sightless eyes before.
No homely household care did she forget;
But all to her seemed less than waves that fret
In farewell whispers on a far-off shore.

Each in its cot,
Where her own hands had folded them last night,
The children slumbered; for their orphaned lot
She had no tears, for He who faileth not
Would be their comfort. From that glowing height
Things looked so different; faith had changed to sight.
And in her heart she said
As if in truth she were already dead,
"Husband and mother, if ye could have known
Who is it sits beside me, holds my hand!
Think not that I am dying here alone,
For One has left the skies, His child to own,
To guide my footsteps to the Better Land!"

She did not hear
His voice, nor did she see that form divine,
She only felt His gracious presence near.
That hand clasp, close and tender, banished fear.
She whispered "I am His, and He is mine."
Of Heaven she had no dream;
She heard no melody, nor caught the gleam
Of angel-wings; indeed she did not think
Of Heaven at all, though lingering on the brink
Of things invisible, for Christ was there,
And by His side all other thoughts must sink.
Christ with her! and her soul no more could bear.

And yet the gate
Of Heaven did not ope to let her in!
Not then for her that blessed, perfect state.
Back, back to earth she came to work and wait,
To wage new warfare with her heart of sin.
And thus "I wonder why"
Became the burden of her spirit's cry.
"Why did He grant that hour of ecstasy?
Why did my Saviour flood me with His grace
If I must wait these years to be Among the ransomed, see His blessed face?"

It chanced one day
Upon her musings fell a silvery voice.
Beneath her upper window, wild with play,
Gamboled her little one; the breath of May,
The birds, the sunshine made his heart rejoice,
His face was full of bliss.
"Perhaps," she thought, "my baby does not miss
Down there among the flowers, my smile and kiss.
I long to test him, banish love's alarms"
She leaned without;—"So happy, little child,
That mother is forgotten?" And she smiled.
Then what fond looks met hers! what straining arms!
How had the golden morning lost its charms!

"Oh! let me go
Up there to you," he shouted, "I can climb
The long, long stairs myself!" A wistful glow
O'erspread his features, but she answered "No!
Wait till I come for you;—'tis almost time."
He turned in sweet content,
But ever upwards happy glances sent.
He could not see her, but he knew her nigh.
Gentler his play, for love his heart had filled,
"I'm going up to mother, by and by"
He murmured soft. And she—her questions stilled,
Read the sweet parable with tearful eye,
Looked up in trust, and ceased to wonder why.

RECENT EDUCATIONAL ADVANCES.

BY WILLIAM DE WITT HYDE, LL. D.,

President of Bowdoin College.

Maarten Maartens relates that there was once a man, a satirist. At length his friends grew weary of his incessant criticism and satire, and they slew him; and the friends of the dead man gathered around the corpse. "This man treated the whole round world as a foot-ball," they said indignantly, "and he kicked it." The dead man opened one eye. "But always toward the goal," he said.

The science of pedagogy has been criticising and kicking our educational system most unmercifully of late, and doubtless the friends of education are growing weary of this perpetual onslaught. In justification of it all, however pedagogy can say that these many and rapid changes have not been blind or purposeless or wanton. They have all been made with a definite end in view.

What then is the end at which education aims? Is it to enable boys and girls to earn a living? Is it to train citizens who shall be able to cast an intelligent vote? These are some of the special ends which education includes But the comprehensive end of education is much broader than any or all these special purposes.

The end of education is to make one at home in the world in which he lives, and friends with all that it contains. The forms of natural objects, the laws of life in plant and animal, the principles of mathematics and physics, the languages which nations speak, and the literature in which they have expressed their sorrows and joys, their hopes and fears, their achievements and their inspirations, the laws of economics, the institutions of society, the insights of philosophy, the ideals of ethics and religion—all these things are man's rightful heritage; and it is the aim of education to put man in possession of this rich inheritance.

Any education that is worthy of the name of course contributes to this end. The district school of a former generation, with its reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, spelling, and grammar, with its memoritor methods, and its perpetual beginning at the same place and covering the same ground term after term, laid a solid foundation for education, if it did not carry the superstructure very high.

Until recently our graded schools have been merely an amplification and elaboration of the district school, confining themselves to the same subjects, the same methods, and the same monotonous dwelling upon the rudiments of education. The high schools were grammar schools in which higher branches were taught by the methods which had prevailed in the lower grades; and the college was a higher grade of high school, in which Plato and Euripides, Tacitus and Horace were read in much the same way in which Xenophen and Cæsar had been read in the preparatory school, and where science, history, and philosophy were memorized from the text-book at the rate of so many pages a day.

Recent advances in education have brought us nearer to what we have defined as the goal of education in three ways: by making the range of studies broader; by making the methods of study and instruction more rational; and by making classification of students more flexible.

First, the range of studies have been broadened. By the introduction of kindergarten methods the child is enabled to begin the study of form at the age of four or five, instead of waiting until he is fourteen or fifteen and able to master the technicalities of geometry; to begin to count and add and substract actual things long before he can comprehend that arithmetic is the science of number; to identify pictures and objects by words long before he has heard such a formidable word as alphabet; to pile up mountains, scoop out valleys, and set out forests, long before he could deal in the old way with geography as the science of the description of the earth's surface.

The scholar in the primary school can make collections of natural objects and watch the habits of plants and animals years before the old curriculum would permit the study of natural history. The grammar school is beginning to introduce algebra and geometry at a time when the student will take an eager interest in them, in place of the wearisome and profitless harping upon the dry and juiceless rules of commercial arithmetic, and to offer the fresh and enthusiastic study of a new language in place of the monotonous drudgery of analyzing and parsing the familiar words and phrases of our mother tongue.

No less than thirty subjects are taught in our high schools: English history, civil government, French, German, Latin, Greek, arithmetic, algebra, plain geometry, solid geometry, trigonometry, analytic geometry, physical geography, geology, botany, zoology, physiology, physics, chemistry, astronomy, physchology, moral philosophy, international law, political economy, science of education, music, drawing, stenography, book-keeping.

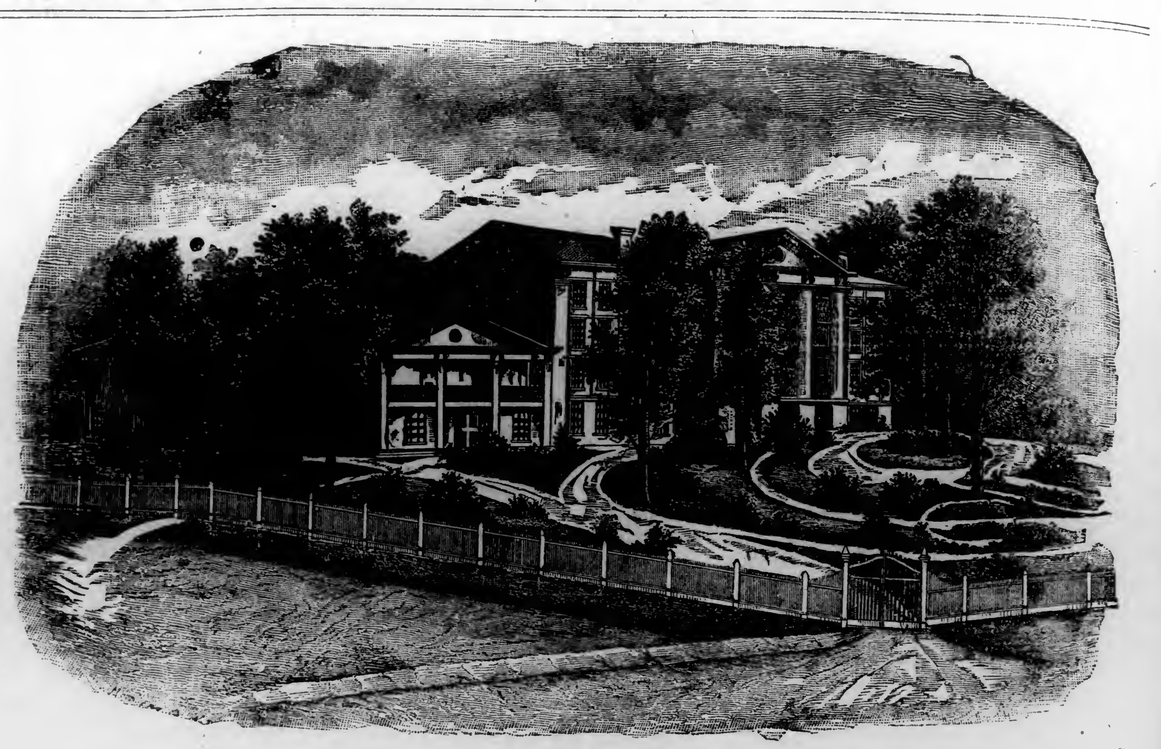
Of course no one school offers all these courses; and in schools where a large proportion of these thirty subjects are offered they are placed in different courses, classical, business and English, of which a pupil can take but one.

The range of studies in the modern high school is as broad as that of the college of fifty years ago; although the particular branches are not carried as far.

In order to keep pace with this advance in the secondary schools the colleges have been compelled to expand their course of study, and in place of general outlines in a few leading departments of study, they are compelled to provide special equipment for experiment and research in a great variety of lines. There is scarcely a college in New England that has not built costly and elaborate scientific laboratories within the past ten years; and there is not one that is not making strenuous efforts to multiply tenfold the available resources of its library.

In the university this broadening tendency reaches its consummation, and a department which in a college might be represented by a single professor giving two or three courses, is represented in the university by half a dozen professors and instructors, affording a score of courses.

Second, the methods of study and instruction are becoming more rational. The time has gone by when a man can assign so many pages in a text book, and call up a class to repeat the contents of those pages and at the same time call himself a teacher. The business of the teacher is no longer to see that the scholar gets the lesson out of the book, but to see that whether with or without a book the scholar gets a clear, strong, intelligent grasp of the subject of which the book treats. Actual weighing and measuring of actual things by actual scales and measures; actual handling of the things described; actual excursions to the quarry and the mine; actual dissection of the clam or frog; actual consultation of original documents; genuine effort to think out the problem in philosophy; written reproduction of things seen and felt and enjoyed in literature and life; these are marks of the good teaching of to-day. The text book is the guide to experiment and the inspiration to research; not as formerly the last word upon the subject the pupil was expected to hear.



With wiser methods of study and instruction are coming saner tests of attainment. Less stress is placed on memory and more on power. In actual life the practical test of efficiency for the scholar is not how much information can you repeat by rote without looking at your book, but it is What problems can you solve, what presentation of a case can you make with all your books and tools before you. We are coming to see that the truest test in school is the same as the true test in life And when this principle is fully recognized we shall no more expect a scholar to be able to dump upon an examination paper all that he has learned during a term, than we shall expect him to disgorge in crude form all the food that he has eaten during the same length of time. Not retention merely, but assimilation; not capacity to hold but power to use, is the test of the worth of a course of study: and the examination should be so framed as to test power to utilize the results of training, rather than the glibness with which crammed information can be written out or repeated.

Third, classification of students has become more flexible. Instead of a cast-iron course in which everybody must take the same subjects in the same order and in the same time, we are introducing in the lower grades more frequent promotions, in order that the dull scholars may not be made superficial in the effort to keep up with the brighter ones; and that the brighter ones may not be made stupid by the necessity of going as slowly as the duller ones.

For there is a vast difference in the ease and rapidity with which scholars learn. This is due partly to heredity, partly to home advantages, partly to temperament. It is a fact that children differ in these respects just as it is a fact that they differ in the strength of their muscles, the size of their feet, the color of their hair. And there is no more reason to be ashamed of the difference in the one case than in the others. Of all the foolish manifestations of vanity, the most foolish is the eagerness of some parents to have their children forward. It is high time for parents to recognize that some children are by nature quick to learn and some are slow; that forwardness or "smartness" in childhood is no indication whatever of thoroughness and depth in maturity; and that it is just as desirable and just as creditable for the boy who is slow by nature to go slowly at school, as it is for the boy who is quick by nature to advance rapidly at school.

In the high school and college this flexibility of classification shows itself in allowing students to choose the lines of study on which to concentrate their chief attention. The elective system is spreading through our colleges as fast as their funds will allow the increase of teaching force which this system makes necessary. As a result we work with rather than against the natural aptitudes of the individual students; we have their active co-operation in the direction of their studies; and if we do not always make the least of their weak points, we certainly do make the most of their strong points. We do not turn them out as nearly as possible alike. We do send forth those of scientific tendencies better prepared to take up the profession of medicine; those of literary tastes better trained for journalism and authorship; those of historical instincts with a broader foundation for law and politics: those of philosophical temper better prepared to be teachers and minters.

In these three ways, by broader courses, by wiser methods, by more flexible classification, we have made great strides within the last two decades in the direction, of making our scholars more intelligent members of this glorious universe in which we live; more enthusiastic supporters of its institutions; more capable servants of its order, and more appreciative friends, both of its Infinite Author, and of all their finite fellow creatures.

To Be And To Do.

Many years ago a little girl, who longed almost morbidly to be loved and who was spending her strength and in a measure wasting her life in the effort to make people love her, was emancipated from a cruel bondage by a single sentence in a Sabbath-school book: "It is not so much what you do as what you are that makes people love you." That sentence marked a turning-point in that young girl's life.

It takes many of us a long time and much sorrow to learn that it is not so much what we do as what we are that signifies in every relation. The founders of the Order of the King's Daughters recognized this fact when they took upon themselves that name and banded themselves together, not to do Christian work, but to seek a higher Christian character, deeper spirituality, a closer likeness to him in whose image they were made and whose children they were. That they shortly began to occupy themselves in various forms of Christian activity was what might have been expected, for life always manifests itself in activity. But the order of things is this: first life, then work; and not, as too many people religiously disposed seem to think it, first works, and through them life.

Of course the life comes first, as we see very clearly when we come to look into the matter. And the more arduous the work laid upon us, the greater necessity for a life that becomes ever higher and deeper and more like Christ. "I can do all things," said Paul. Yes indeed, for he had the secret of doing; "through Christ who strengtheneth me" is the secret. What can he not do to whom to live is Christ?—American Messenger.

THE SALOON IN POLITICS.

The N. O. Picayune in the following admits some things with regard to temperance measures which secular papers generally keep to themselves if they do not even go so far as to deny them. What it says about the "Saloon in Politics" is true to the very letter, and this is why the curse of intemperance devastates our land. Never before have we seen from a secular paper anything in any measure favorable to the South Carolina law. Of the working of that law we confess we know too little to hazard an opinion. Here is the Picayune's article:

The drinking saloon question has become one of the most important which is now interesting modern statesmen as well as philanthropists.

The drinking habit is too widely diffused throughout the civilized world to be stopped. Men claim the right everywhere to drink spirituous liquors at their will, and no legislation has ever attempted to prevent them. What has been tried by law is to regulate, and in some cases to prohibit, the sale of liquors, and in some instances this has been accomplished with considerable success. If the people are determined to enforce prohibitive and restraning laws they can do it, but it is too commonly the case that such laws are enacted to satisfy some uneasy conscience, when the lawmakers and the law executors and the masses of the people never intended that they should ever be enforced. The law is on the statute books, and that is all that was ever desired.

Prohibition has been tried in several States, and if not crowned with complete success, has at least driven the violators of the law to be extremely secret in their operations. Local option, a system by which the people of towns, counties and other municipalities elect to forbid the sale of liquors, exists in many localities in the South, and seems to exert a good influence; but, perhaps, the most remarkable attempt in recent times in this country to restrain the liquor traffic is the South Carolina plan. It is a system in which the State takes exclusive control of the liquor business, furnishing and selling all the beverages and crushing out all private dealers. As a means of taking the liquor traffic out of politics, the South Carolina plan merits careful attention. It has been in operation not more than a year, but it seems already, in spite of the powerful resistance made to it, to be giving good results. It does not stop the sale of liquors, but it destroys the barroom.

Unquestionably the very worst feature of the liquor traffic is its powerful political influence. The barroom, is a great factor in the politics of every large American city; but, perhaps, there is no city in the Union where it is so supremely powerful as in New Orleans. The power that controls the barrooms controls the city, and the man who can wield this power is simply supreme in New Orleans. The personality of such a man is nothing. It makes no difference what or who he is, the possession of such a power will make him politically invincible so long as the great masses of the people submit as they have, with the exception of a very few occasions, heretofore done.

As a consequence, every man who has any political aspirations sooner or later finds that he must pander to this powerful interest, and he must either retire or accept the situation.

Debt Paying.

It was Beau Brummel who exclaimed, on seeing a bill paid on presentation, "Good Heavens! what a useless waste of money!" The expression probably represents the true sentiment in regard to paying debts of certain classes of the community whose ingenuity is directed chiefly to getting into debt as largely, and to as many people as possible, and who seem to regard the situation with profound complacence when the unfortunate creditor can do nothing more than present his bill. The nonchalant ease with which such characters can decline making payment for the present, and the trivial importance which they evidently attach to pecuniary obligations, are enough to cause honest debtors to feel that it is an additional element of humilitation and disgrace in their unfortunate condition of real inability to pay their debts, that such characters are often considered as representing debtors as a class

And yet we have abundant reason to believe that to the great majority of American citizens debt is a stinging pain, and that to pay an honest obligation is really a genuine satisfaction. The men who have prided themselves that their word was as good as their bond, have, during our long period of financial prostration and distress, been sufferers to an extent which it would perhaps be reasonable and right to consider in these days when sympathy is apt to run entirely with the creditor class. The mental agony of those who have found themselves not only unable to pay present obligations but also without hope or possibility of ever being being able to retrieve their commercial honor, is attested by the long list of suicides, and of those whose mental powers have given way under the strain, sending them to end their days in insane asylums. It has been remarked by a close observer that the amount of mental torture undergone by business men between the hours of twelve and three o'clock in our large cities during the past six or seven months is enough to appall the hearts of all who reflect upon it. It will leave its impress upon future generations.

In contrast with this is the pleasure and satisfaction experienced and manifested by honest men in the prompt meeting of their obligations. This extends not only to the honoring of their commercial papar, but to the payment of current accounts and bills which are a part of the care of every business man. The manner in which these accounts are received and settled is an unfailing index of character. The collector who, on the first of the month according to custom, presents his bill, soon classifies his customers into those who receive and pay their bills cheerfully, and those who seem to regard the presentation of a bill as a sort of personal indignity and affront. For next in disagreeableness to the man who habitually avoids the payment of his accounts, is the man who acts as if the presentation of an account were an imputation on his honesty, or as if the account were of a suspicious character, or as if the person presenting it were a petitioner for charity. Often, too, a bill is paid with the air of bestowing a grudged charity rather than of discharging an honest debt. This is the sure sign of a mean, narrow, selfish spirit, and is an exhibition of the worst possible business manners. The man who pays a just obligation grudingly or ill-humoredly would in all probability not pay it at all, could he see it to be to his advantage to do so. Little things are after all the surest touch-stones of character, and among these the manner of paying debts is one of the most significant. The man who pays a debt with an air of cheerfulness that indicates his pleasure in meeting his obligations, may meet with misfortune and may be so hardly dealt with by circumstances as to be unable to pay; but the impression which such a man always leaves upon a community is, that whatever may be his misfortunes, he is at heart an honest man.—H. E. S., in Interior.

A Man of Prayer.

Bishop Janes lived in an atmosphere of prayer. While yet a very young preacher, when asked why he prayed so long in public services, his answer was, "Because I love to pray." The members of his family testify that not unfrequently when at home he would spend much of the night in devotion. He would write letter after letter until the usual bedtime approached, when the family would retire and leave him, with the understanding that he would quickly follow. When he did not come, his daughter, ever watchful of him, knowing how weary he was, would call to him, "Papa, do come; you need your rest." "Yes, my dear, directly." To each call the answer was, "Directly." And there, in the back parlor, with the lights turned low, as the small hours tripped in, might the man of God be found, alone, and wrestling with the Angel of the Covenant. His work was among men, but the roots of that activity penetrated to those depths whence flow the life-giving power and freshness of all saving work.—"Life of Bishop Jones," by Ridgway.

"Love."

Of course, first; that is ever the first fruit of the Spirit. Let me remind you that Plato made wisdom the fundamental excellence of the soul, the guarantee of social welfare. Christ, and, after him, Paul, made love the chief of virtues, without which there is no life in the soul. And love is the one passion, as we see now, which extirpates selfishness—selfishness, which is the root of all sin; love, which is the root of all excellency. Love is the result of God entering the soul; love is the new birth.

He that loveth is begotten of God, is born from above. Love is the mind and Spirit of Christ in our mortal days. Love is the fulfilling—necessarily the fulfilling—of the law of God, who is Love. For life, with all it yields of joy or woe and hope and fear, is just our chance of the prize of learning love—what love might be, hath been, indeed, and is. Love is the first fruit of the Spirit of Christ. It heals life, it sweetens life, as we do not realize unless we steady ourselves and think hardly. It heals life, it sweetens life: without it life would be most rank and worthless. And the love which a man holds within his heart, the chief blessing that he has—not the love with which he is loved, but the love with which he loves—that chief blessing in a man's soul is a benediction to all beside who come within the rays of it. A benediction—aye, of course, and the double blessing that flows from it is like the benediction of God's own presence. For love is not an abstract sentiment, thank God; it cannot nestle within without rays that reach without; and when we pray for love we play for our friends and for ourselves; it is a double prayer to heaven, and with its presence comes the jewelled benediction. —Rev. J. B. Snell, M. A.

Oftentimes the hindrances that lie in the path of duty may be compared to the toll gates upon our turnpike roads—they are kept shut till we are just upon them, and then fly open, as it were, of themselves. And that is time enough. If they had been open a week beforehand we could but have gone through at last.—John Newton.

Was Shakespeare a Scotsman?

An Englishman and a Scotsman were engaged in a keen argument concerning the merits of their respective countries. The Englishman, enraged at the pretensions of the other, at length exclaimed—"You will soon be claiming Shakespeare as a Scotsman!" "Weel," replied the Scot, coolly, "I'm thinking that some of his wurruks would warrant the presumption."

How Much Did You Take?

"Haven't we had a fine sermon? said one lady to another, while passing out with the congregation at the close of a Sunday service. "Yes," replied the other, "I think we have—how much of it did you take?" The sermon was really a good one, upon "Charity," which "suffereth long, and is kind." The lady who so warmly praised it was fashionably dressed, at her ease, not particularly given to sacrificing her substance or convenience for the benefit of anybody else, and often making very uncharitable remarks about others; yet she was captivated with the sermon. But while we remained within hearing, she had not framed a reply to the question, "How much did you take of it?"

Sunday School Gathering :—Rev. H. M. Dixon, writes from Monroe : Near the beginning of the year that has just past, a few of the members of the Juvenile Missionary Society, went to work to improve a dime, given to each, to aid in their contributions to the cause of Foreign Missions.

Tuesday evening after Christmas we had our last meeting of the year, and it was the most successful meeting we have had since our organization. A few days before, we sent out written invitations, furnished us by our Secretary of Foreigh Missions, to a hundred or more families outside of the church ; consequently we had an overflowing house, and many went away because there was no room, as they thought. Nearly all the pastors of the town were present with us and took part. The exercises consisted in a delightful praise service, and an excellent address, appropriate to the occasion by Rev. W. Black, and last, but not least a gathering up of the fruit of the dimes that had been at work for the Lord, together with the savings that the little ones had put aside for this cause. It all amounted to $108.83. Most of this the children made by self-sacrifice and labor. Some denied themselves every Christmas pleasure, others gave the larger part of their earnings that they might have something to give here. The dimes that were returned, some wanted another year, had increased many fold, one made $4.15, none less than $1.00. The society has started out with the determination to do more this year, and expect our next contribution to be nearer two hundred dollars than one, for we have learned that it is more blessed to give than receive. Would that the older ones might be taught by the example of their children.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

January 4th.—The exercises in celebration of the 70th anniversary of Union Theological Seminary were held in the chapel this evening, commencing at 8 o'clock. The weather was good and quite a large crowd was permitted to manifest its interest in the unusual and honorable ceremonies. The season was an appropriate one. Seventy years ago saw the beginning of this honored institution while the present year marks the highest and most prosperous point in its career. At the appointed hour the house was full and seated upon the rostrum were the faculty together with President Richard McIlwaine, of Hampden Sidney College, and Rev. Dr. Moses D. Hoge, of Richmond, who had been selected to deliver the address of the occasion. Rev. Dr. Robert Burwell, of the class of "24" who was to have been present as the oldest living representative among the alumni, was detained by feebleness at his home in Raleigh, N. C., but furnished a paper setting forth his recollections of the Seminary as it was at the time of his graduation. The exercises were under the immediate direction of Prof. W. W. Moore, the senior member of the faculty, to whose zeal the fact of the celebration is due.

First in order was a prayer by Dr. Vaughan followed by the hymn,

"I love Thy kingdom Lord
The house of Thine abode."

After this hymn had been sung, Dr. Moore briefly sketched the history of the Seminary indicating the historical necessity for it in the religious temper of its Scotch-Irish constituency and tracing its course from the beginning to the present time. He deliniated the early difficulties which beset it from the year 1824, when it had three students to the year 1894 when it has seventy-three. Dr. Moore paid special tribute to Rev. Dr. Jno. Holt Rice and Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith for the invaluable assistance which each of these gentlemen had rendered in increasing the endowment fund. The story of the seminary and its noble patrons is an eloqoent one—almost pathetic, but humor was mingled with pathos in Dr. Moore's treatment. His local hits were very felicitous. In concluding he asked what was the significance of this occasion, what the warrant for this demonstration. "What, says he, has Union Seminary done ?"—then answered his own question by showing that of all our missionaries now in the foreign field two-thirds are Union men ; that three-fourths of our ministers in the Synod of Virginia and one-half of those in North Carolina are graduates of Union Seminary and that these have never ceased to teach and to enforce the healthful principles of religious truth.

After a prayer by Dr. McIlwaine congratulatory letters were read by Dr. English from Rev. Dr. Wm. Henry Green, of Princeton Seminary, from the seminaries at Louisville, Auburn, N. Y., the Episcopal Seminary at Alexandria, Cincinnati, Richmond College, the Virginia Military Institute and others. Dr. Johnson was then asked to read Dr. Burwell's letter. It was a full and pleasing account of the Seminary and its life seventy years ago, and set forth strongly by contrast the changes and improvements which have since been made. Dr. Burwell's letter will be published in full in the next number of Union Seminary Magazine together with the address by Dr. Hoge.

Dr. Hersman now summoned the large congregation to stand and sing the first stanza of that good old hymn,

"Glorious things of thee are spoken
Zion City of our God."

Every heart and voice responded and then Dr. Moore stepped forward and in a few well-chosen and complimentary words introduced the orator of the evening—Rev. Moses D. Hoge. For more than an hour Dr. Hoge spoke with that freedom and graceful ease which characterize him, constantly varying his discourse so as to keep the attention of his hearers fixed. He spoke particularly of his own peculiar relations to the Seminary and his consequent interest in its welfare. His biographical comments upon Dr. Rice and Dr. Baxter were enlivened by flashes of wit and humor and were pointed with rare personal anecdotes illustrative of the character of each of these distinguished gentlemen. Towards the close of his talk Dr. Hoge addressed a few words of warm counsel and sympathy directly to the Seminary students. He called them "brethren" and we are sure that he feels the bond ; for however well preserved in body and in mind Dr. Hoge is no less well preserved in his kindly Christian affections. He has a large heart for all men and especially does he manifest a love for Hampden-Sidney and his younger brethren in Christ. It was here that he was born and here he will always find a home and a hearty handshake so long as he lives. At the conclusion of Dr. Hoge's address Dr. Hersman pronounced the benediction and the exercises were at an end.

VISIT OF DR. PROCHET.

The Morganton Herald of 28th ult, says : Signor Matteo Prochett, D. D., of Rome, President of the Waldensian Board of Evangelization, who is making a tour of the United States in behalf of the missionary work which his Church is prosecuting in Italy and among Italians in all parts of the wortd, is spending the Christmas holidays with the Waldenses in Burke county. Dr. Prochett reached Morganton last Saturday, and on Sunday morning was driven out to Valdese, where he held services on that day and on Christmas day. Every member of the colony turned out to meet him, and one hundred little children, drawn up in ranks at the boundary of the Waldensian lands, sung a hymn of welcome as Dr. Prochet's carriage drove up Sunday morning. The greater part of this week will be spent by President Prochet in viewing with Pastor Vinay the lands of the Waldenses and in mapping out a plan for the future government of the colony. On Friday afternoon he will return to Morganton to spend a few days with Mr. M. F. Scaife, and on Sunday he will by special request occupy the pulpit of Rev. J. M. Rose, pastor of the Presbyterian church in Morganton.

A correspondent of the Charlotte Observer writing from Morganton says that Dr. Prochet preached in the Presbyterian church at that place, both morning and night on 31st ult. He further says : After listening to two sermons delivered by him I think that without a single exception he is the best preacher that I ever heard. He is larger in stature than most Italians, and has a face that is more indicative of thought and character than is usually shown in the countenances of that people. His voice is full, strong and sonorous ; his articulation, with the exception of a little intonation peculiar to the Italians, is distinct, and his gestures and facial expressions suggest the fact that to an inherited genius of oratory he has added a thorough knowledge of elocution in its higher sense. Dexterity is probably the word that best describes his use of the English language. His diction is singularly pure, clear and strong ; and in his own peculiar impassioned and climactical way he fashioned thoughtful and concise sentences in a manner that commanded wrapt attention from his audience.

His discourse in the morning, which was purely a sermon, occasioned a great deal of comment and interest, and at night people of all denominations crowded to hear him at the Presbyterian church. His talk was partly a lecture and in part a sermon, but his principal theme was the history of his own people and the narration of their persecutions when they persistently refused to make obeisance to the papal throne. In this portrayal he was always grand and eloquent and at times was sublime. As he, with all an Italian's warmth and fervor, spoke of the terrible wrongs that were perpetrated upon his people because of their allegiance to their belief, he grew more and more eloquent and impressive and when he ended in a climax by quoting Milton's hymn commencing : "Avenge thy murdered saints, O Lord," it only required a glance at the tense, moved faces in front of him to show how completely he had carried his listeners with him.

After the above was about up we received from our correspondent, along with much contained in it, the following :

The story of his martyr Church, always so deeply interesting, was made doubly so by the intense earnestness of one who felt every word that he uttered and whose ancestors had shed their blood in the defences of the faith of the gospel. Those who had the pleasure of hearing Dr. Prochet will ever feel a keener interest in the Church of the Waldenses and in the colony lately planted in Burke county. Dr. Prochet's own church in the city of Rome has a membership of nearly two hundred. In his address Sunday night, speaking of his own pastoral work, he said : "We admit none to our communion except through the door, and that door is the Bible-class ; we desire no accessions except of those who understand and cordially accept the doctrines and principles of the simple gospel we preach ;" and then added this interesting statement, that he had seven hundred Roman Catholics in his Bible class. The king of Italy recently made Dr. Prochet "Knight Comn ander" of the "Order of the Crown," a distinction never before conferred upon one not in sympathy with the teachings of the Church of Rome. [Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Owing to the size of the present pastorate preaching places and the many meetings held during the summer and fall, and absence also, I have not been able to press the work at this point as I think it ought to be done. I gratefully acknowledge the following contributions :

Miss Brooke, Richmond, Va., $1.00 ; Miss Brooke, Richmond, Va., 1.00 ; Rev. J. A. Quarles, Va., 10.00 ; "Two thank Offerings," Charlottesville, Va., 5.00 ; Mrs. Chas. B. Hood, Va., 5.00 ; Three Friends, Lewisburg, W. Va., 3.00 ; Mrs. F. G. Thompson, Cobden, Ill., 2.00 ; Mrs. Nannie Garritt, Hangchow, China, 10.00 ; Previously acknowledged, 139.00. Total from appeal in papers, $177.00.

Now as Dr. Hawes has his churches built —(I rejoice that it has not come to pass "that the beggar died"—but that his churches are built—) will you not, reader, help us ? We need your help. We are compelled to build next summer to secure the lot given by the company. They require us to build a $2,000 dollar house three years from date of deed. We need about $800 more. I earnestly ask many Christians to help me build this house.

If many will help the burden will fall very light on each one, and surely many can afford to help in a case like this. So please help quickly. I want to get out of the papers with appeals, but we can't build without your help.

CHURCH ERECTION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS :—If my last communication had stirred the hearts of God's people, as it did two of my fellow-laborers, I would be much better satisfied. But this last cry has not been entirely unheeded. I have received another dollar. This came from one of the weakest churches in the Presbytery. The sender of it says it is the result of a collection taken up in the family for this object. Are there not more families and circles of friends who can do likewise ? If some of the Presbyterians whom Bro. McCorkle describes as sitting Sunday after Sunday in their comfortable churches, had to endure for a single winter the discomforts with which he and Bro. Pell and so many of us who labor in destitute mission fields in the country are so familiar, they would not only appreciate the blessings they have ; but would be more ready to help to remove the great discomforts of others.

Those people need salvation just as much as those who sit in brick churches or cushioned pews, but "how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard ? and how shall they hear without a preacher ? and how shall they preach, except they have somewhere to preach ?

Brethren, in Christ Jesus, can you not make some sacrifice and aid in building these churches that are so much needed. I ask for only an average of $100 to build four churches in this county which are sadly needed. Souls are being lost for the lack of these houses. Can you let this responsibility rest upon you unheeded ?

Bro. Pell speaks of the defect in our present policy, and refers to a plan adopted, as he said, by the Synod of Virginia, for aiding in Church Erection. I am not informed that any such plan has ever been adopted by the Synod, but a plan of that kind was in operation for several years in East Hanover Presbytery and resulted in great good. The plan was this : The evangelist of the Presbytery (any one else appointed for this purpose would do as well) with the aid of the pastors and officers of the churches secured a list of subscribers to the building fund. Each of these persons promised to pay the amount he subscribed whenever the evangelist called for it, provided he was not called upon them more than twice a year, and provided the amount raised by each call should result in completing a church in the evangelistic field free from debt.

Now as we have no Church Erection policy in this Synod, why cannot each Presbytery adopt some such plan ? It is not surprising that the responses to individual calls are not as numerous as is desired, for those who make these calls are generally strangers to a large part of the membership of the churches, and the needs of the particular case are known only through the representations of one who is naturally supposed to be prejudiced in its favor. This would be obviated by having the call made by one appointed by Presbytery for this purpose. And as he would know beforehand what he could count on, he would be in a position to encourage weak congregations to undertake to build, when if they had to depend for needed help upon public appeals, they would be unwilling to make the efforts.

As the Presbyteries in this Synod do not generally have Presbyterial evangelists, let us appoint an "Agent of Church Erection" in each, with authority to raise a subscription as above described.

This is the way in which it would work. He would by visiting the churches or by correspondence raise a subscription of, let us say, $500. He would then have this much to count on twice a year. In some town or village a church is needed that will cost say $1,000. The people can raise $500, and applying to him for help he turns over to them the proceeds of his call upon the subscribers to his fund, after they have collected and used the amount subscribed at home. The result is they have a church completed free of debt. Or suppose a church is needed in the country that will cost $500. The people can raise $250. He makes his call and gives to this church $250. He then has left $50 which can go to completing still another church.

In this way, if the agent could secure 500 subscribers who would average $1 each, from two to four churches could be put up each year.

Brethren, consider this matter and go up to the spring meeting of your Presbyteries prepared to adopt this or some better plan by which serious lack in our system of home mission work may be supplied.

But do not, Christian friends, let the calls made by Bro. McCorkle and me go unheeded. Our work cannot afford to wait until any regularly organized plan can be adopted. Immediate help is what we need.

FOREIGN MISSION RECEIPTS FOR DECEMBER.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I might have headed this statement "Still More Encouragement," and would have done so but for the fear that the expression would grow monotonous,. Our report for December is encouraging all the same.

The receipts for December 1892 were $6,540.96. For December 1893 they were $10,087.06, a gain of $3,546.10. The total gain this year over the receipts of last year to date is $6,980.11.

I will not accompany this statement by another appeal to the churches ; not that we wish the funds to stop coming in, but we are satisfied they are going to come without the appeal. Evidently the friends of Foreign Missions are aroused everywhere and are sympathizing with us in our anxiety to meet the General Assembly with no backward step taken and no debt incurred.

One thing that is helping us is that our children are at work for Foreign Missions as perhaps they never have been before. The special object of their interest is the Congo boat. They gave to that fund in the month of October $589.17 ; in the month of November $683.22. The total of the Congo boat fund for December has not yet been footed up, but will probably be larger than for any previous month.

The Ladies' Societies also have their hearts in the work, and many of the letters we have received from them have encouraged and cheered us as much as the remittances which they contained.

Of one thing I feel very sure : that a day is coming when every man, woman and child will be glad of every dollar they gave, and of every self-denial they made for this cause in time of its trial ; and when we will all be sorry for anything we might have done for it, and did not.

Once more thanking all our generous helpers most cordially, and praying for the richest blessings to abide upon them all, I remain,

Fraternally,
S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

Can we not have one General Assembly's Home Missionary Society in each congregation which shall work solely to aid the prosecution of this work in the South and Southwest ? Will pastors commend this suggestion ? Who will lead off in organizing ? Send to office of Presbyterian Home Missions, P. O. Drawer H., Atlanta, Ga., for a constitution. Nice mite banks will be furnished at rate of forty cents per dozen, postage prepaid, or free if desired.

CORRECT.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. Mr. Law, Stated Clerk of Fayetteville Presbytery, (and other brethren) are correct, as to the order passed at the last meeting of Presbytery in regard to the appointment of a committee, and I think the names are correct. I have a distinct recollection of writing it down, viz : That the following were appointed on the Home Missions Committee, see paper, &c., and in reading the minutes for correction (just before the adjournment of Presbytery) the moderator called my attention to the fact that this was not the Home Missions Committee, but a committee to assist the Home Missions Committee. The correction was then made in writing, and turned over to the Stated Clerk with other proceedings. As to what went with it after that I do not know.

ONE OF THE TEMPORARY CLERKS.

January 8th, 1894.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Methodist Protestant :

When rum-sellers quote with approbation the sentiments of Christian men on the subject of temperance, there is something wrong in the latter. When skeptics quote with approbation the criticisms of learned divines against the Bible, it is a sign that the latter are not very divine.

United Presbyterian :

We have heard of a little girl who complacently expressed the opinion that she must be a lovely little girl or her mother would not think so much of her. If we, as the children of God, had a better appreciation of our own unloveliness, we would the better understand the exceeding riches of the grace of God, in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

The Christian World :

We often wonder why only a certain faithful number are expected at all the Sunday and mid-week services, while a great number stay at home and take it easy. We have as much right to expect others to do their duty as they have that we should do it. Why should they be excusable and we not ? Oh, the flimsy Sunday excuses that people make. On Monday they will be out bright and early.

Christian Leader :

At the time of a great famine in Judea for the destitute disciples of which province Paul was gathering up a collection he tells the Corinthians how that in "a great trial of affliction" the Macedonians, "in the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality ;" and, accordingly, in their deep poverty, they sent forward their bounty. Paul shows how the blessing of God followed the noble Macedonians. If the times are hard, the more reason that we should put forth extra exertion to help the poor and needy, especially the needy saints.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

January 21.—Cain and Abel.

Gen. iv. 3-13. Commit vss. 3-5.

Golden Text.—"By faith Abel offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain."—Heb. xi. 4.

Topic.—The first murder.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. On the connection read Gen. iii. 16-24: iv. 1, 2. The spiritual consequences of sin have already shown themselves as seen in the last lesson; God now indicates the outward consequences; to the woman, bitterness in motherhood; to the man, bitterness in labor; both of which would have been only a source of happiness but for sin; and in the end physical death as the natural outcome of spiritual death, which had come "in the day" they ate of the tree (ii. 17). Note also the probable indication of sacrifice in iii. 21. Skins imply slain beasts. Animal food was not permitted until after the Flood (Compare i. 29 and ix. 3). The inference is almost inevitable that sacrifice was then instituted, that the promise of the wounded Deliverer was at once illustrated by the bleeding victim, and that the covering of their naked bodies by the skins was an object lesson of the covering of their naked souls by the blood (Lev. xvii. 11; "atonement"="covering").

Second Step. Read carefully the lesson noting what the passage before us says with regard to—

1. The difference between the offerings, vss. 3, 4.
2. The difference between the two men, vs. 7 ("doest well," "sin").
3. The different reception of the men and their offerings, vs 4.
4. The effect of his rejection on Cain, in (a) wrath, vs. 5; (b) murder, vs. 8; (c) falsehood, vs. 9; (d) bitterness without contrition, vs. 13, (Read also vss. 14, 15).
5. The necessary relation between sin and penalty. vss. 10-12.

Third Step. Make a summary of the story of the lesson and compare it with the one below, correcting yours or improving ours.

SUMMARY. The great conflict begins when Cain, Adam's firstborn, who was a tiller of the soil, brought to the Lord an offering of the fruits of the ground, and Abel, the younger, who was a shepherd, brought a lamb of the flock. God accepted Abel and his offering and rejected Cain. When Cain was angry God remonstrated with him showing that if he did well he would be accepted and have the natural precedence of his birth, and that sin was the cause of his failure. Hardened in his anger, Cain killed Abel, and then denied to God knowledge of his whereabouts. God declared the impossibility of hiding blood, and renewed and intensified the curse upon the ground and declared Cain an outcast. Cain received his doom with unrepentant bitterness.

Fourth Step. Take up difficult terms and questions involved in the lesson, with your helps, until you have as clear and satisfactory conceptions as possible. For example:

Brought....unto the Lord, vs. 3. Unto the Gate of Eden where were the symbols of the divine presence (compare iii. 24 and Ex. xiv. 22; Ps. lxxx. 1).

Had respect etc., vss. 4, 5. Was the different reception of the offerings due to the difference in the offerings or the difference in the men? In favor of the former is the fact that no offering of the fruits of the field was accepted except when accompanied by a bloody sacrifice (Lev. xxiii. 12); of the latter that God bases it upon the different characters of the men (vs. 7). This leads to the deeper question, Did not the characters of the men determine the character of the offering?

Doest well....have the excellence, vs. 7, (margin). Abel's offering expressed faith, and therein consisted its excellence (Golden Text); that is, it had respect to the promise of the wounded Deliverer (iii. 15), thereby confessing sin, acknowledging the death penalty as deserved, and expressing hope through the promised mercy of God; it was probably, also, an act of obedience, if, as seems probable, iii. 21 is an indication of the institution of bloody sacrifices.

Sin....at the door, vs. 7. The sin consisted not only in the absence of faith in the promise, confession of sin, etc., and obedience to a divine institution, but probably in an exulting triumph in having wrested the fruits from the earth in spite of God's curse upon the soil (iii. 17, 18). This explains the renewed curse vs. 12.

And unto thee, vs. 7. To be connected directly with the question in the first part of the verse; the intervening words should be read as a parenthesis.

And Cain talked with Abel his brother, vs. 8. The original will not bear this translation, the word rendered talked with, meaning said unto. We should probably insert the words found in the Septuagint translation, but lacking in our copies of the Hebrew, and read, "And Cain said unto his brother Abel, Let us go into the field."

Crieth unto me, vs. 10. "Murder will out."

Fifth Step. The topics for study are so numerous that they can only be touched briefly.

1. The great conflict begun.—(See Gen. iii. 15.)
   On the one side—
   Trust in God.—(See above); Ps. xxii. 8, and Matt. xxvii. 43; Rev. xii. 11.
   Forbearance towards enemies.—Gen. iv. 8; Is. liii. 7; Matt. xxvi. 52.
   Victory through suffering,—Heb. xi. 4; ii 14; John xvi. 33.
   On the other side—
   Rebellion against God.—(See above); John xv. 24.
   Oppression of God's people.—Gen. iv. 8; John xix. 6.
   Destruction through their own victory.—Gen. iv. 13, 14; Ps. ix. 16; Acts ii. 23, 36.
2. Sin.
   Unbelief, vs. 7. (See above) and Heb. xi. 4.
   Anger, vs. 5 and Gal. v. 19-21.
   Murder, vs. 8 and Matt. v. 21, 22; xv. 19.
   Lying, vs. 9, John viii. 44.
   Bitterness at punishment } vss. 13, 14.
   Without confession and contrition. } Rev. xvi. 9, 11
3. The first death.
   Sin inflicts it, vs. 8, 1 John iii. 12, Acts ii. 23.
   But it comes to the righteous, Matt. xxiii. 35; John iii. 12.
   Since all have sinned, Rom. v. 12.
   Not the worst evil, vss. 13-15, Prov. xiv. 32; Isaiah lvii. 1.
4. The worship of God.
   Only as commanded by God.—(See note above); Ex. xxvi. 40; Deut. xii. 32; Matt. xv. 9; Col. ii. 18.
   Where.—(See note above); Gen xxii. 2; Ex. xxix. 42, 43; Deut. xii. 10, 11; Ps. lxviii. 16; John iv. 21, 23, 24.
   The use of sacrifice.—Gen. iv. 4; viii. 20; xxii. 7, 12. 13; John i. 29; Rom. xii. 1.

Sixth Step. Consider carefully and prayerfully the practical bearings of the lessons brought out concerning sin and its punishment, anger and its results, the fruits of unbelief, the rewards of faith and patience Notice that God provides (iii. 21); accepts (iv. 4); reasons (iv. 7, compare Is. i. 18, 2 Cor. v. 20); inquires (iv. 9, Ps. ix. 12); judges (iv. 11, 12; Rom. i. 18).

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

First Step. All lesson papers put away and Bibles closed.

Second Step. Question on the Topic, Golden Text and connection.

Third Step. Draw out from the scholars the story of the lesson until it is clearly fixed in their minds.

Fourth Step. Open Bibles, clear up difficulties, especially those likely to be felt by the class. Try to make very plain the difference between the character of Cain and Abel as shown by their offerings.

Fifth Step. Have a ten minutes Bible reading on the topics of the lesson, selecting those topics best suited to your class, and those texts best adopted to impress them. Do not try to cover all the grounds. You need just enough of this to throw the light of clearer parts of God's word on the passage before us, and to get its true place in the progress of revelation.

Sixth Step. Clinch the teaching of the lesson by Shorter Catechism—Qu. 14, 84, 85.

General. The true point of view from which to teach this lesson is the division of all men into two classes, God's people and Satan's people, and to show how yielding to our own sinful passions brings us into the ranks of God's enemies. Eph. vi. 16 is a good a good text to leave in the scholar's mind.

Teachers' Exchange.

We have received no answers to our questions as to collections in the schools, except that Bro. Shields writes us that Roxboro takes up monthly collections for the Orphans' Home. We would be glad to hear from all the schools.

To the Churches in Orange Presbytery:

It has been ordered by the Presbytery that the collection in January for Home Missions shall be applied to pay our indebtedness to our supplies for last year. These brethren are in great need of what is due them, and our sustentation work must remain crippled so long as we are in debt. Brethren, see to it, that the collection for Home Missions this month, be promptly taken and sent to W. S. Moore, Treasurer, Greensboro, N. C.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 3rd, 1894.

Some of the people, so plentiful in every community, who profess inability to see or understand the necessity for constant and persistent agitation in behalf of temperance should have spent New Year's day in Washington ten years ago and again on Monday. The contrast would have shown the necessity for temperance agitation, as well as the great reform it has accomplished within that period. Ten years ago the first day of the year was recognized by thousands of otherwise respectable people as the one day in the year when men might put themselves on a level with beasts without losing their social standing, in fact were persuaded to do so by those who should have been the last to place such temptations before them—the women. It was the rule then rather than the exception that the young men, and all too often the middleaged and elderly men also, should end their New Year's calls in a beastly state of intoxication.

Now look at the other side. It is now considered as disreputable for a man to get drunk while making New Year's calls as at any other time, and the number of women who offer their callers intoxicating liquor in any form is comparatively small and growing smaller each year. This reform has been accomplished by temperance workers, much of it under great difficulties. For instance, one lady who for many years made it a practice to furnish her callers with intoxicating liquors so resented the request of the temperance people, which she called "an impertinent interference with my affairs," that she became offended with several of her life-long friends who were among them. The rebuffs had no effect; the temperance folk persisted and although it took them several years they finally succeeded, and that lady not only banished intoxicants from her own house but she became an active worker for temperance and has been instrumental in causing a number of others to do the same. That is the method which has been followed as a rule in working against the New Year orgies in Washington, which investigators have declared to have been reproductions of the saturnalia of pagan Rome. In fact the social position of the women made personal appeals from some other woman who enjoyed social intimacy with them about the only certain way of reaching them. There are still some who persist in tempting their callers with intoxicating liquors, but the temperance agitators will not cease to plead with them until all have been convinced of their error.

It is not alone in social circles that good results of temperance agitation were perceptible New Year's day. The custom of the saloon keepers in distributing free drinks to their customers on that day had filled our streets with drunken men in the past, but this time so few drunken men were seen on the streets that everyone was commenting upon their absence. There can be no doubt that it was the temperance workers who brought about this reform, because money was not required to make a man drunk that day. Therefore all honor to the noble men and women who believe in and who keep up a ceaselesss agitation in behalf of temperance.

Considerable disappointment is felt here because of the refusal of the government of Chili to extend the time for which the United States and Chilian claims commission, now sitting in this city, was appointed. It was discovered soon after the commission met, last October, that it would be impossible for the commission to act upon all of the claims within the specified time and application was made to both governments for an extension. The United States consented, but the refusal of Chili will prevent it, and no matter how just the claims may be that will remain unacted upon when the time of the commission expires they can never be brought forward again. What makes it look all the worse for Chili is that nearly all of the claims are by Americans against that country.

Congress reconvened to-day with a fairly good attendance. The first business in the House of Representatives was the new tariff bill, which will, except where other matters are temporarily taken up by general consent, be kept before that body until it is disposed of. Some think that the rapidly diminishing available cash in the Treasury may cause the tariff to be laid aside until some sort of a financial measure is adopted, but no official statement has been made to that effect.

The Hawaiian investigation which is being conducted by a sub-committee of the Senate committee on Foreign Relations is not public, but it is known that all of the witnesses who have yet been examined are gentlemen who are in favor of the provisional government of Hawaii, and of annexation. The testimony is being taken under oath. It is impossible at this time to say when the investigation will be concluded. T.

FOR THE FAMILY.

MOTHER'S GOOD-BYE.

Sit down by the side of your mother, my boy:
You have only a moment, I know,
But you will stay till I give you my parting advice—
'Tis all that I have to bestow.

You leave us to seek for employment, my boy;
By the world you have yet to be tried;
But in all the temptations and struggles you meet,
May your heart in the Saviour confide.

Hold fast to the right, hold fast to the right,
Wherever your footsteps may roam;
O! forsake not the way of salvation, my boy,
That you learned from your mother at home.

You'll find in your satchel a Bible, my boy:
'Tis the book of all others the best;
It will teach you to live, it will help you to die
And lead to the gates of the blest.

I gave you to God in your cradle, my boy;
I have taught you the best that I knew;
And as long as His mercy permits me to live,
I shall never cease praying for you.

Your father is coming to bid you good-bys;
O! how lonely and sad we shall be;
But when far from the scenes of your childhood and youth,
You'll think of your father and me.

I want you to feel ev'ry word that I've said,
For it came from the depth of my love:
And, my boy, if we never behold you on earth,
Will you promise to meet us above?

Where Camphor Comes From.

Camphor is the result of evaporating an essential oil found in two different trees, in China and Japan, and the dipterocarpus camphora, of Sumatra and Borneo; from these two trees it is obtained in very different manners. In the cinnamomum it exists in root and branch, stems and leaves, which are chopped small and put into earthen vessels, which are heated; these vessels are covered with hoods and rice straw is placed in them; the camphor is volatilized and rises; it condenses on the straw, from which it is afterward cleared. In the dipterocarpus it is found in the trunk, in a solid form, and it is obtained by cutting the tree down and splitting it open; it is found in pieces from one to two feet long and about as thick as a man's arm. A moderate-sized tree will yield about ten pounds of camphor, a larger one about twice that quantity. This kind is more highly esteemed than the other, so that in Japan two hundred pounds of native camphor are valued at one pound of the Bornean. —Detroit Free Press.

How to Hear a Color.

One of the most wonderful discoveries in science that has been made within the last year or two is the fact that a beam of light produces sound. According to Milling, a beam of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel that contains lampblack, colored silk or worsted or other substances. A disk, having slits or openings cut in it, is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light so as to cut it up, thus making alternate flashes of light and shadow. On putting the ear to the glass vessel, strange sounds are heard so long as the flashing beam is falling on the vessel.

Recently a more wonderful discovery has been made. A beam of sunlight is caused to pass through a prism so as to produce what is called solar spectrum or rainbow. The disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now place the ear to the vessel containing the silk, wool or other material. As the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it sounds will be given by different parts of the spectrum, and there will be silence in other parts. For instance, if the vessel contains red worsted, and the green light flashes upon it, loud sounds will be given. Only feeble sounds will be heard if the red and blue parts of the rainbow fall upon vessel, and other colors make no sound at all. Green silk gives sound best in red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors, and utters no sound in others.—Boston Evening Transcript.

The Volcano of Kilauea, Sandwich Islands.

Dr. S. E. Bishop, writing to the Independent, says: A macadamized road of the best quality is now nearly completed from the seaport of Hila, thirty-one miles, to the volcano, which will make a delightful drive of five hours up and three back, through exquisite tropical forests. This road has opened up the center of a hitherto inaccessible tract of superb coffee lands, one hundred thousand acres in extent, which are being taken up faster than surveyors can cut their way to them. The region is cool, moist, and free from miasm, well fitted for white settlers. Hila itself is a gem of beauty. It will soon have opened up in several directions the finest back country of any part of the group.

The volcano itself is in prime order for tourist inspection. The red crust of the lake is seamed with long zigzag crevices of bright fire creeping across its breadth. Here and there in the center, or around the rim, fountains of the massive white metal leap up and fall back with heavy crash, or play aloft with surging crests of dazzling fire. Now and then a great power wells up from below, and the whole lake becomes a white, molten, and surging surface, and pours a flooding sheet of fire over some part of the black floor around it, driving away in haste any visitors who have gone into the pit to fish up melted lava with their sticks. Two weeks ago the lava flood made a huge rush and carried away all the parapet walls which it had built up, and filled the whole bottom of Halemaumau pit with a surging lake, one hundred acres in breadth. The level of the lava is working well up toward the top of the pit, and must within a few months overflow upon the main floor of Kilauea, as is its habit.

The Face as an Index to Disease.

Incomplete closure of the eyelids, rendering the whites of the eyes visible during sleep, is a symptom in all acute and chronic diseases of a severe type; it also to be observed when rest is rendered unsound by pain, wherever seated. Twitching of the eyelids, associated with the oscillation of the eyeballs, or squinting, heralds the visit of convulsions. Widening of the orifices of the nose, with movements of the nostrils to and fro, points to embarrassed breathing, from disease of the lungs or their pleural investment. Contraction of the brows indicates pain in the head; sharpness of the nostrils, pain in the chest; and a drawn upper lip, pain in the abdomen. To make a general rule, it may be stated that the upper third of the face is altered in expression in affections of the brain; the middle third, in disease of the chest; and the lower third, in diseases of the organs contained in the abdominal cavity.—Hygiene of the Nursery.

A PAGE IN THE BIOGRAPHY OF A TAMANDRIA.

Among our friends in Ceara there is a warm-hearted man known to every one as Chico Preto, Black Chico, or, as we would say, Black Frank. He was formerly a lancheiro, and used to bring us many unique presents from the sea. Once he brought in the sword of a sword-fish, again, a curious spray of fancoral, and at another time, a couple of barnacles, of lovely, shaded violet, whose deep cups I sometimes dressed with flowers. But one day he astonished us by an offering of a totally different description. It was alive, and, held out by a cord, ambled clumsily by his side, and was about the height of my two-year-old baby. It was a tamandria,—an ant-eater. Chico Preto was radiant as he pointed out its virtues;—it would keep the house entirely free of insects, it would rid the garden of the fierce ants that were destroying the roses, and would put a speedy end to the triumphant career of the white ant, most insidious plague of all.

"And," he added complacently, "it is tame tame" (Portuguese idiom for very tame); "it will not claw the children at all."

"You remember, dear," said the head of the house, with what he meant to be a re-assuring smile, "you remember that tamandria we saw at Mrs. N's in Pernambuco; you know it sometimes watched the baby's cradle."

I did remember; the shudder the sight had caused me came over me afresh, as soon as my eyes fell on the creature. Still I was not ambitious for such an attendant at my baby's cradle. "Mints obrigado. Snr. Chico! Mints agradecido," we repeated, grateful for his thoughtfulness, although it had taken an appalling form.

As soon as the donor departed, we hastened to conduct our present to the veranda. It was all very well to talk of his clearing the house of pests, but what if we found the remedy worse than the disease? What were all the roaches and centipedes we had ever seen within our walls, in comparison with his all-pervading presence?

In the veranda we introduced him to a colony of small ants that had just appeared on the scene. The confession may not be to our credit, but we anticipated pleasure in seeing him poke out that long, cylindrical, gluey tongue, and gather up the whole settlement at once. But they were not to his taste, and he eschewed them emphatically. They stung his feet and made him wiggle. The garden ants, among which he is said to revel, were not in operation at the time; they were awaiting for the darkness.

As he shuffled awkwardly about we watched him curiously. His body was covered with a mixed brown and drab coat of hair, his handsome tail was bushy and sweeping, his head narrow and pointed, his eyes had very little "speculation" in them, but all his intellect seemed centered in that wonderful, darting tongue. His claws were desperately sharp and pointed, and the action of the fore-arm seemed very human. "When babies anger them," remarked a servant, calmly, "they walk up and hug them. They say no human power can undo the clasp, and they have been known to hug little children to death."

"If the arms are burnt with live coals," said another, "they will let go. They say that's the only way to release the little prisoner."

They saw me turn pale, I suppose, for they hastened to remind me that this specimen was very tame.

"What is its voice like?" I enquired. None of them had ever heard a song from it, although all were familiar with its habits. "Some say," said a boy present, "that in its wild state it cries like a child." I have put the question to many people, but have never received a satisfactory answer.

In the meantime, the hero of the day had ambled in his uncouth fashion to the kitchen, discovered a saucepan of milk just set on to boil, thrust his long snout, tongue and all, inside, and the day's milk had vanished.

"A moment white, then gone forever."

His next move was to overturn, with no slight clatter, all the pots and pans on the stove, in search of further regalement.

We had had many pets in the family; a magnificent parrot that talked and sang, dainty parroquets, the "inseparables" that live and die together, a beautiful fluffy white rabit, that would come to me, stand on its hind-legs and prettily beg a lettuce leaf or a banana, and then nibble it at my side; sky guinea pigs with no habits that we ever discovered, not to mention dogs, cats and singing-birds; but this pet was a novelty, and an unwelcome one. I mentally resolved that I would not leave the house unless I took all the children with me.

The day wore on, but the burden of every minute seemed to me "tamandria."

He made a good dinner of farinha and gravy, but his countenance wore a dejected aspect. Perhaps it only reflected mine. When night came, the question of his sleeping-apartment had to be met. He must not be too near a neighbor, yet we wished him to be under shelter. Finally he was quartered in a vacant room on the premises. When morning dawned, and we went to visit him, not a trace of him was to be found. He was "Gone like tenants that quit without warning, Down the back entry of time."

Whether he had freed himself, climbed the wall and so escaped, whether the servants had thought him a dangerous inmate, and had stealthily turned him loose, or wether he had been seized upon by predatory hands as a desirable acquisition, we could never discover. This was five or six years ago, and we have never since laid eyes upon our toothless friend nor any of his species.

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER II.

"He has much good, even in possession, for me, when he has blessed me with such a wife as you, Marion," answered John, affectionately; "and I feel I'm very wrong and ungrateful to repine as I do, when I should be thankful to him for you, though I had never received another blessing at his hand."

"Rather be thankful for the measure of contentment and resignation to his holy will which he has put into my heart, John, for these are his gifts too! Indeed, what have we that we have not received from him?" said Marion, gently. "And see here," she added, as she rose, stirred up the fire, and lighted her lamp, "see what a quantity of nice flax I've spun, and I hope to get a good price for it too, some of these days." So saying, she opened a cupboard, and displayed the fruits of her industry stored on the shelves; for the events we are narrating took place some fifty or sixty years ago, before the progress of modern invention had so much superseded the efforts of the thrifty housewife in this department.

"I hope to make something of that, John," she contined, cheerfully, as she drew her wheel towards her and began to spin. "And then the frost will soon break up, and you will get some work in my lord's fields; for Mr. Stewart, the factor, was here to-day when you were out, and he tells me there is to be a complete drainage set afoot, whenever the soft weather returns; and then, you know the more punctual you are in paying your rent, the readier he'll be to give you employment, so I hope you'll come to see that the sale of poor crummie is the only thing for us after all." John did not reply, but sat musing in silence for some minutes. It was hard for him to reconcile himself to such a thing, for the same pride which makes a Scottish peasant revolt from the thought of owing debt, attaches the idea of great humiliation to being obliged to sell property of any kind, in order to raise the funds necessary to defray it; so a considerable struggle between pride and duty took place in his mind before he could bring himself to adopt such an alternative. At length his sterling principle triumphed. "It is my duty," he said, in a hesitating voice, "yes, wife, you are right; come of it what may, I see it must be done; and he suppressed a sigh as he added; "and there's no time to lose. Let me see—to-morrow is Wednesday, and Thursday is the day of the cattle fair at D——; and I must be off by daybreak, for it will be as much as I can manage to get there in time with the cow; the days are so short just now.

Marion did not fail to express her cordial approbation of her husband's determination; and then, like a good and prudent wife as she was, instead of following up her victory by expatiating on the soundness of the advice she had given him, and his prudence in taking it, she judiciously dropped the subject, and endeavored to turn his thoughts to other matters. But it would not do; poor John continued absent and dispirited throughout the remainder of the evening; and Marion, seeing the fruitlessness of all her efforts, proposed, after he had taken the supper she set before him, that as he would require to get up very early on the morrow to prepare for his journey, he should retire to bed. John assented; and his wife rose, and taking from the shelf a well-worn Bible, which had been a sort of heirloom in the family for may generations, she placed it on the table, and instead of turning up the portion of Scripture which should come in course for the evening "exercise," she selected the thirty-fourth Psalm and desired him to read it. John obeyed, and as he proceeded, he found the sentiments of that beautiful Psalm so appropriate to their situation, that he was not long in perceiving the significance of his wife's choice of it; and the impression it left on his mind, produced a much more salutary effect than if she had spent hours in endeavoring to convince him of the duty of trusting in God, and of the sinfulness of his own conduct in repining at his most righteous will! And strengthened and soothed, if not reconciled to the duty that lay before him on the morrow, John, after joining with his wife in prayer for the Divine guidance, protection, and aid, went to bed.

An Aristocratic Nose.

"Mame," said little Elsie to her elder sister, "Flossie Green says I've got a pug nose. Have I? And what kind of a nose have you got?"

Mame glanced proudly at her aristocratic profile and answered in satisfied tones:

"Mine is a Grecian, I guess. And I'm afraid your nose is a pug, Elsie."

And a quarter of an hour later, Elsie was saying cheerfully to one of her sister's callers:

"Mame will come down in a few minutes. I guess she's greasing her nose. That's the kind she's got."—New York World.

Give a Girl a Chance.

Let the girl be taught something besides a smattering of pleasant accomplishments, something that will make her independent in the future—engraving, dressmaking, typewriting, illustrating, anything for which she has a bent—and let her take her time to acquire the business, as the boy does. Since he is not expected to be an errand boy or man of all work about the house while he is learning to earn his livelihood, why should she be seamstress and housekeeper at the same time that she is studying her profession? When she has learned it, she can afford to help to pay for extra household assistance, and it will be a great pleasure to her to be able to make her parents a gift now and then that they themselves did not pay for.

A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Mrs. P. D. HALL, 217 Genessee St. Lockport, N. Y., says:

"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions. While some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the day, none of them afforded me any relief from that spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was

Nearly in Despair,

and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments, I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

The Fundamental Principle of Life Assurance is protection for the family. Unfortunately, however, the beneficiaries of life assurance are often deprived of the provision made for them, through the loss of the principal, by following bad advice regarding its investment.

Under the Tontine Installment Policy of

The Equitable Life

you are provided with an absolute safeguard against such misfortune, besides securing a much larger amount of insurance for the same amount of premiums paid in.

Female Complaint.

Dear Sir:—I feel it my grateful duty to testify to all sufferers, particularly weakly worn down females, of the great benefits I have derived from the faithful use of the Electropoise. I have been raised from such a depth of suffering and misery that those who knew my condition a few months since consider me a walking wonder. I had suffered for several years from a distressing affliction peculiar to my sex, for a whole year past my whole system had been involved. Constipation most obstinate indigestion fearful periodical headaches, and worst of all sleeplessness and nervousness, which no remedies would relieve. I had the best medical attention, and just lived on tonics and medicines, but found little, even temporary, relief. I could not walk to my nearest neighbor's for three months, and suffered almost agony when on my feet. So much for my condition when in April last I began using the Electropoise. In one week I could sleep soundly all night with no nervous attacks and am entirely relieved of my distressing female trouble, constipation and headaches; appetite and digestion good, and I have walked two miles without inconvenience; my sleep is sound and refreshing and my complexion is good. I have used the Electropoise with great success in my family, have cured croup, bronchitis, cramp and inflammation of the kidneys, with which my family has suffered; several others here are using the wonderful little instrument with like success; I only recommend it to others for what it has done for me and mine. Suffering and worn out wives and mothers are to be found everywhere; and I earnestly beg such to try the Electropoise, the woman's friend. Where can you find one suffering from female complaints who has been cured and her health built up by instruments and medicines? Yet many can be found who are to-day well and strong from a few months use of the Electropoise without medicine. I feel that under a kind Providence I owe my life and health to the 'Poise, and I bid adieu to medicine for I have my doctor and medicine always at home, in the never failing Electropoise; it is cheap at any price, for it cures where other remedies fail.

Most gratefully yours,
MRS. J. M. BROWN.

PENTECOSTAL POWER.

During the first week of January just past, some of our churches have observed the week of prayer. The subjects were suggested by a committee of the Evangelical Alliance. They were similar in order and design to those of the past several years. They are very profitable. The first for this year is our subject now. This is excellent in itself and in accord with the original call for this week of prayer. It is now known that this call originated with Rev. J. H. MORRISON, an American missionary in the North India Mission. The first call was for a special day, and later for a week of prayer, for the fulfillment of the promised outpouring of the HOLY SPIRIT on all flesh. Looking back through several issues of our Missionary for January we find renewed attention called to this original design of the week of prayer. The observance of this week has been of untold blessing to the churches at home. Hence the enlargement of its orignal scope and design to meet the situation. We should not forget its call to prayer for the power of the HOLY GHOST. Indeed we cannot in view of its present purpose and the great need at home and abroad of Pentecostal power. Happily this year the committee has made this the subject of the opening service and sermon and all our churches which have used it can testify of its value, by our confidence in CHRIST and His word of LUKE xi: 13. "If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your HEAVENLY FATHER give the HOLY SPIRIT to them that ask Him." We have abundant proof from reports of the missionaries that GOD has honored the prayers of his people and has been true to fulfill His word in mission fields. Just now when there is a revived interest and manifest increase of gifts in our foreign missionary branch of Church work and when old missionaries are returning and new ones are going out to the work there is need that we should pray for the coming of the HOLY SPIRIT on all our workers at home and in foreign lands in Pentecostal Power.

After the ascension of CHRIST the disciples continued to meet daily in Jerusalem in the house where some of them lived. They were united in prayer and supplication. "When the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all together of one accord in one place." In prayer, waiting and looking for the promised power they heard, not a rushing mighty wind, but a sound like that. And the sound (not the wind) filled the house. They saw, not fire, for it did not burn, but like fire divided into tongues which rested on the head of each disciple. The disciples were "filled with the HOLY GHOST and began to speak with other tongues as the SPIRIT gave them utterance." This was Pentecostal Power. At the Passover, where CHRIST our Passover was the true lamb of sacrifice, the first sheaf of the ripening harvest was offered before the LORD. Fifty days after two loaves of bread were offered as token of the gathered grain. So CHRIST the first fruits of them that slept arose on the day of the offering of first fruits, and at Pentecost the HOLY GHOST wss given as the fulness of the Harvest—for by Him is the fulness of CHRIST, and by Him the bride, the Church, which is the fulness of Him that filleth all in all, shall be gathered into CHRIST.

This is the dispensation of the SPIRIT. He had wrought occasionally in the Old Testament times. He had exercised His power in part before the day of Pentecost. On that day He came in the fulness of His power, in the completeness of His manifold ministry in the permanence of His presence in the world, in the Church and in the person of each believer whose body is a temple of the HOLY GHOST. Every soul convinced of sin and of righteousness and of judgment to come is a witness of the power of the SPIRIT. He is here to comfort believers, to sanctify saints, to guide disciples into all truth. He is here hiding Himself and exalting CHRIST. He is here to take of the things of JESUS and show them to His humble followers. Every right thought, every noble purpose, every true aspiration, every holy desire, every high resolve, is by His mighty power. "He helpeth our infirmities. He maketh intercessions for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." What JESUS is as advocate with the FATHER the HOLY SPIRIT is as advocate within us. He has come to make His residence in the heart of every child of GOD and the body of such is His temple. Hence the words—"Grieve not the HOLY SPIRIT," and "Quench not the SPIRIT." All this and more the HOLY SPIRIT is in His manifold ministry in the Word and in the Church.

This does not exhaust nor completely define the Pentecostal power of the HOLY GHOST.

The promise of our ascending LORD was that the disciples should be witnesses unto Him by the power of the HOLY GHOST coming upon them. This began to be on the day of Pentecost when the disciples were filled with the HOLY GHOST and spake with other tongues. It continued in later cases like that of the fourth chapter of the Acts when the disciples spake with boldness and in such cases as joyful resignation and triumph were manifested in trial, when they humbly yet gladly "counted it all joy that they were found worthy to suffer for the name of the LORD JESUS," when they stood before kings and councils and bore testimony which their hearers could not resist and when the Word of GOD on their lips and in their lives grew mightily and prevailed.

Pentecostal power is the manifold ministry which abides in the present dispensation to take and apply the redemption of CHRIST and to be "another comforter" after and to reveal and glorify CHRIST. Every Christian now may have and should seek the measure of this manifold ministry which his responsibility to testify, his gifts to administer, or his duty to serve may require. The duties and gifts are to be received from the HOLY SPIRIT in the authority of CHRIST our living Head, and the ability to do our duty in the exercise of these gifts is of the HOLY SPIRIT. "All these worketh that self-same SPIRIT," giving to every man, "to profit withal." We are to rejoice that the ALMIGHTY SPIRIT is come and abides, to make every Christian a witness for CHRIST, where and as he is.

The COMFORTER came, on the day of Pentecost with just that miracle and ministry needed at that time and for that responsibility and opportunity while the disciples were of one accord in prayer and supplication. So is His manner since. JESUS intimated this in saying, as we have quoted, "to them that ask Him." There has been a blessing every year on the Church and on the work of the Church at home and abroad in the observance of this week of prayer. Whenever the people of GOD, a few or only one beginning, come together for prayer and to seek His power there has always been a partaking of this power. This disposition to come together is from the HOLY SPIRIT and must be confessed as His work. We need to be looking ever for His guidance and for any evidence of His readiness to give a blessing.

We need His blessing at all times. Our temptation is to rest in intellectual pleasure of GOD's Word and the ordinances of worship. We need constant reminders that that is a delusion and a snare. It is the fallacy of the so called Higher Criticism. It is the false persuasion of many of us that we are rightly reading GOD's Word. We need, we must have the power of the HOLY GHOST in reading GOD's Word and preaching His truth, and in all service whether with or without conscious intellectual clearness, profit or pleasure. We must cast ourselves on the mercy of GOD in CHRIST JESUS and wait for the promise of the FATHER.

HERE AND THERE.

THE INDEPENDENT HAS REPLIES from some thirty dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church giving their views on the Public School Question. Most of them deprecate any interference at present with the existing status, some of them even going so far as to declare they never will desire any interference without the voluntary consent of a majority of their fellow citizens. But it is noteworthy that all claim avowedly or impliedly that their church is suffering injustice, and it is hardly concealed that as soon as may be prudent or politic they will insist upon the State appropriating funds for the maintenance of Catholic schools. In other words they are acting now—or rather not acting now—from policy not from principle; their views are based upon the inopportuneness of the movement.

As a matter of history the Roman Catholic Church maintains that religion [which they always understand among themselves as Romanism] ought never to be separated from secular instruction in the schools. PIUS IX in his "Syllabus of Errors," in 1864 expressly condemned the opposite of this statement.

THE BALTIMORE MANUFACTURERS' Record publishes a large number of letters from bankers throughout the South, to the effect generally, that Southern farmers are better off now than for many years past. That is they owe less, and have plenty of corn or wheat and other necessaries of life in hand. Farmers do not seem to attach as much importance to having bread provided for the future as most of us do, but a full storehouse is, nevertheless, an article to rejoice in. One North Carolina banker—the only one heard from—President BLAIR, of the People's National Bank, Winston, writes the Record; "The farmers in our section all seem to have money and plenty of the necessaries of life. They are raising increased food supplies, and the outlook for them and for the townspeople as well is encouraging."

THAT CERTAINLY IS A GOOD OUTLOOK and like to this, though perhaps not quite so bright is much we see in the papers. For instance the Maxton correspondent of the Robesonian, a gentleman of fine intelligence, says: "Our information leads us, in spite of the complaints upon the lips of so many, to believe that a large number of our farmers are in a more independent condition now than in the past. A cessation of blue chat would soon bring smiles upon the faces of other classes of our population."

We suppose that if the people would believe they are as well off, as certainly they are, and pay their debts iustead of holding back their money, times soon would be very easy; for every dollar put into circulation relieves pressure in a marked degree, and a number so employed raise the spirits and cheer the hearts of whole communities.

A PLEBISCITE ON THE QUESTION OF prohibition was held lately in Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and Ontario, Canada. Local prohibition had redeemed several counties. The cheering results caused the people to look to the authorities, for fulfillment of a promise made to grant Prohibition as soon as the country should be ripe for it. These authorities ostensibly to ascertain whether public opinion, called for suppression of the traffic sent a Royal Commission to take evidence in Kansas, Maine, Iowa and elsewhere relative to the comparative merits of license and prohibition. Only one prohibitionist was placed on the committee and, as is usual in such cases, the committee found just what they sought, because they sought just where they would find what they wanted. They came back with the testimony of brewers, distillers and liquor dealers, with a few reputable persons, in opposition to prohibition. They had ignored ministers of the gospel and temperance workers wellnigh entirely. The people of Ontario were not satisfied. The temperance workers succeeded in having a plebiscite taken. In Manitoba the vote stood 3 to 1 in favor of Prohibition, in Prince Edward even better and in Ontario about 2 to 1. The only city where Prohibition failed was Windsor, opposite Detroit, by a majority of 108. In Toronto with the largest distillery and four or five of the largest breweries in the Dominion Prohibition got a majority of 2,528 in a vote of little over 19,000. This does not make law, but it announces the public sentiment after full and free discussion, and gives hope that a very large part of the Dominion will soon be free of the liquor curse.

ONE OF THE MOST AGREEABLE FEATURES of the times is the prudence exercised, as well as the activity, in the prosecution of measures for the relief of the pooor. The principle of associated charity, by which all interested in charitable work combine to see that all are helped, and in proportion as they need, is certainly to be commended. By the introduction of such organization with proper system it is possible, and by this means only is it possible, to prevent sharpers from preying upon the kindly instincts of those who are ever ready to help those who appear to be needy. By this means, and by this means only, is it practicable to find and duly help those who would rather suffer in silence than reveal their misfortunes and their needs in the way of appearing to plead for assistance. This is one of the good outworkings of the severely hard times through which we have been passing.

OBSCURING THE SESSION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

For two years, news notes have appeared in our religious papers to the effect that "—— members were received into the communion of ——— church by the pastor, Rev. —. —. ———." Such anamolous news excites little attention from the fact that it is regarded as either a slip of composition or a transparent piece of clerical advertisement, and so calling for no serious correction. It occurs so regularly, that it provokes thought. If the Briggs ilk could find such notices in the Presbyterian press of 100 years ago, they would raise a hue and cry against the narrow and intolerant practice of the modern church in subjecting applicants for membership to examination by the session. Especially would they inveigh against the modern invasion of the pastor's rights and prerogatives. If the sender of news, makes such breaches of Presbyterian custom and law, should not our editors, make the necessary correction? We are making history. Let us give to it no uncertain sound.

AMICUS.

[We agree entirely with "Amicus." Sometime ago we called attention to the fact of the loose writing on this matter, for ordinarily it can hardly be anything more. Yet we fear it sometimes means just what it says, and that church sessions do virtually abdicate in favor of their pastors, and they, the pastors, receive members into the church. In any case it is clearly wrong, wrong to violate the constitution of the church in one case, or wrong to carelessly misstate in the other—in the latter especially because such misstatement, as suggested by the correspondent, may be misleading hereafter.]

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by
Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

APPOINTMENTS.

Jan. 21st, Third Creek—23rd, Milton—25th, Leakesville—28th, Wentworth—30th, Graham—Feb. 1st, Burlington—Feb. 4th, Stoney Creek—Feb. 6th, Mt. Airy—Feb. 8th, Mocksville—Feb. 11th, Buffalo.

The "Ad Interim" Committee.

The report of the Standing Committee on Foreign Missions, of the last General Assembly, contained one paragraph which called for the appointment of an ad interim Committee, to consider some questions which had been agitated in the Church, especially during the previous year, in connection with this branch of the Church's work.

That paragraph reads as follows:

Inasmuch as questions have been raised in the Church, in regard to the expediency of transferring certain functions, now exercised by the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, from that Committee to the Presbyteries and church sessions; and, inasmuch as a Presbytery connected with the General Assembly has already exercised functions which, according to the Manual of Foreign Missions, belong to the Executive Committee, we recommend that this Assembly appoint an ad interim Committee of five to investigate the entire matter and report to the next General Assembly. First. As to the expediency of transferring any functions of the Executive Committee to the Presbyteries or church sessions. Second. As to whether any modifications, or changes, are advisable in the present method of administration in this part of the Church's work, and what amendments should, in their judgment, be made in the present Manual.

On this Committee the following gentlemen were appointed by the moderator: Rev. J. N. Waddel, D. D., C. A. Stillman, D. D., W. E. McIlwain, T. R. Sampson, and Ruling Elder E. H. Sholl. The Moderator, Judge J. W. Lapsley, was added to and made Chairman of this Commitee.

"This Committee met, at the call of the chairman, in Birmingham, Ala., on the 5th of January, in the office of Dr. E. H. Sholl."

"All members of the committee, except Dr. Waddell and Rev. W. E. McIlwain, were present. Dr. Waddell sent a paper setting forth, however, very clearly his views on the main questions involved.

"The committee was called to order by the chairman, and, after prayer by Dr. Sholl, the Rev. Mr. Sampson was made secretary. After a full discussion a report and recommendations to the Assembly was unanimously adopted, which the chairman was directed to have printed for reference, by members of the committee and subject to reconsideration by the committee. The committee adjourned, after prayer by Dr. Stillman."

Any statement as to the exact character of this report, or any free discussion as to its merits, would be out of place, until it is especially brought before the Church by the order of the Committee. But it will not be improper to state that it is essentially a conservative report.

The modifications suggested involve no radical change in our Constitution, or our Manual, are in no way disintegrating or subversive of our present plan; call for no new machinery, but will, it is believed, forestall, simply by a little different working of our present system and some slight changes, many difficulties, while accomplishing the two great objects which are now so earnestly desired and conspicuously needed:

1. The bringing of our churches closer to the missionary workers in the field, and thus increasing their confidence and enlarging their liberality.

2. The relieving of the Executive Committee of a part of the most burdensome and embarrassing responsibility which now rests upon it, and places it where it not only belongs, but where its absence has resulted in atrophy and weakness. Should such a feeling prevail, it seems that sessions and Presbyteries would be made to feel their responsibility, as they have not felt it before, in the selecting and recommending of missionaries, while not exercising the power of appointing, or directing, and controlling, a department of work which both by the constitution and the nature of things, it would seem, can be no more properly and efficiently prosecuted by the General Assembly and its Executive Committee. The inability of the acting secretary of the Executive Committee, Dr. Chester, to be present at this meeting, in consequence of sickness, was greatly regretted by all members who took part in it. Before the report of the ad interim Committee takes final form, however, it will have the benefit of his suggestions, and it will then be published, in time to be well before the minds of the Church, some time before the meeting of the next Assembly.

The Presbyterian.

MY FATHER KNOWETH.

What if one hair of mine unnumbered stood?
What if one sparrow fell unseen of God?
Where then my anchor strong?
Then would my faith be doubt, and doubt be all;
No hope to boldly smite death's iron wall;
Life without song.

My Father knoweth,—'tis enough for me,
'Tis wealth untold, honor in high degree;
He knowing seeks my good.
More than I think his loving heart hath yearned,
Oft in life's trial to my succor turned,
Stayed the wild flood.

How leans the world upon God's mighty power!
My place is there, I have my day, my hour;
I am the babe to-night,—
He watches till I upward take my way,
And o'er earth's charms and toys of childish play
I see the light.

Father, I strive not as the patriarch strove,
But hold thy gift, thy promise, and thy love,
All these in Christ my Lord!
"Your Father knoweth," this by him revealed,
Should keep me steadfast, though all else were sealed
In holy Word.

THE BEGINNING OF UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

The Presbyterian Church in America was composed originally of emigrants from Great Britain and Ireland, and for a number of years the ministers of their various congregations were drawn from beyond the seas. As the Church grew, however, and the population of the country increased, the supply thus obtained proved to be inadequate, and the necessity for a native ministry became more and more apparent. Academies and colleges were accordingly established from time to time during the eighteenth century at various places, such as Princeton, Lexington and Hampden-Sidney; and the candidates educated in these institution received their theological training either from the president of the college, when he chanced to be a minister, (as was commonly the case), or from other approved divines here and there throughout the country. But not until 1812, the year of our second war with England, did the Church establish an institution to be devoted exclusively to theological education. In that year Princeton Seminary was founded, with the Rev. Archibald Alexander (formerly president of Hampden-Sidney College) as its organizer and first professor. In the same memorable year the Synod of Virginia adopted the plan of a seminary to be located within her own bounds, inaugurated measures to raise funds for its support, and elected the Rev. Moses Hoge Professor of Theology. "Satisfactory arrangements having been made with the trustees of Hampden-Sidney College, of which he was President, by which Dr. Hoge could perform the duties both of Presidency and the Professorship of Theology, he at once entered on his work." For the remaining eight years of his life he prosecuted that work with signal ability and success, sending about thirty young men from his classes into the ministry. Dr. Hoge died in the summer of 1820, and at the following meeting of Synod Dr. Archibald Alexander was appointed to succeed him as Professor of Theology. Dr. Alexander declined the appointment, and the Synod, after trying in vain for two years to fill the place (a task rendered the more difficult doubtless by the fact that Dr. Hoge's successor in the presidency of the college was a layman), transferred the seminary, with the funds which had been collected, to the Presbytery of Hanover. That Presbytery, which then included nearly all of Eastern Virginia, had projected a theological school even before the Synod had taken the steps above described, and had collected a small fund for the support of it. This was now added to the sum transferred to them by the Synod, the theological school ceased to be a mere department of the college and was organized as a distinct institution, and the Rev. John Holt Rice, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church, of Richmond, was elected Professor of Theology, Nov. 16th, 1822. Dr. Rice had just been elected to the presidency of Nassau Hall (Princeton College). After mature deliberation he declined the call to New Jersey, though at great pecuniary sacrifice, and some months later, on June 2nd, 1823, he announced his acceptance of the Presbytery's appointment to the work in Prince Edward. He was then just recovering from a severe and protracted illness, and, with a view to recruiting his health, he made a journey by sea to New York, travelling thence to Saratoga Springs and other points, and improving the opportunity thus afforded to raise additional funds for the proposed seminary, in Albany, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Fredericksburg and other places; and therefore did not reach Hampden-Sidney till the autumn. Finding that no accommodations had yet been provided for him, he accepted the invitation of President Cushing of the College to lodge with him temporarily, and soon afterwards opened his school of the prophets, with three students (Jesse S. Armistead, Robert Burwell, and Thomas P. Hunt), in one end of President Cushing's kitchen! The services of Prof. James Marsh, of Hampden-Sidney College were secured to teach the Hebrew language.

On Thursday, January 1st, 1824, the Board of Trustees met in the College Church, and in the presence of a large congregation, the Seminary was formally opened. Dr. Rice was regularly installed as Professor of Theology and delivered a discourse appropriate to the occasion based upon 2 Tim. 3:16, 17—All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. His concluding words were these: "In accepting this office, I made the greatest sacrifice that I ever expect to be called upon to make in this world. But I have long been of the opinion that the interests of the Church do most urgently require a Southern Seminary; I believed the place fixed on peculiarly suitable from the character of the surrounding population; from its proximity to a literary institution, at which we hope that many pious young men will be educated for the ministry of the gospel; from its being near the high-road which runs through the center of the State to the South; and from the fact that the citizens of North and South Carolina and Georgia have always had more connection with the neighboring college than with any other institution in Virginia. But, what is more, I knew that the institution was to be under the particular direction of the Presbytery of Hanover, in connexion with which my whole ministerial life has been spent; whose members I have been so habituated to love and honor that use has become second nature; in whose zeal, prudence, and fraternal love I have been accustomed to place the highest confidence; to whose counsels I could look for direction and assistance; through whose prayers I hope to be strengthened and encouraged; whose indulgence I have often experienced; and who, after knowing me for many years, appointed me to the office, and urged my acceptance of it. In weakness and in fear, and in much trembling, I consented. And now I am here to take on myself the required engagements. But I can not go forward without beseeching my brethren in the ministry, and all Christian friends who hear me this day, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, to help me by their prayers. So may God bless you and the institution which your pious zeal is erecting. And may we all rejoice together in seeing it, as a copious fountain of living water, sending out its streams in every direction to fertilize the land, and make glad the city of our God. And to Him, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be glory by the Church through all ages. Amen."

When he had thus finished his discourse (amidst the tears of all who heard him. as his biographer informs us), the Rev. Matthew Lyle, the President of the Board, propounded the appointed questions, and the Rev. Clement R. Read delivered to the professor a solemn and impressive charge.

[Next week Dr. Moore will give readers of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN the "Development of the Seminary under Dr. Rice."]

Mr. PORTER'S REPORT.

PERNAMBUCO, Brazil, Oct. 23rd, 1893.

To the Editors of the North Carolina Presbyterian:

DEAR BRETHREN:—Mission meeting and Presbytery are over, and in a few more days I hope to take ship for my new field of labors—Ceara.

Before leaving Pernambuco finally I want to forward for publication my report of the last year's work at this station. A few words, first, however, about Presbytery and mission meeting. These two meetings are always held at the same time and place in order to save expense, as the missionaries have to be present at both. This year our mission was well represented, five of the six members being present. I count Dr. Smith in with us yet, as, in his last letter to me he says the Executive Committee had not yet notified him of his having been transferred to any other.

There were four missionaries, two native ministers, and two elders at Presbytery. I was rejoiced to see that during the whole time nothing arose to break the harmony that exists in our Presbytery between the foreigners and native brethren, thus showing that we do not partake of the troublous spirit that seems to be at work in the South of Brazil. Dr. Butler, who succeeds me at this station, has been on the ground for some time.

On my return from the States I began at once to pack up my things to go on to Ceara, but before I could get ready, the revolution in Rio broke out and caused an interruption in the line of steamers, then as time was approaching for our annual meetings, the brethren here thought it best for me to delay my trip till after mission meeting.

In many respects the last year (counting from July 1st, 1892, to June 30th, 1893, our Synodical year) was one of the hardest for the workers at Pernambuco. Yet the Lord blessed us very greatly with a large ingathering of souls. For the last three years I have been practically alone at this station. A part of this time Dr. Smith was in the States, and when he returned toward the end of 1891, it was soon manifest that he must seek another climate. In the few months he was with us he did more than his health would permit with impunity. In the following June he left us for Nova Fribnrgo, and I have had no one to help me since except our faithful natives. In August of 1892, Mrs. Porter's health being impaired I sent her, with Dr. Houston's approval, to the States, and for the following ten months I was entirely alone, having all the business and work of this station, together with five outstations and the work of four native ministers and two student helpers to look after; and to preach from three to four times a week.

In July of 1892, I visited San Lourenco at the urgent request of some believers there. It is a place about 20 miles out on the railroad, and in former times was most fanatical. On my first visit in 1885 my companion and I were stoned and driven out of the place. On this latter visit I preached several times to attentive audiences, and before coming away I baptized 10 adults and 4 children amidst much rejoicing. Afterward I sent some one of our natives to hold services there periodically.

A few months later we had to go to Presbytery at Ceara. That over, and home again, I visited another town, Escoda, on another railroad, about 45 miles distant. A member of the Areias congregation (one of our suburbs) who formerly had been an image maker, went to Escada, to tell the "glad tidings" and read the Bible to some relatives. Later on a man that I sent there to sell Bibles came back with such a glowing account and urgent appeal, that I went myself to preach to them. After several of these visits seven adults came forward for baptism. My elder and I examined them thoroughly, and we agreed that they ought to receive the outward seal of their faith in Christ. An incident will show their sincerity. The son of one of those received to the church was engaged to be married; but the girl's father insisted that his daughter should be married by a priest or not at all. The young man as positively declared that, though he loved the girl, neither she, her father, nor the "whole world of riches" could make him submit to a Romish priest, adding at the same time that his minister (myself) was the only one that should officiate for him. Finally, but with much reluctance, the father consented to come to our services, and when he heard the Gospel message he yielded completely. The result was that I was called on to marry the young people. This was a fine opportunity for me to preach Christ. I spent the Sabbath with them, preached twice and was rejoiced to see the old father and all his family present. The next morning he called me aside and said: "Last night after I went to bed my wife whispered to me, 'Let us destroy our images, they are no good.'" What a lesson to us Christians is this young man's firmness! Who can foretell the influence of such firmness on unconverted hearts!

My next visit was up the coast about 200 miles to Natal, the capital of the State of Rio Grand de Norte. Sr. Juventino, one of our native ministers, was my companion on this trip. We took passage on a small coasting steamer hoping to arrive at the Natal anchorage after a run of two nights and one day. But, alas! in Brazil a traveller can never tell when he will reach his destination. After one collision, two breakdowns, and three hours aground on a sand bar, we reached the wharf at 12 o'clock of the third night. Notwithstanding the late hour, friends were there to meet us. By 2 a. m, we had partaken of supper consisting of bread and butter, fried eggs and coffee, and were in our hammocks for a short sleep. Our host, Sr. Joaquim Lourival was out early next morning to tell of our arrival and to give notice that we would hold services in a large ware-house "borrowed" for the occasion. We preached in the afternoon and at night to most attentive audiences. The next day the inspector of the city police called and invited us to hold services in his house "so that the ladies could come." The house was crowded at every service during the week we staid there. We had taken a good stock of Bibles and other books for sale, and tracts for distribution. A number of Bibles and books were sold, and a great many tracts were distributed. Our friends told us of four other towns in the interior where people were anxious to hear us preach. The whole of Rio Grande de Norte is most promising. I have never visited any field where the people were more anxious to hear the gospel. That State will be part of the Ceara field and Mr. Wardlaw and I propose evangelizing in it, God willing, this coming year. I left a goodly number of books and tracts deposited with Sr. Lourival, who is a school teacher, and since then he has sold and distributed a great many. Besides that he spends all his spare time out of school in going from house to house to wherever he can get an entrance reading and expounding the word of God. A short time after I returned here we were surprised at receiving a little evangelistic paper, "O Pastor" (The Shepherd) from Natal. The little band of believers led by Sr. Lourival, among themselves, and without any aid or counsel from us, started the paper, which still continues and is doing a fine work.

I next visited Nazareth a place in this State where for years we have had a little nucleus of believers. An evangelist from Portugal, H. Maxwell Wright, went with me and preached to about forty people. The only house we could get was so small and uninviting that many had to turn away.

Besides this work outside the city, which you see is bearing good fruit, Sr. Juventino and I have kept up the services at the central hall in the city; also at Arria-, already mentioned, as well as weekly services in two other districts of the city. Regular weekly services have been kept up in four different parts of the city. I make this statement to show that in our desire to have a church building, we do not by any means intend to confine our services to one central place of worship. I have preached regularly three times a week and sometimes more, and have kept up a Sunday-school for young and old. The city congregation has steadily increased till our hall will no longer accommodate the people that come on Sunday nights.

The unsettled state of affairs in Brazil has made times very hard, and the necessaries of life have increased 100 per cent. in price within the last two years; notwithstanding that, the Recife church contributed last year $350 toward their own support, and $100 of this sum were given to the church lot fund. In that way they are showing earnestness in helping to secure the church building so sadly needed. Though I had no colporteur we sold and distributed a large uumber of books and tracts at our preaching hall, where I always keep a stock on hand.

During the year I received to the Church:

In San Lourenco, 10 adults; in Escoda, 7; Areias, 1; Central Hall (city), 24; By letter, 2. Total, 44. Sr. Belmiro received in Parahyba, 5 adults; Sr. Primenio received in Alagoas, 4 adults. Total members received in Pernambuco field, 53. I also baptized 24 minors. Sabbath-school in Recife, 45 pupils.

Sr. Belmiro kept up regular services in Parahyba and Cabedello, and preached in other places also. He visited Monte Alegre, ordaining one elder; and Brejo de Areia, where he preached to crowds in public square. Sr. Primenio visited Quebrangulo and other places in the interior twice during the year.

Our suburban work—Areias—grew so large that Presbytery this year organized there a separate church, with 17 members dismissed from the Recife roll; and two elders were elected and ordained.

While looking after all this work I have at the same time, been exerting my energies to raise the necessary funds to purchase a lot for a church building.

Last June, having written to the committee asking permission to go to the States and bring my wife home, and getting no answer, I thought I was justified in going for her. I went and was absent from Pernambuco just two months and nine days, and 34 days of this time were spent on the sea.

God has blessed the work entrusted to me in Pernambuco in many ways, and now that I have been removed from it, my earnest prayer is that the light of His countenance may continue to shine upon those who succeed me, and that His Spirit may guide me in the new field to which I am sent. I have worked conscientiously to the best of my ability, and under a great strain, for, besides the enormous work all around me, I had the extra anxiety about my wife, ill for ten months in another land. Our hearts are both heavy in bidding farewell to this field and this people, and when we see tears streaming down the faces of old and young at the thought of our leaving them, it seems hard, indeed, that so many should have to suffer, as it seems to us so needlessly. God knows why we have to bear this trouble, we do not. It is with this feeling of our own ignorance and impotence, and our entire trust in Him that we say, Good-bye to this place where I have spent nine years of my best efforts in the search for souls, and where we thought we were settled for our life work.

Only those who have gone through a like experience can understand.

OUR HOPE IS IN THEE.

We hope in Thee, O God!
The day wears on to night,
Thick shadows lie across our world,
In Thee alone is light.

We hope in Thee, O God!
The fading time is here,
But Thou abidest strong and true
Though all things disappear.

We hope in Thee, O God!
Our joys go one by one,
But lonely hearts can rest in Thee
When all besides is gone.

We hope in Thee, O God!
Hope fails us otherwhere;
But since Thou art in all that is,
Peace takes the hand of care.

We hope in Thee, O God!
In whom none hope in vain:
We cling to Thee in love and trust,
And joy succeeds to pain.

MAGAZINES.

Magazines for January:

The Century Co., New York, greets its patrons by most attractive numbers of the The Century and St. Nicholas. Among the contributors to the former are the familiar names of Timothy Cole, Frank Dempster Sherman, Brander Matthews, Thos. Bailey Aldrich, Edith M. Thomas, Thos. Moran, Ex-President Harrison and Alice C. Fletcher.

The opening article of St. Nicholas, Mowgli's Brothers, by Rudyard Kipling, and Recollections of the Wild Life, will deeply interest the boy; St. Augustine is pleasantly written and well illustrated; How Paper Money is Made, is particularly interesting; A Bird's-Eye View of the Animal Kingdom, cannot well be ommitted, nor can Palmer Cox and The Brownies. The First Stage of the Brownies Through the Union, Tom Sawyer Abroad; The Little People from Java, and even other entertaining stories are contained in this number.

D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, have the magazines for the little ones, and the boys and girls. Babyland, Our Little Men and Women and Pansy—what a trio of excellent jingles, stories and pictures. Even Babyland has a charming little serial, and in this number a very pretty colored plate, The Christchild, catches the little eyes. For children of a little larger growth, Greta Bryar will tell about Electricity and the wonders of Natural History will be described by Fannie A. Deane; A Kindergarten department will be introduced under the care of the well known kindergarten authority, Miss Sara E. Wiltse. Pansy is an old favorite, and this year will add many friends to its already large number.

Our Christian Endeavor Bulletin, Golden Discovery Papers, and Greek History in connection with the Reading Circle are among the especial attractions.

The Eclectic, Magazine of Foreign Literature, has among its table of contents Christianity and Roman Paganism, St. George Mivart; The Psychology of Labor and Capital, Robt. Wallace, M. P.; Further Gleanings from the Papyri, J. P. Mahaffy; The Subaltern in India a Hundred Years Ago; George Fox; January Days in Ceylon; Gounod, Mlle. De Bovet and Chas. M. Widor; Superstition and Fact, Andrew Lang; Shudderman Soldier, Neill Munro; The Early Life of Pepys, C. H. Firth; The Cradle of the Lake Poets, William Connor Sydney, and Womanliness and Womanishness. E. R. Pelton, Publisher, New York. $5 a year.

The Ladies Home Journal, Philadelphia, is indeed well named. Embroideries for a Dining-Room, Accessories to a Girl's Room, Quiet Walks for Girls, The Art of Evening Dressing, Literary Improvement Clubs, Games for the New Year, A Page of Household Hints, Evening Wraps, The King's Daughters, Kindergarten at Home, Flowers for Social Gatherings—How many useful, instructive and charming hints and ideas are embraced under these headings. There is also much pleasant reading by popular authors.

McClure's Magazine has entered upon its second volume, and has made rapid strides during the last twelve months. The most attractive feature is Human Documents, a series of photographs at different stages of life of popular authors with brief sketches of each person. Among the interesting articles in this number are, When She was Thirty, Jules Verne at Home, A Thousand-Mile Ride on the Engine of a Flyer, and Glimpses of Whittier's Faith and Character.

HEBREWS 6:2.

"Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands."

The Revised Version gives it, "Of the teaching of baptisms and of laying on of hands."

The margin of the Revised Version, has "washings" as an equivalent word for "baptisms." Now there are several things about this word "washings," that are worthy of special attention and about this whole verse so greatly misinterpreted, that call for special study. In the first place the Christian ordinance of baptism is never used in the plural number; whether the word refers to baptism of the Spirit or baptism of water, it is always baptism in the singular number and never baptisms. Indeed St. Paul affirms "There is one Lord, one faith, one baptism." In the second place, this word occurs, and in the plural number again, in the 9th chapter and 10th verse of this same epistle to the Hebrews, where the inspired writer speaking of the Jewish ritual service or worship—says, "it stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings—carnal ordinances imposed until the time of reformation." Here it is plain that the word has no reference and can have none to the Christian ordinance of baptism, but evidently refers to the various Jewish ablutions. This is made still more evident in the third place, that this same word occurs twice in the 7th chapter of St. Mark's gospel, in the 4th and 8th verses. "For the Pharisees and all the Jews, holding the tradition of the elders," practice a number of ablutions—washing their persons, and their hands—and even "the washings of cups, and pots and brazen vessels and of tables" or couches, and in the 8th verse. "For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the traditions of men, as the washings of pots and cups; and many other such like things ye do." Here are the only four instances where this word washings or baptisms is used in the New Testament and in three of them there is not a shadow of doubt that the word refers to the Jewish ablutions. We think that there is just as little doubt, that the word in the 6th chapter of Hebrews has the same meaning which it has in the 9th chapter. It is certainly very unlikely that the sacred writer would use the word to mean Christian baptism and then in the same epistle use the same word to mean Jewish ablutions. But now in the fourth place, the word employed for Christian baptism, or for John's baptism, and a word that occurs in Matthew, Mark, Luke, Acts, in Romans, Ephesians, Colossians, and in 1st Peter, twenty-two times in all, is a different word, of different gender, and declension, and always in the singular number, never referring to the Jewish washings but suggesting, it is true, like the other word (being akin to the same primitive) the idea of cleansing or purifying, and for that reason doubtless employed to symbolize "the washing of regeneration." We need not dwell longer on this point, it is too plain for doubt or difficulty. The sacred writer evidently means by "the doctrine of baptisms or washings," the purport, or teaching or meaning of these multitudinous and divers Jewish ablutions or washings. The next phrase is equally clear and simple, "the doctrine of laying on of hands," the meaning or purport of this act. This "laying on of hands" was familiar to a Jew. Remember this epistle is written to the Hebrews—to Christians who were raised as Jews and once were Jews—an act as frequent and as familiar to a Jew, as the "washings," more so, I suppose; for he never offered a sacrifice without first laying his hands on the head of the animal, and thus symbolically transferring his guilt over to the animal and at the same time therein and thereby confessing his sins. "The doctrine" or teaching "of laying on of hands" is the meaning and purport of this act, and that is faith in the sacrifice and the transfer of guilt to the victim. These two familiar and common Jewish usages—which took place every day and millions upon millions of times—these ceremonial ordinances, were Jewish and divinely selected and enjoined symbols of the two great graces mentioned by the sacred writer here, first, namely, "Repentance, and faith toward God." These two exercises of the soul have always been necessary, through all the dispensations of religion—or administrations of the Kingdom of God—the patriarchal, the Mosaic or Levitical, and the Christian. Repentance and faith: these are first principles of the oracles of God, as the writer to the Hebrews calls them, as well as "principles of the doctrine of Christ"—not merely, mark it, the first principles of Christianity, but "the first principles of the oracles of God," i. e., of the Old Testament Scriptures—principles that these Hebrews were familiar with or ought to have been as Jews—much more so, as now and for many years Christian believers. These Jewish washings were symbols of "repentance"—cleansings from dead works and polluted doings, and the Jewish layng on of hands, on the head of the sacrificial animal was a symbol of "faith," of the transfer of guilt to the Lamb, as even now we sing:

"My faith would lay her hand
On that dear head of Thine."

The apostle mentions two more blessings or benefits connected with these two first principles of the oracles of God, viz: "resurrection of the dead" and "eternal judgment." Here is the way these six items stand:

Repentance in the heart and life—always necessary—symbolized and enjoined in the ritual washings with their meaning and doctrine; and fulfilled and completed in the risen and glorified body and the sinless and sainted soul.

Faith in the divine mercy, symbolized and enjoined in the ritual "laying on of hands" on the sacrificial victim and its meaning and doctrine; and fulfilled and completed in the glorious and eternal judgment of acquittal. Not six separate, successive, personal and distinct Christian peculiarities, as ritualists misunderstand and misinterpret, but two great fundamental graces in every dispensation—Mosaic and Christian—but each of them in a three-fold point of view. Such a Scripture as we have been considering and expounding—indeed the whole Bible—recognizes hereby, the two great necessities of fallen man—his guilt and his depravity, and the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, makes two great provisions for these needs, and which are proffered in the plan of mercy—extending from Paradise lost to Paradise regained—justification and sanctification. The justice of God demands the one, and the holiness of God demands the other, and there are and always have been two gracious exercises of the soul (responsive to these provisions) on the sinner's part, faith and repentance, by which he becomes partaker of these benefits:

"Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee;
Let the water and the blood,
From Thy wounded side which flowed,
Be of sin the double cure;
Cleanse me from its guilt and power."

"Near the cross, a trembling soul,
Love and mercy found me,
There the bright and morning star
Sheds its beams around me.

In the cross, in the cross,
Be our glory ever,
Till our ransomed souls shall find,
Rest beyond the river."

J. HENRY SMITH.

Greensboro, N. C., Jan. 5th, 1894.

The Parson's Barrel.

"Well, parson," said Deacon Goodgold to his pastor, "that last Sunday mornin's sermon was number one prime; may I ask you which end of the barrel that came out on? Your barrel is like the widder's in Scriptur—it never seems to give out." "I am glad that my sermon suited you," replied the genial dominie, "for I got part of that at your house, part came from neighbor B——'s, and part from poor Mrs. C——, in whose sick room I spent an hour, and one hint in it came from your boy Frank, who rode by my house on 'old gray,' without any saddle or bridle. I picked up some of the best things in that discourse during an afternoon spent in pastoral visiting."

Parson Honeywell was a shrewd man, and a faithful, godly preacher. He had not a great many books; and his family increased faster than his library. His Bible he had at his fingers' ends; it was his one great unexhausted storehouse of heavenly knowledge. But he also had a book of human knowledge second only to God's Word. In the forenoon he studied his Bible, and in the afternoon he sallied out with his horse and buggy and studied his people. He rode with his eyes open, finding illustrations, like his Divine Master, from the birds of the air, the air, the flowers of the field, and the sower or ploughman by the wayside. His mind was on his sermon all the week. If he saw a farmer letting his oxen "blow" under a roadside tree, he halted and had a chat with him. He observed the farmer's style of thought, gave him a few words of golden counsel, and drove on, leaving the farmer something to think of, something to love his pastor for also. If he saw a boy on his way from school, he took the lad into his buggy and asked him some questions which set the youngster to studying his Bible when he got home. Parson Honeywell caught his congregation when they were young.

Deacon Goodgold was curious to know more about the way in which his minister gathered up that last Sunday's sermon. "Well," replied the parson, "I was studying on the subjeet of trusting God in times of trial. First I went to the fountain head, for my Bible never runs dry. I studied my text thoroughly, comparing Scripture with Scripture; I prayed over it, for a half hour of prayer is worth two hours of study in getting light on the things of God. After I had put my heads and doctrinal points on paper I sallied out to find my practical observations among our congregation. I rode down to your house, and your wife told me her difficulties about the doctrine of 'assurance of faith.' From there I went over to your neighbor B——'s house; he is terribly cut down since he failed in business. He told me that with the breaking down of his son's health, and his own break down in the store, he could hardly hold his head up, and had begun to feel awfully rebellious towards his Heavenly Father. I gave him a word or two of cheer, and noted down just what his difficulties were. From his store I went over to see poor Mrs. C——, who is dying slowly by consumption. She showed me a favorite flower that she had put into her window-seat to catch the sunshine, and said that her flower had been a daily sermon to her about keeping her soul in the sunshine of her Saviour's countenance. Her talk braced me up, and gave me a good hint. Then I called on the Widow M—— who always needs a word of sympathy. Before I came away she told that her daughter Mary could not exactly understand what it was to trust Christ, and was finding no peace, although she had been under deep conviction of sin for several weeks. I had her daughter called in, and I drew from her all her points of difficulty; I read to her such texts of Scripture as applied to her case, prayed with her, and then started for home. Your boy rode by my house on the old horse, who went along without any bridle, and stopped when he got to the bars that led in to the pasture.

"Before I went to bed I worked in all the material that I had gathered during the afternoon; and I studied out the solution to the difficulties of your wife and of your neigbor B—— and of the troubled danghter of Widow M——, and I wove the answers to such doubts and difficulties into my sermon. The cheerful experiences of good Mrs. C—— in her sick chamber helped me mightily, for faith in action is worth several pounds of it in theory. I went to my pulpit last Sunday pretty sure that my sermon would help three or four parsons there, and if it would fit their cases, I judged that it would fit thirty or forty more cases. For human nature is pretty much alike, and sometimes when I preach a discourse that comes home close to my own heart's wants, I take it for granted that it will come to plenty of other hearts in the congregation."

"Yes, parson," said the deacon, "your sermons cut a pretty broad swath. I often feel 'Thou art the man' when you hit some of my besettin' sins. I have often been wantin' to ask you why your sermon barrel has never give out, as poor Parson Scanty's barrel did before you came here. He always giv' us about the same sermon, and as I set away back by the door, it got to be mighty thin by the time it got to my pew."

Parson Honeywell turned pleasanty to the deacon and said—"I will tell you what the famous old Dr. Bellamy, once said to a young minister who asked him how he should always have material for his sermons. The shrewd old doctor said—'Young man, fill up the cask, fill up the cask, and then if you tap it anywhere you will get a full stream; but if you put in very little, it will dribble, dribble, dribble, and you may tap and tap and get precious little after all.' I always get my people to help me to fill up my cask. Good afternoon, deacon.'" —Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

Thankful for Affliction.

BY C. H. WETHERBE.

How hard it is for poor human nature to be thankful for afflictions! Who is there, while in the midst of piercing afflictions, that heartily thanks God for them? It would be exceedingly difficult to find such a person. And yet all Chritians ought to thank God for those afflictions which he brings upon them, or allows to come upon them. But how apt are we to murmur under affliction! We rally do not mean to find fault with God, but we attribute our afflictions to some other source, and blame that. We may be orthodox when free from affliction; but we are quite apt to be heterodox while enduring affliction.

Dr. J. A. Broadus says: "The Scriptures assure us that devont souls may regard affliction as but a loving Father's chastisement, meant for their highest good. In all the ages there has never been a pious life that did not share this experience. To be exempt from it would, as the Bible expressly declares, give clear proof that we are not children of God at all. Many of us could testify to-day that the sorrows of life have, by God's blessing, done us good. All of us have occasion to lay more thoroughly to heart the lessons of affliction. And oh! if we do ever climb the shining hills of glory and look back, with clear vision, upon the strangely mingled joys and sorrows of this earthly life, then how deeply grateful we shall be for those very afflictions which, at the time, we find it so hard to endure." The Psalmist says: "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy word." His afflictions brought him again into the line of duty to God. But for his affiictions, he would doubtless have continued astray from God. Surely he had great reason to be thankful for his afflictions. It was affliction at the hands of the Egyptians which was the means of the rapid increase of the Israelites. The more they were afflicted, the more they grew and multiplied. Affliction leads Christians to pray more than they would without it. Thousands upon thousands of prayers, urged by affliction, would never have been offered had Christian hearts not been afflicted, and for the good results they have been very thankful.—Herald and Presbyter.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in the new Mission Rooms, Nos. 25 and 26 of the Noel Block, on Church street, Nashville, Tenn., on January 8th, 1894.

A friend of Foreign Missions happening to drop in and observe the dilapidated condition of some of our furniture, sent out immediately and provided us with a handsome hat-rack, leather bottom secretary's chair and seven beautiful cane bottom chairs for the use of members of the Committee.

The Rev. T. R. Sampson was with us en route from the meeting of the General Assembly's ad interim Committee on Foreign Mission work, which met at Birmingham, Ala., on January 5th. Mr. Sampson gave us some interesting information as to the present condition of the Greek work, and also concerning the work he is at present engaged in as Field Secretary of the Synod of North Carolina.

Miss Emma Boardman, of Greensboro, Ala., was appointed as a missionary to China, to be sent out when the way is clear.

A letter was read from Rev. Arthur Rowbotham, of the Congo Mission, stating that the long continued sickness of himself and his wife had compelled him to retire from the work; and that the other members of the Mission concurring with him in this step, he had left the Congo Free State, and is now in England en route to this country. Mr. Rowbotham's letter stated that while he had not been in Africa long enough to accomplish much in the way of missionary work, yet, he had been able while there, and on his return home, to make arrangements with various other mission bodies and business firms, for a system of transport which has been very much needed, and will greatly add to the convenience of our missionaries at Leubo, as to the prompt reception of their supplies. Mr. Rowbotham will be in this country early in February, and will return to labor in the Home Mission work in Florida.

The estimates for the various missions were presented and approved, and the Treasurer will make remittances this month for the quarter beginning the first of January.

If our friends continue to appreciate our needs and respond to our calls as they have done for the past three months, we will be able to make full remittances for the quarter; and, we sincerely hope, to meet the General Assembly without a debt.

A letter was read from a friend in Asheville, N. C., offering to assume the support of the Rev. W. H. Sheppard, beginning with March 1st, 1894. There are now three individuals in our Church who are thus supporting missionaries. There are two or three other individuals who have been sending us contributions more than enough to cover the support of a missionary in each case, but whose contributions have not been designated to the support of any special missionary. Along this line there is room for a large development in our Church; and it is earnestly hoped that this development will come through the inspiration of these examples that have been given.

Upon the request of Bethel Presbytery the Rev. H. B. Pratt, who was sent out by that Presbytery, was transferred to the care and direction of the Executive Committee; and the Mexican Mission was directed to use Mr. Pratt as much as possible in the evangelistic work for which he has shown such eminent fitness and qualification.

Several applications for appointment as missionaries were laid before the Committee, and, according to our rule, laid over for one month for consideration.

Much other business of a routine character was transacted; and at eleven o'clock p. m., the Committee adjourned and retired to their respective places of abode.

S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

First Church, Winston:—At the recent communion nine persons were received into the membership of this church. The week of prayer was observed and the new year opens with great encouragement. A young people's society has been organized with about one hundred members. The Sabbath-school is taking on new life and interest. A Teachers' normal class has been formed which meets the pastor Wednesday night after prayer-meeting. The book used is "Preparing to Teach," and in connection with it "Teaching and Teachers."

Candidate S. M. Rankin:—Has returned from the seminary and taken charge of his field here—composed of Antioch, Red Springs and Philadelphus churches. He is in good health, fine spirits and enters upon his work full of love and zeal. We shall look and pray for a prosperous year's work for the brother. J. McL.

First Church, Greensboro:—Our church is enjoying a precious revival this week [letter dated 13th] under the ministry of Evangelist Gales, assisted by our pastor and co-pastor, the preaching being done by the former. The meeting will continue into next week. Already many precious souls from Sabbath-school children to the aged have been converted. Mr. Gales' methods are very conservative and very much like Presbyterian methods; no excitement or extra pressure, but the Bible view and the Bible way.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Missionary at Banks:—Banks church is one of the youngest in Mecklenburg Presbytery, and yet has already made a reputation for liberality and enterprise. A few Sabbaths ago we took up a subscription for the purpose of putting the missionary into every family of our church. Our ladies' society added $5 to the list, which secured twenty-five copies. This is what we needed to put into every household. There would be no lack for subscribers if all our churches could do sech a thing. J. W. S.

Warm Springs:—January 7th was a good beginning of the new year for this church, when two additional elders and three deacons were ordained and installed, viz: as Elders J. W. Stephenson and Robert Wilkinson and Deacons J. T. McAllister, Z. S. Smith and Garnet Rowan. After the services a congregational meeting was held and a call was made out for the present pastor, Rev. Wm. C. White, for his whole time, including the work at the Hot Springs, instead of one-half the time as it has been heretofore—the other half having been given to Home Mission work.

Rev. G. W. Bull:—The pastoral relation between this brother and the Cuthbert church was dissolved on 1st inst., by Macon Presbytery, and he was dismissed to the Presbytery of South Alabama.

Athens Presbytery: Christian Observer:—Rev. Groves H. Cartledge has given up its church at Maysville, and it will be served by Rev. S. J. Cartledge, his church at Gainesville giving one Sunday off for this purpose. Rev. Henry Newton has given up the churches at Mt. Hermon, Danielsville and Paoli, and they will be served by Rev. W. O. Phillips, who gives up his work at Mt. Airy and Demorest to accept a call to these churches. Rev. Henry Quigg, D. D., has given up the Lexington church, and it will be served by Rev. E. G. Smith of Washington. Rev. T. D. Cartledge has given up Jefferson, Mizpah and Thyatira, and has received a call from the church at Waynesboro, in Augusta Presbytery. Rev. L. A. Simpson has resigned at Toccoa, and that church will be supplied by Rev. H. F. Hoyt, D. D., two Sundays per month. Other changes will be made, but just what they will be is not definitely known at present."

ALABAMA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

First Church, Montgomery:—The interest of the people of the First church in Foreign Missions is increasing. The Junior Christian Endeavor Society gave $3.04 last quarter to this cause; one class of boys in the Sabbath-school gave $25.15 last year and the Ladies' Society $113.86 during the same period. The society has recently received ten new members. Capt. Kirkpatrick, whose father was once President of Davidson College, recently connected himself with the church.

There were more than a hundred at the last regular weekly prayer-meeting on last Thursday night. This is about one-fourth of the membership. The Senior Christian Endeavor Society had an excellent business meeting at the new manse on the 10th of this month. About forty were present. This society has sent contributions to both Home and Foreign Missions, besides two boxes to the Orphans' Home at Talladega. The society is very active, and greatly aids the pastor and infuses new life into almost every branch of the Church work. It is under the direction of the session.

On Sabbath before Christmas very entertaining and profitable exercises were held by the Sunday-school in the main auditory in the interest of the Orphans' Home, our Synodical institution at Talladega, and a collection of $65 was taken up, which with a previous contribution from the church, aggregated $95. The church supports two orphans.

REV. H. T. DARNALL'S NEW HOME.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

[The following letter will be highly interesting to the numerous friends of Bro. Darnall in our Synod:]

HAMPTON SIDNEY, Va., Jan. 12th, '94.

DEAR BROTHER:—I reached this my new charge on Wednesday evening the 3rd inst. We were met at the Old Point by some of our people and getting on the electric car at that place were soon at Hampton, and were taken at once to the manse. There we found quite a number awaiting our arrival and they had lamps lighted, fires burning, a splendid supper spread for us, beds prepared, a servant employed, wood and coal provided, and our pantry well supplied with all kinds of good things for the inner man. It was a happy surprize to us to be taken home at once and to be greeted with such warm-heartedness and good cheer, by our kind and generous people. We felt very much at home at once, and our household goods having preceded us, had nothing to do, but go right to work next morning putting things in their places. This we have now accomplished and are "at home" indeed to all our friends. On Sunday, though a rainy day, we had a good congregation in the morning and a larger one at night, and feel very much encouraged in the work before us, assured of the cordial support of a noble little band of earnest and intelligent Presbyterians who are thoroughly united and ready to hold up the hands of their new pastor.

It was hard to give up the good old Synod of North Carolina and the brethren of old Orange, but especially so to part with the sorrowing people among whom I had successfully labored for thirteen years, and it was certainly a contrast to leave a scene of tears and sorrow in the morning and be surrounded the same evening by faces radiant with smiles and joy. Hampton is a beautiful place, facing the broad sketch of water known as Hampton Roads. Our church is small as yet, but full of hope and zeal and ready to engage with all earnestness in the work before them. We trust that we have been rightly guided in the change and will soon have the Master's seal of approbation upon it, and we hope that though parted from many loved friends and brethren in North Carolina, we may be followed by their earnest prayers for our welfare and success in our present field of labor.

Yours in Christian bonds,
H. T. DARNALL.

HELP FOR THE WALDENSES.

MORGANTON, N. C., Jan. 4th, 1894.

To the Churches of the Synod of North Carolina:

DEAR BRETHREN:—The session of the Presbyterian church of Morganton, N. C., desire to communicate to you a few facts concerning the Waldensian colony in Burke county, and to ask your help in the building of a church and a school house at Valdese, the Waldensian village situated on the Western N. C. R. R. about eight miles east of Morganton. The colony numbers now about two hundred and fifty souls, (a fine lot of people,) strong, energetic, industrious, and full of enthusiasm. They consist of about seventy families. The success of this colony means a good deal to North Carolina, and a good deal to our church. Every Presbyterian must feel an intense interest in its success and prosperity, and will doubtless gladly contribute something to help these people in the building of a house of worship now greatly needed, and a school for the bright little children.

The settlement of this colony in Western North Carolina originated in a meeting held in the city of Rome a year or two ago, at which the crowded condition of the valleys of Piedmont, and the absolute necessity for a considerable emigration movement were discussed. A North Carolinian was present at this meeting, and suggested Western North Carolina. Dr. Gay, then in the United States, was directed to visit this section and report. Two intelligent farmers were subsequently sent from the valley to inspect the lands. Soon afterwards the Valdese corporation was organized, and a purchase made of 10,000 acres of land in Burke county for the use of the colony. The first colonists, about twenty families, arrived last spring under the leadership of their Italian pastor, the Rev. C. A. Tron. Upon Dr. Tron's return to Italy and making a favorable report of the condition of the colony and the cordial welcome extended to them by the people of the State, forty-five additional families came over and joined the colony, making the present total of 250 people. Rev. E. Vinay, who made so favorable an impression upon the Synod, is now the local pastor at Valdese. The colonists will have all they can do for some years in the way of clearing away the forests, preparing fields, and building comfortable houses. They must have as soon as possible a church building and a school house. Everything with these remarkably religious people centres in their church. The first house they built was a house for their pastor. It will require $2,000 in cash to build the church and the school house,—the Waldenses furnishing all the lumber and unskilled labor required. The church needed must have a seating capacity for 400 people, as their numbers will likely be increased by the arrival of others in a few months. Friends in Morganton have already raised for this purpose some $175.00.

Will not the pastor read this circular to his congregation, and give a Sunday collection to this very worthy object, at his earliest convenience, forwarding the amount raised to G. P. Erwin, President Piedmont Bank, Morganton, N. C.?

By order of the session.

CO-OPERATION IN NEGRO EVANGELIZATION.

On the 12th and 13th insts., the following gentlemen of the Northern Committee to whom is entrusted Colored Evangelization, viz: Rev. R. R. Sutherland, D. D., W. C. Young, D. D., E. P. Cowan, D. D, and E. R. Montford, LL. D., met in conference in Birmingham, Ala., with the Executive Committee of Colored Evangelization of the Southern Church, and with the exception of one vote, adopted these resolutions:

The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. and the Presbyterian Church in U. S. are agreed:

1. That we recognize the solemn duty laid upon us by our common Lord to work for the evangelization of the negroes in our country.

2. We believe that this work can be better done if we work together, than as at present separately.

3 We agree that the entire work now done by both Assemblies shall hereafter be conducted together, and to the work so conducted we pledged our continued confidence, prayers, contribution and moral support.

4. In view of the fact that the work done by the Northern Church has been conducted under the corporate name of the Board of Missions for Freedmen of the Presbyterian Church in the Presbyterian Church of U. S. A., in whose name property is held and to which bequests have been made, and it being deemed advisable for legal reasons that the future work of the two churches should be conducted under the same corporate power, it is agreed that said Board, constituted as hereinafter provided, shall manage and control the work of the two Assemblies, and shall make annual reports to both Assemblies.

5. Said board shall consist of twenty-two members, fifteen of whom have been or may be appointed by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in U. S. A. according to existing law, and seven others who shall be selected by the General Assembly of Presbyterian Church in U. S., and if vested rights or charter requirements shall make it necessary the Presbyterian Church in U. S. A., shall make legal and effective the selections of the said seven members.

6. We make these mutual concessions because we hope we can unitedly do better the Master's work for these people, the brethren from the South changing their present responsibilities and power over a limited work to take part in the much larger and more important work to be done by both churches; the Northern Church inviting the assistance and co-operation of their brethren from the South, because of their local knowledge and experience, and their vital personal interest in the success of these efforts to christianize and elevate this race who are all around them, touching them at every point.

7. That Rev. Dr. W. C. Young and Gen. R. D. Johnston be appointed to wait on the Assembly at Saratoga, and Rev. Dr. Cowan and Rev. A. L. Phillips be appointed to wait on the Assembly at Nashville, to give such explanation of our action as the brethren may desire, and that in case of inability to attend they shall each have power to substitute another member of the committee to represent them.

After which the committees adjourned.

ROLL OF HONOR.

At our last quarterly review, Eugenia Potts and Carroll Sherrill recited the books of the Bible forward and backward. Carroll is scarcely eight years old and made the recitation to our pastor and in the presence of the whole school. Can any little boy in the State beat that?

Statement Modified and Mr. Law Exonerated.

[Correspondence of the N. C Presbyterian.]

In justice to Rev. P. R. Law, stated clerk of Fayetteville Presbytery. I wish after reflection and some explanation, to modify my statement in last issue of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN in regard to the turning over of the action of Presbytery in question with other proceedings to the stated clerk.

This action with other proceedings was written on a sheet of paper and not in the book provided by the stated clerk for the purpose. It was our custom throughout the session to jot down proceedings on paper, and transcribe after adjournment.

It is possible that the other temporary clerk who did the principal transcribing took possession of the paper after the final adjournment and in haste at a late hour of the night, overlooked this one recorded action, which was surely made on the sheet of paper. I thought at the time and since that we were turning over everything to the stated clerk, as we all bid each other good bye and departed to our several stopping places But now I am willing to think otherwise. It is not obvious to conclude as some do, that the committee named was not put on paper but that the whole was a verbal transaction. Presbytery did not do business in that way. On minor subjects, I have no recollection of entering names of the committee as would have been the case. I am willing to exonerate Mr. Law from any blame, and place it where it belongs, on the one who did the transcribing, as I can identify in the printed minutes several actions of Presbytery that were recorded on the same sheet of paper.

Hot Springs, Virginia.

Thanks for several contributions which have come in since my last appeal, which will be acknowledged soon. I do not expect all of the 188,546 members to help in this work. But leaving off the thousands may I not ask about 546 Christian friends to help me raise this $800. That would be easy on each one. Will you be one of these? If so please send at once.

The Roman Catholics have a lot and are ready to build so I am informed. Shall we not have a Protestant Church at the Hot Springs? Think of this please and send an early reply to the pastor in his need.

To the Pastors and Sessions of the Churches of Mecklenburg Presbytery.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please see to it that the contributions to the Colored Evangelistic fund are sent to the Treasurer of Presbytery at once. If you took no collection in your church for this cause in December, will you not order one as soon as practicable?

There is in the Treasury only $49.63 available for the colored work, and our candidate at Tuscaloosa Institute has undergone great hardship because the help promised by Presbytery has not been given.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The phrase in man's extremity is God's opportunity was verified in our case a few days ago. While we were at dinner on last Saturday; the Caswell church through their representative placed on our front piazza, their New Year's gifts to their pastor, These gifts consisting of articles of which we stood in need; and among which both man and beast were remembered. One kind lady of Black River church remembered that her pastor's horse had to be fed—sent her gift also that same day. For all of which we are most thankful and take this way of thanking our friends for these gifts, and pray God's blessing upon those who so kindly remembered us.

January 28—God's Covenant with Noah.

Gen. ix. 8-18. Commit vss. 11-13.

Golden Text.—"I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth."—Gen. ix. 13.

Topic.—The bow of promise.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Two and a half chapters (from iv. 16 to end of chapter vi.) relate all that we know of the history of the world after the beginning of the conflict in Cain and Abel down to the Flood which ends the first cycle of human history, 2349 B. C.

The following points are essential to understand the course of history, and the stages of the conflict.

1. The line of Cain by apostasy from God (iv. 16) is the seed of the Serpent, (Gen. iii. 15 and John viii. 44.) Read iv. 16-24, noting the material civilization (cities, manufactors, poetry, music), polygamy (vs. 19), and godless self-reliance (vs. 24 compared with vs. 15).
2. The line of Seth by faith in the promise is the "seed of the woman," (iv. 25, 26). Note how this line points Godward and heavenward. In Enos, prayer (iv. 26); in Enoch, holiness and immortality (v. 24); in Lamech trust and hope (v.29.)
3. The fatal intermarriage and intermingling of the two lives, the sons of God (Sethites) yielding to the worldly attractions of the daughters of Cain (vi. 1, 2).
4. The hopeless corruption resulting (vi. 5, 12.
5. The destruction of the race and the deliverance of faithful Noah (vi. 7–viii. 22.)

These facts give us the point of view for the study of the lesson. Instead of leaving a corrupt race to die one at a time and so perpetuate their corruptions, God brings in the Flood upon the world of the ungodly, that a godly race may be perpetuated by a righteous family dwelling in a cleansed earth.

Second Step. Study the passage before us:

1. As to the parties to the covenant, vss. 8–10.
2. As to the covenant itself, vs. 11 (compare viii. 22.)
3. As to the token of the covenant, vss. 13–17.
4. As to the duration of the covenant, vss. 12–16.

Third Step. Make a written summary of the story of the lesson, and compare it with the one below, correcting yours or improving ours.

SUMMARY. After the Flood, God made a new covenant with Noah, his sons, their seed and all living creatures, to the effect that He would no more destroy the earth with a flood of water [nor disturb the regular course of nature, viii. 22], and gave the rainbow as the perpetual token of this everlasting covenant.

Fourth Step. Take up difficult terms and questions involved in the lesson and study them until you have as clear a conception of each as possible: for example—

From all that go out....to every heart, vs. 10. Implying that there were beasts of the earth besides those that went out of the Ark. The question of the universality of the Flood has been much discussed. That it was co-extensive with the human race the traditions of all races prove, and this is all that the Scripture narrative requires. The race probably had not extended to the sea, for maritime races might have escaped in part. The seemingly universal expressions such as those in vii. 19, 20 are only the language that any eye-witness would employ of what was in his own horizon. Compare Jean Ingelow, "High-tide off the coast of Lincolnshire,"

"And all the world was in the sea."

The Flood covered the great plain of the Euphrates and Tigris (how much more we do not know) and the Ark grounded on the table land of Armenia.

I do set my bow, vs. 13. Properly, "I have set." There is no reason to think that the rainbow had never appeared before. Its re-appearance would make it a more appropriate token of the return of nature to its established order than if it had been a new phenomenon.

A token of a covenant, vs. 13. In the first dispensation the sign of God's covenant was the presence of the cherubim at the gate of Eden. But Eden was now destroyed and the people were to be scattered over the whole earth. For a universal covenant a universal sign—one that spanned the whole heaven and could be seen everywhere—was needful. Resting on the earth and arching the heaven it was specially suited to remind man of God's abiding presence, while its coming after rain was a beautiful token that cloud and storm would not always last. When it became necessary again to restrict the covenant to a special people, the cherubim became once more the sign of God's presence, until in the final universal dispensation all signs are merged, and all promises fulfilled, in Jesus Christ,

Fifth Step. Trace out in your Bibles the topics of the lesson.

1. The Flood.
   To the world—
   A sign of the Last Judgment.—Matt. xxiv. 37–42; 2 Pet. iii. 4–7.
   But after patient warning—2 Pet. ii. 5; 1 Pet. iii, 19, 20.
   To the Church—
   A type of baptism—separation from the world.—1 Pet. iii. 21.
   A pledge of its final deliverance and inheritance of the world.—Heb. xi. 7; 2 Pet. iii. 13 (see previous context); Rev. xxi.1.
2. The covenant with Noah.
   A covenant of grace.—Gen. viii. 21.
   For maintaining natural law.—Gen. iii. 22;
   Perpetually, to all peoples, notwithstanding sin.—vs. 12; Matt. v. 45.
   For a witness of His goodness.—Acts. xiv. 16, 17.
   And a pledge of His promised mercy in Christ.—Is. liv. 9, 10; Jer. xxxiii. 20, 21, 25, 26.
   Until crowned with the rainbow (Rev. iv. 3) and surrounded by the cherubim (Rev. iv. 6), all creatures shall own Him King (Rev. v. 13).

Sixth Step. The practical moral teachings to be considered and laid to heart are the long-suffering forbearance of God, the certain punishment of sin, and especially the lesson of mercy following judgment; after the danger of the Flood and the confinement of the Ark, the new earth, the new covenant and the rainbow of promise.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

First Step. Lesson papers put away and Bibles closed.

Second Step. Question on the connection, topic, and Golden Text. Make the connection more prominent than usual so as to draw out as much of the story of the Flood as possible. Tell them what they cannot tell you.

Third Step. Draw out the story of the Lesson, until the scholars have a clear view of just what it says.

Fourth Step. Open Bibles and questions on difficult points explaining what is necessary.

Fifth Step. Take up the Bible reading and by references given out for the class to read bring out the meaning of the Flood to the ungodly and to the righteous, and the nature and meaning of the covenant with Noah.

Sixth Step. Clinch the teaching of the lesson with Shorter Cat. Qu. 20.

General. In teaching this lesson do not confine yourself to the verses before you, but take in the whole subject of the Flood, considering this as only the final chapter of the story. A good text to leave in their minds is Heb. ii. 3 (first clause).

Teachers' Exchange.

DEAR BRO. HOGE:—In the PRESBYTERIAN, December 28th, you propound various questions concerning Sunday-schools. I was struck with the almost complete identity between your school and ours, both in principle and detail.

Our school is supported by the church from the same fund out of which the sexton is paid and other contingencies. But instead of taking one Sunday in the month for a "special object for its own use" as yours does, we devote one Sabbath of each month to contingent collection on the same day the church collection is for this object, thus identifying the Sunday-school with the church, sharing in common the burdens and privileges.

In our school the first Sunday of each month is devoted to the same object as the church collection for that day. The second Sunday is for Orphans' Home. The third Sunday is for Foreign Missions. The fourth Sunday for contingent with the church.

We have not yet adopted the recommendations of the Synod; but it is my purpose to propose that we give the fifth Sunday to the Indian Missions.

You will see from the above that our school contributes to all the Assemblies objects, and the Presbytery's and Synod's too.

I was gratified to see that we had reached so nearly the same results in the conduct of our schools without any conference or knowledge of each others methods so far as I know.

I congratulate you and the whole Church in the increased usefulness your Sunday-school Department is destined to add to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN.

May you be much encouraged, and the Church of God greatly benefited by this additional labor of love for the Master, in which you have embarked.

Yours in Christ,
W. B. ARROWOOD,

There are even some who do not complain of hard times at all; a prominent merchent of Greenville having informed us that his cash trade during the week was the best he had ever had.

A World's Fair Calendar.

Anyone who has ever seen one of the "Keeping Everlasting At It" Calendars issued by N. W. Ayer & Son, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Philadelphia, is ever afterward very hard to please.

That for 1894 is a rare combination of beauty and utility—large enough to be seen, handsome enough to be admired and sensible enough to be respected. He would indeed be a queer person who would be unwilling to "keep steady company" with it for a year.

We would call this "a World's Fair edition" because of its numerous references to that wonderful event. Its ingenious suggestions on this subject will doubtless be helpful to many who visited "The White City."

It is easy to credit the statement that an increasing number of these calendars is sold each year. The price delivered (and well delivered), post paid to any address is 25 cents—evidently a tariff for protection only, as at this figure there can be no profit in it for the publishers.

The State University is to have a summer course of study. There will also be a summer school of biology at Beaufort. conducted by Prof. Henry V. Wilson.

2d. That we express our deepest sympathy for the family of our departed friend and brother in their sore bereavement. We can but weep with them that weep.

3rd. That we will also cherish his final resting place and lavish upon it some proper tokens of our affection for him whose body is united to Christ until the morning of the resurrection.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, to the Tribune, of Rome, Ga., to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and to the Davidson Monthly.

5th. That a page of the minute book of our class be devoted to the memory of our departed class-mate and brother.

Davidson College, N. C. Jan. 8th, 1894.

At Davidson College, N. C., January 5th, 1894, W. ANDREWS GOETCHIUS, in the eighteenth year of his age. The deceased was the beloved and promising son of Rev. Geo. T. Goetchius, of Rome, Ga. He entered the Junior Class in September last and had already won an enviable place in the esteem of his fellow students and of his Professors. He was a devoted Christian and had always shown himself ready to witness a good confession. The circumstannce under which he died were peculiarly distressing and shocking and the affair has filled ev ry heart with unutterable sorrow. He fell from the third floor of the main building. Though bruised and broken he lingered from Monday until Tuesday afternoon, then he fell asleep. He was conscious for twelve hours and was able to give his friends an assurance of his unfaltering trust in Jesus Christ. Matt. 11: 26.

FOR THE FAMILY.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

My grandfather's farm! yet how well I remember
Its toil and its pleasures, forgetting each sting;
The winds whistling round the old house in December,
The perfume of lilacs and roses in spring,
When long busy days brought hard work's richest blessing,
The night's dreamless sleep which tired Nature renews;
And now lapped in ease, I cannot help confessing,
Such rest my soft pillow doth often refuse.

Through long months 'twas plowing and planting and reaping,
When I was a lad growing up on the farm—
In winter, chores, chopping, and all things snug keeping,
Made hands much too busy for trifling or harm.
But evenings, when round the bright fire we were sitting,
How sweet were our homely and innocent joys;
"Grandpa" telling stories, "Grandma" with her knitting,
Nice books, too, or apples and nuts for us boys.

Then "Grandpa" would call for the worn Bible, olden,
And dear "Grandma's" needles would stop their click, click,
While there fell on the ear the Scripture words, golden,
With beat of our hearts and the clock's solemn tick.
Then followed the prayer that we might be defended
All through the long night from aught of a arm;
Petitions with praise and thanksgiving so blended,
Brought sweet slumber and peace to the Old Homestead Farm.

Items for Lady Readers.

A few hints in regard to careful packing of roses and other cut flowers are all that is necessary to understand, in order that they may be sent for long distances and be received almost as fresh as when first cut. Light wooden boxes from three to five inches deep, such as are received from the florist with mailing sized plants, are much better for packing the cut flowers than pasteboard boxes. With the least rough handling, especially if they are in a damp condition, the latter may become crushed and the flowers spoiled. Having selected a suitable box place a layer of sheet wadding in the bottom, seeing that the corners are nicely fitted, and over this place waxed paper. Allow the flowers to stand in water for some time before packing, and when the stems have taken up all the water that is possible lay them in smooth, even rows on the waxed paper. Let the stems of the upper row meet the blossoms of the lower, and continue packing close until the box is full. Then lay another piece of waxed paper over the top with a layer of sheet wadding next to the lid. It is of the greatest importance to have the box packed full. If the flowers do not quite fill it, see that the spaces are filled with the wadding. If roses are to be sent do not select the full-blown ones, but firm, half-opened buds. It will not be necessary to sprinkle them with water if the stems have absorbed a quantity of moisture; being covered closely from the air they will not wilt as they would if exposed.—Ladies Home Journal.

Uncle Sam's Expert Engravers.

If you will look at the pictures upon a one-dollar bill, you will see that the portrait of Martha Washington or of Stanton is composed altogether of curved or straight lines—the only kind of engraving that is allowed to be done in the bureau; because unless it is done in this manner, and unless the lines are cut very deep, the engravings cannot be used. Now this portrait was engraved in a piece of steel by the use of a very sharp little instrument known as a graver.

Every little scratch on the steel plate will, in printing, show a black line, so you will see how very careful the engraver has to be that he shall not make any false scratches, and that the lines shall be just so long and just so broad.

Now, steel-engraving is the direct opposite of wood-engraving. The scratches and cuts made on a wooden block will be white in the print, and it is only the uncut portions of the block that print black; while on the steel the unscratched portion leaves the paper white.

When a design has been cut on a steel plate, and it is ready to be printed, the ink is put on the plate or block, and all the cuts and scratches become filled with ink. Then the ink is carefully rubbed off of the surface, so that none remains except what is in the lines. When a piece of dampened paper is placed on the plate and subjected to very heavy pressure, it sinks into the lines; and when it is taken off it draws the ink out with it, and thus picture is printed on the paper.

It takes an engraver about six weeks or two months to complete one portrait, and a man who engraves the portraits never does any other kind of engraving. Each engraver does only a certain portion of the work on a note; no one is permitted to engrave an entire note; so that besides the portrait engraver, there are some who do nothing but engrave the figures, the seal, the lettering, the border, etc. In this way it would be impossible for an engraver to make a complete engraving for his own use, if he were dishonest enough to want to do such a thing.

Besides this manual work, some of the engraving is done by machinery, as for example the background of the portrait and of the borders, and the shading of the letters—this being done by what is known as the ruling-machine, which can rule several hundred perfectly straight lines within an inch. The intricate scroll and lace-like work around the figures on the face and the back of the note is done by a wonderful machine known as the geometric lathe. This machine consists of a large number of wheels of all sizes and in all sorts of arrangements, together with a complicated mechanism of eccentrics and rods, all of which is incomprehensible to any one but an expert machinist.

By a proper adjustment of its parts, the delicate diamond point that moves about over the face of the steel is made to work out a perfect and artistic pattern with greater accuracy and much more speed than could be done by hand; and hence this delicate and intricate part of the engraving is one of the greatest obstacles with which the counterfeiter has to contend, for he finds it next to impossible to imitate it correctly

Fortunately for Uncle Sam, the geometric lathe is a very complicated and very expensive machine, and the counterfeiter is generally a poor man; and even if he did manage to lay up enough money to buy the lathe, it is hardly likely he would live long enough to learn how to use it properly; for there are only four men in the world who understand how to operate it.

Indeed, the man who now has charge of the geometric lathe at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is the only one in the United States at the present time who knows how to manage it; and if anything should happen to him, it might tangle matters up for a while in this important branch of our Uncle Sam's big government.—St. Nicholas.

Nothing can equal it in building up a woman's strength, in regulating and assisting all her natural functions, and in putting in perfect order every part of the female system. It lessens the pains and burdens of child-bearing, supports and strengthens weak, nursing mothers, and promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment.

It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and bracing nervine, and a guaranteed remedy for women's ills and ailments. In every chronic "female complaint" or weakness, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

THE CHRISTIAN'S
SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

IS IT YOU ?

There is a child—a boy or girl—
I'm sorry it is true—
Who doesn't mind when spoken to;
Is it? It isn't you;
O, no, it can't be you!

I know a child—a boy or girl—
I'm loth to say I do—
Who struck a little playmate child:
Was it? It wasn't you.
I hope that wasn't you!

I know a child—a boy or girl—
I hope that such are few—
Who told a lie; yes, told a lie!
Was it? It wasn't you?
It cannot be 'twas you!

A girl there is—a girl I know—
And I could love her, too,
But that she is so proud and vain:
Is it? It can't be you.
That surely isn't you!

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER III.

The next morning, long before the first faint streak of dawn had appeared in the wintry sky, John Martin rose to make the few and simple preparations necessary for his journey; while Marion took a light and went to the cowshed to milk poor crummie, before she should be sent away to be sold. It was with a heavy heart that the poor woman went to perform this office for the last time; for in spite of her high-wrought Christian sentiments, and real Christian principle, she was but a weak, erring mortal after all, and human frailty would at times assert its sway over her. But still her confidence in God was never entirely overcome; and on the present occasion, even in the midst of her depression, her mind was upborne by a sense of the divine presence, and her heart was strengthened and cheered by remembrance of the promises of his Holy Word. So, mastering her feelings as best she could, she returned to the kitchen, her task over, to give her husband his breakfast, with a steadfast determination to do her duty, and to leave the rest to God. Few words were exchanged between the couple during the repast, for a deep depression still hung on John's spiri s—increased probably by the thought that the present was the last time that crummie's milk should form a part of their meal. When it was over, he rose, and taking from a drawer an old pocketbook, in which to carry the money he hoped to receive for the cow, he put on his great coat, threw his plaid across his shoulders, and, as the first faint signs of daylight now began to appear, he told Marion he was ready to set out on his journey. She accordingly accompanied him to the cowshed, and taking a halter from the wall, she attached it to crummie's neck; and then patting, for the last time, the sides of the poor animal, as she put the rope into her husband's hand, she turned away to hide her fast-gathering tears. But quickly recovering herself, she asked John when she might expect to see him home again?

"Well, even if I should be fortunate enough to find a purchaser for the cow, it will be much too late for me to leave D—— after the fair is over on Thursday; but if all goes well, you may depend on seeing me by Friday, at sunset." Hnd bidding his wife "good-bye," he turned to depart.

"The Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace!" said Marion, fervently, as she returned to her husband's "farewell;" and surely, if earnestness of appeal has power to call down a blessing from on high, John went forth on his journey blessed of God! After thus commending him to the only all-sufficient Guide and Protector, Marion stood for a few minutes watching him, as his form and that of the cow diminished in the distance, and then s e lifted up her heart in gratitude to God, as the thought crossed her mind—"How thankful I should feel, that amid my other anxieties, I don t require to warn John to be careful of the money when he gets it, as many a poor wife might have to do, if her husband was going to encounter the temptations of a fair. But John is as sober as he is industrious, and I've no reason to fear for him; the Lord be praised for it!" And so saying, Marion re entered her cottage to set about her household duties.

Leaving her for the present, we shall accompany John to D——. He had not walked more than a mile or two, when the glorious sun arose, lighting up the grand and majestic features of the surrounding landscape—beau iful even in its unfamiliar snowy aspect—and shining on the solitary pedestrian as he journeyed on, helped to shed cheerfulness and hope into the heart, which his pious wife's parting blessing had tended much to strengthen and encourage.

Then, in a little while afterwards, he heard a horse's feet behind him on the road, which had been partially trodden down by many travellers having already taken their way to D—— that morning, and looking around he saw Donald Fraser, a neighbor and intimate acquaintance of his, trotting after him, on his little, shaggy, surefooted Highland pony. John hailed him with much pleasure, for he felt glad at the thought of having a companion to help to beguile the tediousness of the journey, and to divert his mind from the subject that engrossed it; and he could not have met with one more suitable for the purpose, for Donald was an old soldier, had served in the American war, and was full of anecdote regarding his campaigns, various adventures, and "hair-breadth escapes" by flood and field." He had, some years before, retired on a small pension, and had come to reside with a married daughter, who lived about a mile distant from John. He was withal a kind hearted fellow, and being now bound like John for the fair at D——, he insisted on the latter taking his turn of the pony for a mile or so at a time, while he relieved him of the charge of the cow. This arrangement lightened the fatigue of the journey to John, while the kindness of his old neighbor---who took this delicate way of showing his sympathy with him under the present circumstances, while he refrained from expressing it in a manner more open---cheered and refreshed his heart. And thus they journeyed on together. and reached D—— about nightfall, when Donald insisted on his friend's accompanying him to the house of a relative with whom he was to lodge, under the promise of securing accommodation for him there also, after he should have obtained quarters for the night for his cow. This considerate attention, together with the hospitable welcome he received from Donald's cousin, was very cheering to John, and he began to think that the Almighty was already answering the parting prayer of his wife in thus disposing those good people to show him so much kindness; and he looked forward with more hope than he had yet done, to his success in accomplishing the object of his journey. It was late in the afternoon of the following day, however, before he succeeded in finding a suitable purchaser for the cow, but at last he was so fortunate as to dispose of it at a fair price. After giving it up to its new owner, and depositing the money he received for it in his pocketbook, he was about to leave the ground, when his friend Donald, who had accompanied him to the fair was accosted by a farmer from Inverness shire, his own native country, and having much to say to each other, they stood conversing together for some time, while John, having nothing to do, now that his business was settled waited near the old friends till they should part At length, the farmer proposed, that Donald should dine with him at the inn where he was to pass the night, and Donald, who had all the warm interest of a Highlander in his native glen, which he had not seen since he left it long years before to fight his country's battles in a distant land, at once agreed to the proposal, in order that he might hear all his friend had to tell of the few companions of his youth, who might still survive and sojourn there. John, who had been introduced as the old soldier's friend and fellow-traveller, was courteously invited to join the party, and not knowing how to dispose of himself for the remainder of the evening, he gladly accepted the invitation.

To Give Away.

"I wish I had something to give away," said a dear little woman with a large heart and very contracted, purse to me.

"Try flowers," said I, "a little can of them, and you can be as generous as you please." Perhaps one of your neighbors has had to put on her pin cushion, "Welcome, little stranger." Never mind if you do not know her very well; you may be assured she will appreciate even one flower, Again, there may be crepe on the door, sad hearts within; cut your choicest flowers—they have a language of their own; and may be more comforting than words of sympathy.

Is anything more lovely than sweet peas? They are made to give away, for the more you pick the more they come. Stand at the gate and give a bunch to school children as they pass. Instead of saying to that strange rude boy, "Get off that fence!" or "Don't swing on my gate!" give him a flower, or perhaps a rooted slip. This little kindness may save you a very choice plant or a chance to taste your own rare fruit.

Why not have a "give away bed?" Geraniums, petunias, ageratums slip so easily, you wouldn't miss a dozen or two. As for seeds, they should not be kept any more than money. Better exchange, for it's funny, but true, plants like a new place. Haven't you noticed your petunias and asters from your own seeds are not as nice, but give them to the woman around the corner, and in her yard they will flourish mightily.—Vick's Magazine.

S. P. SMITH, of Towanda, Pa., whose constitution was completely broken down, is cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He writes:

"For eight years, I was, most of the time, a great sufferer from constipation, kidney trouble, and indigestion, so that my constitution seemed to be completely broken down. I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and took nearly seven bottles, with such excellent results that my stomach, bowels, and kidneys are in perfect condition, and, in all their functions, as regular as clock-work. At the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, my weight was only 129 pounds; I now can brag of 159 pounds, and was never in so good health. If you could see me before and after using, you would want me for a traveling advertisement. I believe this preparation of Sarsaparilla to be the best in the market to-day."

SAY SOES.

Oyster juice is said to be a great clarifier of skins and remover of freckles.

One or two tablespoonfuls of ammonia added to a pail of water will clean windows better than soap.

To preserve a youthful appearance as long as possible, it is indispensable that the hair should retain its natural color and fullness. There is no preparation so effective as Ayer's Hair Vigor. It prevents baldness, and keeps the scalp clean, cool, and healthy.

If those who perspire freely would use a little ammonia in the water they bathe in every day it would keep their flesh clean and sweet, doing away with any disagreeable odour.

There are numerous ways of killing ducks and turkeys. The most humane and cleanest way is to give the bird a sharp stroke on the back of the head with a heavy rolling pin.

A pronounced success for cure of cold and bronchitis.—Mrs. Lizzie M. Meers, North Evanston, Ills., writes: "We have used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for every cold we have had; we are also subject to bronchitis in very cold weather and it has been successful in all cases."

One of the quickest known ways of dispelling a headache is to give some of the muscles—those of the legs, for instance—a little hard, sharp work to do. The reason is obvious. Muscular exercise flushes the parts engaged in it, and so depletes the brain. When your headaches, takes a stiff walk.

An Old Song.

When giants lived in ancient times,
Sing heigh, my boy, sing ho!
In good old England, or foreign climes,
Sing heigh, my boy, sing ho!
They carried things with a high old hand,
Nor strong nor weak, could before them stand,
And they killed whom they pleased throughout the land,
Sing heigh, my boy, sing ho!

But the giants didn't have things their own way when Jack-the-Giant-killer arrived on the scene. You remember the story. Recollect, too, that every age has its giant-killer. We have our giants in the form of all sorts of dread diseases, supposed to be incurable. Our Jack is in the form of Dr. Pierce, who has proven the expression "incurable diseases" to be a fallacy. Can you imagine more potent weapons to assist a woman in killing the giant-disease, than Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription? It's the only guaranteed remedy for all functional disturbances, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses of womanhood. In female complaints of every kind, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. It is simply a question of the company you prefer—the Giant or Jack!

Every person who drinks is a stockholder in the saloon, and the saloon keeper gets all the dividends. Better withdraw and invest in your families. Moderation is a virtue. What is moderation? It depends on how much a man can hold. It's a dangerous science to cultivate. I've no objection to any man following the advice of a physician and using liquor for any medicinal purposes; but you don't take Epsom salts ten or fifteen times a day.—Thomas E. Murphy.

The Outlook:

The battle between Protestantism and Romanism is yet to be fought, and, if we do not wrongly read the signs of the times it is to be fought on this continent sooner, perhaps, and with more terrible earnestness, than we have thought.

SATAN.

SATAN comes into human history at the beginning and by his craft and cunning is the beginning of sin. The second lesson in the Sabbath-school series gives us the record. There the instrument is the serpent which was possessed and used by SATAN for his evil purpose, to tempt our first parents to that fall in which came sin into the world and all its woe. The last book of the Bible calls SATAN "that old serpent," and thus brings the person and the creature's instrument into right relation and identification. His first appearance is as a liar and cunning deceiver with half truths. To the very last he is the deceiver and even in tempting our SAVIOUR he ventured to quote Scripture without its full language and complete meaning. In all the years he has added no new weapons in his attacks and temptations and very little variety to his methods. He has shown considerable acquaintance with the past history of individuals and with the history of the past in ages and generations. He has great plausibility in pleadings, great show of good intentions in his offers and great pretentions of power. But he is a creature ignorant of the future and limited in power and full of action. He has many evil spirits, spirits of darkness, in his service and associated under him in plotting against good. He has great power and the children of GOD are warned to resist him, great shrewdness and the children of GOD should not parley with him. In all prayers for the cause of CHRIST; in all labor for the good of men: SATAN stands ready to oppose and to hinder. In the parable of the sower our LORD says he is watching and snatches away the seed that it may not lodge and germinate and grow. Necromancy and witchcraft are among his servants and deeds of darkness are his favorite pastimes.

He is like a roaring lion in certain moods, making much noise in terrifying timid souls. He is ravenous as a hungry lion seeking whom he may devour. He has the power of a mighty one and uses it for evil. But this is not his best way. He often takes the garb of an angel of light and pretends that his ways are good and his ministry gentle. "We are not ignorant of his devices," in clothing vice in the garments of virtue and making scandal with a speech as musical as vice is alluring, but for the harsh undertone that many fail to catch: in making appeals to ambition and appetites by artificial allurements that fascinate and tempt and seize so completely as to shut out higher motives, still the voice of conscience and finally destroy the nobler instincts; in gilding the doors of his palaces and setting ablaze the lamps and adorning the walls with such appeals to sense and the sensuous as to dazzle and daze his victims; in persuading the simple that nature needs indulgence and denial of its cravings is a kind of bondage; in persuasions to taste a fruit sweet to the taste but a poison to the soul and a deadly drug within.

He is the enemy of GOD and all good. In the garden as such he came to rob GOD of His friends and these friends of all good. His methods then are his way ever since. His first effort is to lessen confidence in GOD and to persuade that He is not good in any restrictions of life and indulgence. He leads on to doubt the Word of GOD as to its truth and as to its contents. In this is his suggestion that possibly GOD did not say what we have thought He said, or He did not mean just what He said, or this is not His Word but only contains His Word in the Bible or it is, may be, not inspired at all. Or the Bible is not a rule of faith and life. When this is reached in any degree the way is clear to present the prize. The fruit will appear beautiful, it will be desired to make wise and to gratify appetite.

In another garden this tempter tried "the second ADAM," with half truths and with appeals to gain desired results without necessary conditions, and to think that by falling down and worshipping him, He would get the honor without the conflict and the casting out. This and more are in the first and second temptations, in the first and second gardens. In the third garden of GOD there will be no SATAN.

SATAN is also called the accuser of the brethren. In this role he appears the second time in the history of the race and in its counterpart in the body of the apostles in the book of JOB, one of the oldest of the Bible and the record of a life in very ancient times. This book deals with a problem of innocence suffering and opens a door to the unseen world to give us explanation of the mystery. When the sons of GOD went up to worship SATAN was among them—not to worship, but to accuse one of the brethren. His subjection as a creature and limitation of power and restriction of action as a servant, albeit a malicious wicked servant, all appear. The after record shows SATAN shortsighted and incapable of destroying the seed of GOD or of belittling GOD's grace. Some might have called this a fable, but for the MASTER'S word to PETER: "SIMON, SIMON, SATAN hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not." There is here a correct distinction between the "you" and the "thee" as JESUS said SATAN desired to have all the disciples, but JESUS had prayed for PETER individually. It is the lifting again of the veil of the unseen spirit world that confirms the case of JOB as related to SATAN and shows SATAN still working in the New Testament times as "accuser of the brethren." It throws light upon some cases of eminent saints for a time subject apparently to all the limited, but furious assaults and malignant machinations of the evil one. It is a partial commentary on that petition of the LORD'S prayer, which teaches us to pray; "but deliver us from evil"—sometimes translated the evil one.

In another sense than our first reference indicates, SATAN is going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. He is very plausible and of smooth tongue when he seeks to win favor, but when he gets power he uses it to devour all good. It is a well known fact that the workings of SATAN in saloon power and lust gratifications and unchecked and unsanctified ambitions devour soul, body and estate. It is upon record that gambling and licentiousness and intemperance sweep the whole sea, sink all ships and leave not a wreck behind.

SATAN is not to be found ordinarily where we expect to find him. We think of him as in saloons, brothels and gambling dens. It is a question whether his self-respect will not keep him away from many of these and it is certain he does not need to go. He has evil spirits to look after them and many who live in human bodies and are called men and women have so sold themselves to serve SATAN for lust or gain that he puts them as patrons or managers in charge of these vile places—while he goes to church. SATAN goes early to church. He tries to put the sexton out of humor and to fire the preacher with ambition or the love of applause and the choir with vanity. He seems to possess church architects to make plans for accoustics, lighting and heating in the building. And when the building is used he takes occasion to have people go to church for all but right motives, and to be critics rather than hearers and learners. If a hearer becomes anxious or interested he is watching to snatch away the word. This is more than the enemy of all good deserves to have said about him, but not all that might be said to stir us all that we may "resist steadfast in the faith."

HERE AND THERE.

WE ADVISE ALL OUR READERS NOT TO overlook our second page. The article on "The Beginning of Union Theological Seminary" by Dr. MOORE is a continuation—a conclusion too we are sorry to say—of the article on the same subject in last issue.

DR. CUYLER'S ARTICLE ON "THE Conditions of Pastoral Success" will be read with interest. Very few can hope to come up to all the conditions as set forth for there are diversities of gifts and of talents, but the article is delightful reading because of its rhytmical flow and clearness of expression and is highly instructive withal.

"THE DECLINE OF THE AMERICAN Pulpit." What a delightfully ad captandum title for a magazine article! It is written for the Forum by a minister too. Of course every one who finds pleasure in traducing or depreciating the ministry will devour it. We give a sample of this nice piece of work:

"The pulpit is losing its hold upon the life and thought of the people because it is losing its spiritual insight. * * Let it appeal to the ideal and the beautiful, and it will not appeal in vain. * * All great preachers are at heart poets, for religion is always and everywhere poetry, not prose. * * We want more poetry and less prose in the pulpit. * * How many of the educated clergy believe in original (that is inherited) sin? How many believe in everlasting punishment? in predestination? in total depravity? in the inerrancy of the Bible? If our pulpit would frankly discard these unbelievable dogmas, it would at once gain that influence and power which honesty alone can command. * * What is the doctrine of original sin but bold materialism? * * There is more of the spirit in one page of Tennyson, or Emerson, or Philip Brooks than in whole systems of school theology."

What is all this? No one need be at a loss for the word that characterizes it. It is much more than mere nonsense. One contemporary says:

"Mr. Royce claims that the pulpit in these days only draws men of inferior talents. One would think so after reading his article."

THE INTERIOR TELLS THE WHOLE tale of Why and How in the following:

"The poor fellow who wrote this "Decline of the American Pulpit" knows the tricks of his trade well enough to put a title to his piece which is in line with the prejudices of the periodical at which he aims it, and which is sensational, more or less, in its promise. Then he must make a show of solid material by getting up some statistics. The rest is for filling. As there has been no decline in the American pulpit, the statistics have no relevance, the filling is tea-grounds, neither flavor nor substance in it. The march of progress in every line is marvelous. When one happens on any field of thought or work that he has not seen for a few years he is astonished. We have been as much surprised, when, from time to time, we were thrown among ministers in other cities, and especially in country places, and in the western missionary fields, by their talent and culture, as we ever have been by a view of the progress of abstract or applied science. There is not only as much, but more, of pure, rich, and precious Biblical preaching as there was forty or fifty years ago. There is more because there is less of small polemics in it. In other respects there is no comparison. The preaching of to-day is incomparably finer than it was forty years ago. The churches are gaining steadily on the population, increasing at a more rapid ratio. That is to say that the ministers are further in advance of the people than they were—their influence over them larger than it was. But there is no use in arguing with literary bohemians. No man with a drop of human sympathy in his soul would begrudge them their little douceurs, nor inquire too particularly how they managed to get them out of hard hearted publishers.

LAST WEEK AN ACCIDENT OCCURRED on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad. The matter is remarkable as being the first accident of this sad character on this road during its entire existence. This latter fact has called attention of railroad men to another instructive fact, viz: that this road runs no trains on Sunday, nevertheless it is one of the richest and best paying corporations in the country. The New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun quotes a veteran railroad manager in a way that shows that railroad officials philosophize and moralize very justly on such things. Said the manager:

"Among the railroads the Lackawanna has been conspicuous as a Sabbath-keeping railroad, and it has also been noted for the very high character of its men. Is it not worthy of remark that these three things—the observance of the Sabbath, the high character and excellent discipline of the men, and large net earning—should go together? Railroad superintendents have frequently wondered why the Lackawanna, with no block system, should have had so few accidents, and it has been accounted for by the strict discipline which has been maintained. The fact that men entering the company's employ have known that they would not be required to do Sunday work has, no doubt, attracted to its service many men of established Christian character who had found Sunday work on other roads galling and demoralizing to them."

A WORD TO THE WISE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I sometimes feel strongly inclined to write something intended for those who do not take their own religious paper or that most excellent periodical the Missionary published at Nashville. But it would be very much like a minister preaching to his congregation upon the duties of church attendance. Those who need such sermons are not there to hear them. So also those intended to be reached by such newspaper articles never read them. If you visit them you cannot make them sensible of what they are losing in this way. What is to be done? How can they be reached? Of one thing I feel sure, that no real child of God can carefully read these periodicals without being deeply interested in the knowledge thus acquired, and no such person can possess this knowledge and not feel it to be a great privilege to contribute his means according to his ability and even to the extent of self-denial, to meet the urgent calls that are made to advance the various interests of Christ's cause.

But it is certain that no one can be interested in that, about which he knows nothing. Every one owes it to himself as well as to God to use such opportunities as are within his reach to acquire a knowledge of what is being done, and what is needed to advance the Redeemer's kingdom. Such knowledge is a stimulus to zeal and activity such as every one needs to promote his own spirituality, and his loss in this respect by neglecting this opportunity is incalculable.

Respectfully yours,
J. C. WHARTON.

[We thank our good brother and kind friend for the very plain, clear and sensible words above given. It is seldom more good common-sense is expressed in the same compass. He asks what is to be done? We will suggest what may be done by stating what is done. Take a congregation we have in mind. The pastor is so fully persuaded of the importance of the PRESBYTERIAN to his work that he personally acts as agent in his congregation, and he sends an exceedingly large list and keeps it up year by year, by looking after renewals and collections.

All pastors cannot do that it is said. May be not, but very many certainly can. However, if the pastor cannot do it he probably can secure an active, dead in earnest man or woman in his congregation, who backed by his influence and hearty endorsement will go out and make a thorough canvass. There must be first a willing mind—a persuasion that one is serving the KING. No agent, it goes without saying, will do anything who starts out to disparage the paper or to agree or sympathize with those who do. We sometimes get letters from persons intending to act as agents, the very tone of whose letters show they will effect nothing, perhaps do worse than nothing. We are not grumbling but simply trying to answer frankly our correspondent's question. We are working for the MASTER; using our energies in His cause. Trying to give our people a paper fully worth the price we ask for it. Not only that, we dare to say we are doing that very thing—thanks to helpful friends whose inestimable aid we never overlook. And now we cannot do more—or can do very little more. It is for others to put the paper in the families of the Church. And we have indicated how.]

The Monthly Concert of Prayer.

The valuable calendar, prepared by the editor of The Missionary, a copy of which should be in every family of the Church, calls, twice this month, on the 15th and 29th, for special prayer, that there may be a Revival of the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Missions, in all the churches.

This call is timely and necessary. There are many churches in which it has never been observed, and there are not a few in which its observance has been neglected.

Dr. George Smith has said that, prayer hearty and persevering was the origin of Modern Missions. This is true historically. It is just one hundred and fifty years, exactly, since in 1744 a little company of Scotch ministers began the Concert of Prayer, which spread, in two years, not only over Great Britain but reached even the shores of North America—in the form a memorial—inviting all Christians to unite with them for the next seven years.

It was on this that Jonathan Edwards wrote, and his work came into the hands of William Carey. But it is no less true that the present success and future increase of this work, is dependent upon the faithful use of this same God-given instrumentality.

How can we get all the churches to exercise it?

Long ago, Dr. Duff said, the hitch is with the pastors. This is assuredly, to a large extent, the case still. The people are generally interested in what the pastor is interested in. If Mission work does not have a prominent place in his sermons, his prayers, his conversation—if it is not brought clearly before the Sabbath-school, there will be little interest felt in it in his congregation.

Possibly his own want of interest, as theirs, is due to want of knowledge on the subject—and the multiplicity of claims upon him has kept this matter undeveloped in his head and heart and work.

The revival of the monthly concert will afford the occasion for definite study and instruction, and will lead inevitably, to the more thorough organization of the energies of the Church into associations for men, women and children. When these have once been formed, the Concert of Prayer affords the common ground for meeting, "bringing in the gifts" and provoking one another to better works.

A judicious committee, composed of a representative for the several organizations for men, women and young people, with the pastor possibly, at the head, can arrange a program for each month, that will make this concert one of the most instructive, entertaining, inspiring and helpful services of the church.

It is unfortunately true that missionary meetings have a different reputation, but this is due, we are convinced, not to the subject which is endless and fascinating in its variety, nor to the unwillingness of Christians to consider this special branch of the Church's work, but chiefly because of the want of tact, common sense and forethought, in those who have charge of the exercises.

We will add a word on this subject again, but we would urge all churches, with or without a pastor, to begin at once the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Missions.

It will help the pastor, it will lead to the organizing of societies where they do not exist, it will increase their efficiency, where they already exist.

There is no truer reason of the Church's life than the interest manifested in missions. The Monthly Concert will create that.

THE SILENCE OF LIFE.

Neither a song nor a sign,
  Neither laughter nor tears;
Calmly the days go by,
  And make, ere we know, the years.

How shall we count the time
  That has nothing to mark its flight,
That is not sad nor sublime,
  That is scarcely dark or light?

What are the years that thus
  Silently steal away?
What can they do for us
  That a word should bid them stay?

O better than strife or noise,
  Better than stir or rush.
Better than pains and joys,
  Sometimes, is the shade and hush.

For the weary amid the fight,
  And the weak amid the strong
It is good to come from the light,
  And away from the gladdest song.

For the silence means the rest,
  And the quiet means the prayer
And the weary and oppressed
  May cast away their care.

And lie at the feet of God
  In the peace and repose, till at length,
As flowers spring up from the sod,
  To the soul come joy and strength.

THE BEGINNING OF UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

II. DEVELOPMENT UNDER DR. RICE, 1824–1831.

The whole endowment of the Seminary on the day of its opening consisted of about $10,000. There was in addition a contingent fund of about $1,000 per annum, made up of contributions from the churches of the Presbytery. But there was no building as yet, nor even a site for one. Both however were soon provided, thanks to the ability and energy of the indefatigable founder. Just south of the College grounds, distant scarcely an eighth of a mile, lay a handsome piece of woodland, rising from the road with a gentle ascent, and affording a most desirable location for the proposed edifice. The owner of this tract, Mr. Martin Sailer, a resident of the neighborhood, was prevailed upon to give about five acres for the purpose in view, and there the site of Union Seminary was fixed. The place was already hallowed ground, for, as Dr. Rice learned after he had obtained it, it was the very spot to which the students of Hampden-Sidney College who had been awakened in the great revival under the preaching of the Rev. John Blair Smith, nearly half a century before, were accustomed to resort for secret and social prayer. Early in the summer of 1824, on the site sanctified by such memories, Dr. Rice laid off with his own hands the ground-plot of what is now the eastern end of the Seminary building, and in 1825 it was finished, at an outlay of about $8,000. In writing to his friend, Dr. Woods of Andover, that he had entered upon the occupancy of the house with his family and students, he adds, "May God make it His habitation, and imbue all here, and all who will be here, largely with His Spirit."

This building, though ample at first, was outgrown in a few years by the increasing number of students. There were only three at first, and four in 1825, but there were nine in 1826, fifteen in 1827, twenty-two in 1828, twenty-seven in 1829, and thirty-eight in 1830. In 1827 two students, Andrew Hart and John J. Royal (grandfather of one of our present students), who had fitted up a room in the garret at an expense of nearly $100, requested the Board to repay them $40, which was granted; and in 1828 Dr. Rice was authorized to procure a suitable stove for the garret room. Unfortunately for those of us who would like to know how to economize in fuel, it is not stated in the records what the two students did to keep from freezing during that first winter.

In the same year, with a view to reducing the expense of boarding, it was recommended that "a suitable lot of ground should be set off for the use of the students, from which, in taking necessary exercise, they might raise a sufficient quantity of all sorts of vegetables for their own use." This plan was actually adopted and seems to have partially succeeded. Ten years later we read of an attempt to reduce the price of board to $4.50 a month, the quality of the fare not stated. Had this attempt been successful, its authors might have gone into history as the real discoverers of the philosopher's stone.

From the very beginning Dr. Rice and the Financial Agent, the Rev. Robert Roy, were industriously adding to the funds, so that in about three years, besides a valuable library, purchased from Dr. Rice at a cost of some $8,000, liberal subscriptions had been secured for the endowment of two professorships, one by friends in New York and the other by friends in Virginia and North Carolina. The New York Professorship was devoted to the support of the teaching of Oriental Literature. The first incumbent of this chair was the Rev. Hiram P. Goodrich, who came to the Seminary as Dr. Rice's assistant in 1827, and was elected Professor the following year.

In 1828 we find Dr. Rice again in the North, raising funds for additional accommodations, and writing back to a friend that the result of his expedition "will be somewhere between $35,000 and $40,000." That additional accommodations were necessary may be seen from the following statements made in a letter to his friends in Boston: "On my return home, I found that we were to have near thirty students in our seminary. Our building is only fifty feet long and forty wide. And in this contracted space we have two profeesors with their families, and our students, except two or three, who get lodging in the neighborhood. One room not eighteen feet square serves for our library and lecture room and chapel. The professors have to study in their wives' chambers. The students are obliged to live three in a room, and when the weather admits of it, to seek praying places in the woods." Such facts were not presented in vain, for we find that in 1829 two commodious residences for professors were erected, one by contributions from these friends in Boston, and hence called "the Boston House" (now occupied by Dr. Hersman), and the other by contributions from North Carolina, and hence called "the North Carolina House" (now occupied by Dr. English).

To the original house erected by Dr. Rice, the present main building was added in 1830. The platform in front is a later addition. It was built in 1846, two windows being cut down into doors. Before that, the entrances were through the chapel and the basement. This landing was not covered until 1891.

In 1826 the Seminary was taken under the care of the General Assembly, the Trustees of that body taking charge of the funds, and in 1827 the Presbytery of Hanover surrendered the institution to the joint management and control of the Synods of Virginia and North Carolina. In commemoration of this copartnership its name was changed to Union Theological Seminary.

In 1831 the great founder died. Enough has already been said to show that John Holt Rice, whose portrait hangs over this rostrum and to whom the memorial tablet in the rear wall of this building is dedicated, was an epoch-making man, a scholar of rich and varied attainments, a prophet of clear and far-reaching vision, a man "that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do," and at the same time a leader of extraordinary enterprise and skill in practical affairs. The institution began, as we have seen, without buildings or adequate equipment of any kind, but by his ability, energy and heroic faith, he carried it to speedy and splendid success, making it in an almost incredibly short time one of the leading theological schools of the country. Within seven years it had secured a library, ample buildings for lecture rooms, chapels, dormitories and residences, and had nearly forty students and three instructors, (the third, appointed in 1831, being the Rev. Elisha Ballantine, father of Dr. Wm. G. Ballantine, now president of Oberlin University).

In further proof of the far-sighted wisdom of this remarkable man, hear these characteristic expressions: "The principal objection to theological education in these insulated situations [i. e., with private ministers here and there] is, that the young men know nothing of the spirit of the times; but go forth as cold and dead in relation to all works of Christian benevolence as though they had lived a hundred years ago. Now we want men all on fire, and at the same time so acquainted with the state of the world, that they will be ready to take hold, at the right place, of any work of Christian love that Providence may set before them."

Again: "Our Seminary shall be based on the Bible; and we will know no isms there but Bibleism. I am sure that the Bible will afford good support to sound Presbyterianism, and if it will not, why let Presbyterianism go."

Again: "The most fearful sign of the present times is the rising spirit of controversy and disputation, much like that which broke out in the time of the Reformation." Instead of directing all their energies against rampant infidelity and popery, "evangelical men are disputing, some for old orthodoxy, and others for new metaphysics." He had a decided distaste for metaphysics, and an utter abhorrence of acrimonious and barren controversy. This pacific spirit and large charity exposed him, as it does all others of like liberality, to the suspicion of narrow-minded brethren even in his own church and to the charge of sacrificing essential portions of our system of doctrine.

In regard to another great subject of controversy he says: "I am most fully convinced that slavery is the greatest evil in our country, except whiskey; and it is my ardent prayer that we may be delivered from it." But at the same he deprecates the dangerous fanaticism of the anti-slavery societies then forming.

Such was the father of Union Seminary, a wise, large-minded, loving man, deeply pious, thoroughly sound, rightly progressive.

CONDITIONS OF PASTORAL SUCCESS.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

Used in their widest sense the words "pastoral success may cover the whole domain of a minister's work in gathering, guiding, instructing and spiritually upbuilding the church committed to his charge. Of his duties as a good citizen and philanthropist I need say nothing. Nor, while of making books as about preaching there is no end, need I discuss the preparation and delivery of sermons. The pulpit is not the minister's only province, or his only place of power. He must gather auditors to listen to his gospel-message; and to make that message effective in converting souls, in consoling and strengthening his flock, and building them up in Christian living, he must labor zealously outside of his pulpit as in it. The chief end of a minister's work is to make bad people good and good people better; and to this he must devote himself not only on one day, but every day of the week.

First of all he must gather a congregation; and as all congregations are liable to constant diminution by deaths and changes of residence, he must be filling up the gaps thus created. He can do but little good to those who do not like him, and none at all to those who do not hear him. Therefore he should be as assiduous in winning hearers as enterprising merchants are in winning customers. An enormous number—probably an increasing number—of people in every community are non-church-goers. This is partly the fault of the ministry, who might bring many of these "outsiders" into the house of God if they would set about the right way to do it. Everybody likes to be noticed; and everybody—rich or poor—appreciates a personal kindness. It is the business of a soul-winner to get hold of every person whom he can possibly reach. A friend of mine was called, three years ago, to the pastorate of a prominent church in a small interior city. He found his very large edifice for worship only one-third filled, and that by cultured and well-to-do people. He determined to fill the house, and from the non-church-going class. Instead of relying entirely on pulpit attractions, he put himself into personal contact with as many people as possible—after the good fashion of Christ's apostles who dealt not with masses but with individuals. He formed the acquaintance of young men and also of plain laboring people, and gave all of them a hearty invitation to his church. In order to put the pew-rentals of a large number of pews at a merely nominal rate (for he did not encourage the "dead-head" principle) he persuaded his rich parishioners to contribute a guarantee-sum which would meet all deficiences in church-income. The result of his experiment is that his church is already well filled and is crowded on Sabbath evenings. Sensational devices he has eschewed; and his reliance has been on the scriptural and apostolic principle of reaching and winning individual souls. This is the clue to all solid and enduring pastoral success. Jesus Christ's chief work was not with "masses" but with individual men and women. His profoundest theological discourse was uttered to a single Pharisee in a private room; His longest recorded conversation was with a poor sinful woman beside Sychar's well.

In pursuance of this sound principle, you who would be successful pastors must keep yourselves in close and constant touch with every person in your congregation. The secret of popularity is to take an interest in everybody, high or humble. A great element of power with every message-bearer of Jesus Christ is heart-power; for the vast majority of people are reached—in religious things—more through their affections than through their intellects. They all crave sympathy, especially in times of trouble. If you will make yourself at home in everybody's home, if you will go often and visit their sick rooms, and kneel beside their empty cribs, and their broken hearts; if you will go to the business men in your congregations when they have suffered reverses and give them a word of cheer; if you are quick to recognize the poor, and every little child you meet; if you do all this heartily, you will weave a cord around the hearts of your flock that will stand almost any strain. Having thus won them, you can hold them to your pulpit, and may hope to win them to Christ and a Christian life. Such parishioners will condone your poorer sermons (for no minister always strikes twelve), and they will endure very close pungent shots without flinching.

There are two sources from which you will draw material for your discourses—books, especially the Book, and from living men around you. The minister who neglects either, commits a fatal mistake. In one of his vivacious letters James Russell Lowell says "books are good dry forage; we can keep alive on them; but after all men are the only fresh pasture" The Bible is very largely biographical. Every pulpit needs to be vitalized by close contact with living men and women, rather than with lifeless books; many of the best practical discourses that you will deliver will be made out of the material gathered among your own congregation. They will give you almost as many sermons as you give them. By constant loving intercourse with the individuals of your flock, you will discover their peculiarities, their wants, their trials and their temptations. It will also enable you to clear up the difficulties and to solve the doubts which trouble many minds; and a close personal talk will often accomplish more than a score of sermons. If many a minister would take part of the time which he now spends in elaborating his discourses—and often frying all the unction out of them—and would devote it to thorough visitation of his people, he would have a bigger congregation, and many more conversions to Christ. The fresh morning hours are the best for study; by noon let him lock his study-door, and sally off into a tour among his flock. If he is systematic and industrious he can easily manage to visit every family even in a large congregation at least once in each year, and as much oftener as cases of sickness or other circumstances may require.

Another advantage of this individual method of pastoral oversight is that it enables the pastor to organize his people in Christian work. There is a vast difference between preaching to a mass-meeting on Sunday, and building up a strong, compacted and effective church. The mass-meeting may be far more imposing to the eye, but beyond the sowing of many precious seeds of truth in many hearts the actual spiritual results may be very delusive. It is slow work and hard work to build up—with the aids of the Holy Spirit—a solid and efficient church; but when it is once done a great many things are done. Such a church carries with it Sunday-schools, mission-schools, a society of Christian Endeavor, missionary societies and various other enterprises of a charitable or reformatory character.

It becomes a spiritual banyan-tree, dropping the branches of its beneficence into manifold places. Every good preacher is not—like Norman McLeod, Spurgeon, Newman Hall, Dr. Tyng and Edward Judson—a good organizer. Even if you are not gifted with great executive ability, yet common-sense, godly zeal and industry will enable you to develop and to guide the spiritual activities of your flock. Be an untiring and enthusiastic worker yourself. Every minister's personality ought to be a charged electric jar emitting its energies into all with whom he comes in contact. Emphasize from your pulpit the duty and the joy of unselfish labors for the Master, and set every one to work that is capable of lifting a pound. Study not only theology, but sociology; for the area of activities for our churches widens every year. If your young converts and new members are not trained into activity from the start, they are likely to continue unproductive drones to the last. Enlarge your church machinery as fast and as far as you have men and money to propel them; but don't have more wheels than power. You can create wheels, but you cannot create power in the spiritual world any more than in the physical world. The only power that can maintain steady activities and produce spiritual results comes from heaven; the church that is mightiest in prayer is apt to be the mightiest in work.

I have thus briefly noted some of the conditions of pastoral success. They turn chiefly on two points. The first one is that every pastor should aim—like Napoleon—to be a master of details, and to have his eye on every individual in the ranks. Men do not go to heaven or hell in regiments, but one by one. The second point is that all Sabbath work in the pulpit and all pastoral work out of the pulpit should converge upon one great purpose, viz., to bring all these individual souls to Jesus Christ. With such concentration there will be no waste of forces. When you thus work you may feel sure that you are working on the lines that God and human experience both indicate; and when we lay our plans on God's lines, and seek the aid of the Holy Spirit, we are sure of success.

How Love Grows.

Gratitude is seldom a source of love. We are not likely to love those who have done most for us, as we are to love those for whom we have done most. Love grows by serving, not through being served. There is a sad side to this truth, in the fact that those whom we love most dearly, and for whom we are doing most, cannot, in the very nature of things, love us as we love them. But there is always an inspiration in this truth; for it tells us that we are to get our gain from loving, in simply loving. The only way to love aright is to give love freely, hoping nor nothing again. Thus, and thus only, can we be sure of receiving what we hope for.

Theology of Prayer, as viewed In the Religion of Nature and In the System of Grace. By Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., LL. D., Richmond, Va., Presbyterian Committee of Publication—Price $2.00.

To those acquainted with Dr. Palmer's lucid style, the skill with which he prosecutes theological research and the success he attains in unfolding that which was complex and enlightening that which was dark, it would be enough to merely state the authorship of the treatise before us; this at least would fix its merit and determine its great value.

The work is not simply a discussion of the nature, or an analysis of prayer, with a setting forth of the duty and requirements pertaining thereto, but it is a masterly refutation of the objections urged by different classes of skeptics and a presentation of the Relations of Prayer to the Office of the Father, to the Office of the Son, as Revealer of Duty, as Redeemer of men, as Intercessor for His people and as Mediatorial King; also of the Relations of Prayer to the Office of the Spirit, as Inspiring and Illuminating the Word, as the Bond of Union between Christ and His people, as the other Comforter, and as a Seal and Earnest. It is a delightful book in its force and clearness, gotten up in admirable typographical shape, and ought to be in every library.

PATRIOTISM IN HOME MISSIONS.

Under the blessing of God this is our country. It is to be the home of our children's children to the latest generation. In the future it is to wield an influence greater perhaps than that of any other country in moulding the future of this world's history. Christians are charged with the duty, and honored with the privilege of saving this country for Christ. We say of saving it, for every power of evil is assaulting the very foundations of Christianity in this land.

Seventy missionaries are now in the far South and Southwest to whom the Assembly Committee cannot promise one dollar of support until the January contributions reach the Atlanta treasury. Fifteen additional missionaries should at once be added to this force, and thirty church buildings should be erected in 1894. Churches are asked to raise for this missionary work a sum which will average, the church over, seven and a half per cent. of the amount paid by them for pastors salaries, (that is the amount paid by congregations to supply themselves with the preached Word) during the fiscal year which ended with April 1st, 1893. This is a reasonable request. A number of Presbyteries are accepting it as their guide.

The contributions of Sabbath-schools, societies and individuals will be accredited to the Church. Individual contributions from Christian patriots are solicited at onee.

Remit to Assembly's Treasurer, W. A. Powell, Atlanta, Ga. The month of January has nearly passed. Do not delay.

Respectfully,
J. N. CRAIG,
Secretary.

The Willing Shoulder.

"Why do you not join the church?" said an aged bishop on the frontier many years ago to one who had talked much and loudly of his interest in such matters. "I would, Bishop," was the reply, "if there were not so many bad men in the church. I am waiting to find a perfect church." You will never find it, my young brother," said the bishop, sadly; "for (unless you claim for yourself more than I think you will care to,) when you once have joined it, it will cease to be a perfect church."

And, therefore, brethren, instead of looking for that ideal which our own infirmities make as yet impossible, why will we not bring our shoulders to the task of advancing that fellowship which, despite its human imperfections, has God for its founder, and Christ for its leader and King? For some two thousand years this Divine society has been in the world. What volumes of obloquy have been hurled against it? The sneers which you may hear to-day, if you will, are every one of them at least a thousand years old. And what in all this time has criticism done? What better thing has it given us? What nobler truth has it brought to light? What worthier master can it offer us? I open that letter of Paul's to the church in Philippi and I read:

"Wherefore God hath highly exalted him and given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow." Tell me, O critic and doubter, what name will you write above that name? The world is to-day some twenty centuries older than when Jesus of Nazareth entered it. Search it round from sea to sea, and from shore to shore, ransack the pages of history and the monuments of the past. Gather the philosophers of the old world and the new. Lead forth the teachers who are worthy of our confidence and deserving of our homage, and tell us which one among them all you could bid us to substitute for the Christ of the Gospel?

We hear much in these days of a destructive criticism whose fruits are manifest on every hand. But let us not mistake that which it has destroyed. It has destroyed the faith of the weak and the credulous and the unstable. But against the truth of Christ it has hurled itself in vain. That endures as the Church endures to which he has committed it. And that Church is his body, its future is in his keeping, and its fellowshiping is in his fellowship no less. Come then, my brother, and claim your privilege to share this brotherhood and then to serve your Master in the ranks of his disciples. There is a place for you to fill. There is a work for yon to do. Put your shoulder to the task, and then "call upon the name of the Lord.'—Bishop Potter.

Our Guide.

"He shall guide you unto all truth."

It is a beautiful saying of one of our poets when speaking of our birth he says: "Every soul leaves port under sealed orders; we cannot know whither we are going or what we are to do till the time comes for breaking the seal." But I can tell you something more beautiful than this. Every regenerated soul sets out on its voyage with an invisible captain on board, who knows the nature of our sealed orders from the outset and who will shape our entire voyage accordingly if we will only let Him. Only here comes the difficulty.

We insist on directing our course according to our own wisdom. Hence the coast is lined with memorials of such as have "erred from the truth and made shipwreck of the faith." Guiding or guided? Here is the question. Whether we shall make our own plans and choose our own way and then ask the Holy Spirit to prosper us therein; or whether we shall yield ourselves utterly to the Spirit to shape and guide our life according to the divine pattern.

Take this invisible Pilot; give the rudder of your wills into his hand; let him open the sealed orders of providence by which you are to sail. Holy Spirit within us, hast Thou been as it were asleep in the ship because of our drowsiness of unbelief? Awake and take command. We resign to Thee the captaincy of our lives and gladly, reverently, yield to Thee. Guide us withersover Thou wilt, for Thou always guidest according to the will of God.—Dr. A. Gordon.

The Everlasting Friend.

Earthly friendships do much to brighten life, says Rev. T, J, Telford, in The Quiver. That man is poor indeed who has no congenial spirit with whom to take fellowship. David found in Jonathan a friend sticking closer than a brother. The prince's timely warning saved the life of the son of Jesse; his love gave the shepherd minstrel courage to bear the bitter troubles of banishment and persecution. But even this friendship, tender and beautiful though it was, lost much of its joy through separation, and it was soon broken off by death. David's lament shows what comfort had come into his life through the dead prince's love. "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleasant has thou been unto me; thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women." It had supplied sympathy in sorrow, and strength to face a rough road of exile and wandering. Such friendships have become the chief joy of many another troubled life. Men have loved to pour out their hearts to a loyal friend, and have felt that the way became brighter and easier to tread because they were not left to bear their load alone.

Yet, however much human friendship may bless our lives, the friendship of Christ brings a peace and joy which no earthly love can bestow. To have the smile of Jesus in our homes, that is, indeed the "chief good." Our lives are bleak and gray till God lifts upon us the light of His countenance. Then follows a change like the dawn of day upon the mountains. All nature is hushed as we wait in breathless expectation for the first gleam of light. At last it comes, bringing sunshine and renewed energy to a slumbering world. The friendship of Jesus thus transforms our lives. The world's best joys grow brighter and better when He stands at our side. Henry Martyn once said that since he knew God after a saving manner, poetry, painting and mucic had gained a charm which they never possessed before. The home at Bethany was transformed by the coming of Jesus, and like joy is offered to all who welcome Him.

Let Self Alone.

Think as little as possible about any good in yourself; turn your eyes resolutely from any view of your acquirements, your influence, your plan, your success, your following—above all, speak as little as possible about yourself. The inordinateness of our self-love makes speech about ourselves like the putting of a lighted torch to the dry wood which has been laid in order for burning. Nothing but duty should open our lips upon this dangerous theme, except it be in humble confession of our sinfulness before God.

Again, be specially on the watch against those little tricks by which the vain man seeks to bring round the conversation to himself, and gain the praise or notice which his thirsty ears drink in so greedily. Even if praise comes unsought, it is well, while men are uttering it, to guard yourself by thinking of some secret cause for humbling yourself inwardly to God, thinking unto what these pleasant accents would be changed if all that is known to God, and even to yourself, stood revealed to man.

Place yourself often beneath the cross of Calvary; see that sight of love and sorrow; hear those words of wonder; look at the Eternal Son humbling himself there for you, and ask yourself, as you gaze fixedly on him, whether he, whose only hope is in that cross of absolute self-sacrifice and self-abasement, can dare to cherish in himself one self-complacent action. Let the Master's words ring ever in your ears: "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?"—Bishop Wilberforce.

Always Ready.

There is no time to stop and prepare for the journey of death, even if we could. God demands the last day's labor as well as the first. He seems to say: "Never mind death. I will take care of that. It is to you to take care of life." Just in the right time the hand will be laid on our shoulder, the word whispered in our ear. We must leave the sewing undone, the house unswept, the plow in the furrow, the story untold, the picture unfinished, the song unsung. We may not, perchance, even kiss our loved ones goodby. But let us so strive to live that we may say: "'Yes, Lord, I am ready, always ready; for I need no money or luggage on this journey. My hand is in thine, like a trusting child. I am glad to be nearer to thee, Father, to feel more closely the warmth of thy breast. What I have missed and failed in thou knowest; my poor, feeble, futile efforts to serve thee thou knowest also. There is no prop nor stay but in perfect trust. It is all the cloak or covering I need. I have lived on the river's brink all my life; now I am to cross with the Great Pilot. I thought I knew life here. Oh, no! it was an illusion. Now I am to live, indeed."—Christian Register.

St. Andrews Church, Wilmington :—This church held its annual congregational meeting Wednesday evening, the 17th. Encouraging and gratifying reports were made from the Session, Deacons, Sabbath-school, Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society, Church Aid Society, King's Daughters, Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip and Church-debt Committee. More than $5,000 was received and disbursed in the year 1893. During the year forty-three members were added, twenty-nine on examination and fourteen by letter making a net gain, after all losses, of twenty-seven. During the year five new elders and five new deacons give a session of nine elders and a board of ten deacons. The church has paid the pastor's salary and all current expenses, leaving a small balance besides giving $1,900 to beneficence and over $800 to church debt. New committees and enlarged plans for the present year were heartily approved. Besides improvements of the lecture-room and helping the poor at home, the different societies have provided for an orphan at Barium Springs, two children in China, one hundred dollars for the work of the Presbyterial Committee and have undertaken the support of Dr. James B. Woods, as a medical missionary in China. One of our members gave one hundred and fifty dollars to Presbyterial Home Missions for the work in Brunswick county. The pastor reported having held meetings in other places, making an average of five per week for the year and making more than a thousand personal visits.

The Synodical Evangelistic Committee :—We see it stated, and no doubt correctly, that this committee assembled in Greensboro last week and elected Rev. Wm. Black, Synodical Evangelist, in place of Rev. E. W. Smith resigned.

Rev. John McCarthy :—The churches of Wilmington on Sabbath last had the pleasure and the profit of hearing Rev. John McCarthy, who has spent twenty-seven years in China as a missionary in connection with the work of the China Inland Mission. He did much during his stay to enlighten our people upon the great work done and doing by the great missionary agency with which he is connected.

Graham Street Church, Charlotte :—Last year we received sixty-nine members in Graham Street church, forty-five by examination and twenty-four by letter. Lost by dismissal ten, died three, suspended thirteen. Total twenty-six, which leaves a net gain of twenty-three.

Stevens Church, Mecklenburg Presbytery :—The Rev. R. C. Morrison, of Matthews, was installed pastor of Stevens church on the 13th inst. Rev. S. W. Newell preached the sermon, presided, propounded the questions and delivered the charges to pastor and people.

Davidson Church :—On Sunday, January 7th at Davidson, Dr. Henry Lewis Smith and Dr. Jno. P. Monroe, were installed ruling elders in Davidson College church. And the 14th inst., Dr. W. S. Currell and Mr. Robt. Query were installed as deacons in the same church. Rev. R. G. Pearson begins a meeting at Davidson, on the 4th of February.

Goldsboro :—The members of the Presbyterian church, gave their new pastor Rev. F. W. Faries a reception at the manse, on the evening of Thursday, 4th inst. It was largely attended by other denominations as well as their own, and was much enjoyed by all. One received on profession of faith Sabbath 7th, and received the ordinance of baptism at the evening service.

Acknowledgment :—Rev. R. E. C. Lawson writes: It is customary when special kindnesses have been received to tell it to the brethren. But I am merely going to give you a few notes and if you see fit you may cull an item for the church news column. We had a quiet Christmas here at Alamance, but still I think an especially pleasant one in many respects. On Monday the 25th we had a treat for our Sabbath-school. It was very pleasant and passed off without a jar. It was not a tree, but the gifts—all alike and two hundred and fifty in number were hung in different colored Tarleton bags upon poles rising one above and behind another; with holly and cedar banked below, behind and above. It was very pretty and each bag contained an orange, some candy and raisins. In regard to gifts at the manse, we receive so many, almost every week in the year, that it is hard to single out one for special mention; but there were numbers of good things forthcoming during the holiday seasen. It would be hard to mention all, but among the gifts was the indispensible Turkey, pounds of sausage, lard, twenty cans of fruit, jars of jelly, meats, beautiful dried fruit, and in fact almost everything nice for the table. And then there was a beautiful carpet and an excellent study gown, and kind wishes and prayer from loving hearts. During Thanksgiving season the gentlemen had placed about twenty cords of wood in our backyard. God is pouring out spiritual blessing also upon us; proof of which is seen in the earnest and faithful attendance at divine service. One member has been received since last you heard from me, and three more have signified their desire to unite with us. Christmas was saddened by the death of one of our young men. He had been married only seven months.

Makemie Church, Accomac :—Four new members were received into Makemie church, Accomac, yesterday, 14th inst., making thirty-five since the present pastorate began, October 24th. A number of others will unite with us in the near future. At a congregational meeting held yesterday, Messrs. S. L. Ross and R. W. Harding were elected ruling elders; and J. H. Fletcher and E. T. Coleburn deacons. They will be ordained January 21st. On the same day, our new mission chapel two miles from town will be occupied for the first time. Rev. Byron Clark is pastor of the church.

Second Church, Waco :—On last Sabbath, quarterly communion services were conducted in the Second Presbyterian church, Waco. The pastor, Rev. A. R. Shaw, announced the names of twenty-three members who had been received since the last communion occasion. After a sermon on the Humiliation of Christ, the venerable Dr. Loughridge assisted in the administration of the Lord's Supper. The young People's Society, organized a few weeks ago, is growing at a gratifying rate. The Society sustains organic relation to the session, the constitution is carefully worded and is thoroughly orthodox. The church is nearly free from debt. The session adopted an appropriate resolution expressive of thanks to Mrs. J. H. Sturgis for the gift of a beautiful communion service. The Second church, though young, is active, and begins the work of the new year with fair prospects.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. E. M. Munroe :—At a congregational meeting of the Milford church, on the second Sabbath of January, Rev. E. M. Munroe, who has been supplying the church for twelve months was unanimously elected pastor and a call made for three-fourths of his time at a salary of $900 and a manse, and he will continue to supply Brandon church for one-fourth of his time at a salary of $250 or $300.

[Correspondence of the N. C Presbyterian.]

Orange :—Dr. Marshall writes that he has lately taken part in installing the Rev. M. L. Frierson as pastor at Orange. On that occasion service were continued several days, Dr. Marshall preaching. Some of the good results were the addition of fourteen members—some of them men of great influence in the community. After leaving Orange, Dr. Marshall stopped to preach a few days at Beaumont. Although nearly 86 years of age he is still abundant in Gospel labors.

DOMESTIC.

A new enterprise is that of Trinity church, Boston, which has just opened a pawnshop in opposition to the iniquitous establishments of that class in the city. Money will be loaned on the securities usually required at pawnshops at 4 per cent. If properly managed it can do much good in relieving pressing wants of the necessitous poor.

The Presbytery of Baltimore last week decided to bring to regular formal trial the differences between Rev. David B. Greigg, pastor of the Twelfth Presbyterian church, of Baltimore, and the session of that church. For months the church has been rent by the discord. Some ruling elders have preferred formal charges against the pastor, accusing him of being dictatorial and overbearing, threatening a member of the session and trying to carry the congregation into independency. Mr. Greigg tabled counter charges against the elders who had preferred charges against him.

A rare and curious paper which came into possession of the Presbyterian Board of Missions has been placed in the Lenox Library of New York. It is supposed to be the only copy extant of the Act of Parliament of 1649, in Cromwell's reign, incorporating and chartering the Society for Instituting the Propagation of the Gospel among the Indians of New England. The ancient document is printed in Old English lettering. It names sixteen persons who shall organize the society, and it was evidently intended that the organization should be permanent, for rules are laid down for filling vacancies and for self-perpetuation.

The Independent says: The Supreme Court of Michigan has rendered a decision in a case involving the right to church property between the branches of the United Brethren in Christ. It will be remembered that a few years ago there was a division in that body over the adoption by the General Conference of a revised Constitution and Confession of Faith. A minority withdrew from the General Conference and held a separate General Conference. Since then there have been several cases in the courts in various States involving the legality of the adoption of the Revised Constitution and Confession of Faith. The Supreme Court of Michigan decides in favor of the minority, holding that neither the Constitution nor the Confession of Faith has been lawfully changed. The court was divided, three judges upholding the decision and one dissenting. Decisions in favor of the majority have been pronounced by the Supreme Courts of Indiana and Pennsylvania, and many decisions of lower courts have been given for the same side in those States and in Ohio, Oregon and other States.

From the same paper we get this item: The The Congregational Home Missionary Society reports that the receipts for the first nine months of the current year were $109,000 less than those of the corresponding months of the previous year. This means a decrease of thirty-five per cent. in the receipts thus far, and, should the same rate continue, will bring the society to the close of the financial year, March 31st, with a debt of $75,000. This, of course, prevents any enlargement of work, and makes it doubtful whether the present scale can be continued through another year.

FOREIGN.

American Hebrew: The Montreal Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue was a sight worth seeing Saturday, December 30th, crowded as it was to such an extent that extra seating-room had to be provided. The occasion was the 125th anniversary of its foundation. The Montreal Daily Star gave almost a whole page to a history of the congregation, with illustrations of its many prominent members, who, by their learning or business ability, contributed in their way to the honorable roll of eminent Canadians. The new synagogue, as a building, is unique in this country in its fidelity to the Egyptian architecture, cleverly combined with Jewish symbolism. It is large, well warmed and ventilated. The special services last Sabbath included an address on the past by the Rev. M. de Sola, minister of the congregation, and a sermon, appropriate to the occasion, by the Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, minister of the Spanish and Portuguese synagogues of this city. The choral services were also noteworthy, showing, as they did, the possibilities of congregational singing.

We clip from the Baltimore Sun the following, dated San Francisco. 18th: The steamship China arrived to-day from China and Japan. By the China it is learned that notwithstanding the recent additions to war junks cruising after the pirates along the coast, the pirates of Fukien and Talchow are still as numerous and as savage as ever. Some junks laden with rice were recently boarded by the pirates near Wenchow, and, after a desperate fight, twenty-five of the crew were killed or seriously wounded. Anonymous and inflammatory placards have recently been posted in the town of Yilin, China, which state that China has everything she needs, and that the missionaries are teaching no new doctrines to the people. The missionaries are therefore not wanted, and an appeal is made calling upon patriots to collect on a designated day to "kill and destroy."

Miss Agnes S. Lewis, the English lady who, with her sister, was so enterprising and deft in securing the copy of the Syriac manuscript of the four Gospels at the Convent of St. Catharine on Mt. Sinai, is endeavoring to raise money to build for the monks there a suitable library room to preserve the treasures of ancient literature which are there, but which are so ill-housed as to be very difficult of consultation.

THE MINUTES OF SYNOD.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Doubtless many are anxiously, and, perhaps, impatiently, looking for the minutes of 1893. But should we be displeased at not receiving these, when those of the past year are not yet paid for? At the meeting of Synod in Tarboro, N. C., the attention of Synod was most earnestly called, by the Finance Committee, to the lamentable condition of the treasury. The Synod realized the full truth of that committee's report, and proceeded to devise ways and means of collecting arrearages, and paying its indebtedness. An earnest injunction was issued to delinquent Presbyteries to make immediate payment of all arrearages; and this appeal appeared in full in the official "Abstract." So much in earnest was the Synod, that a special committee was appointed in each delinquent Presbytery, whose duty should be to secure prompt response to this appeal, or, if you please, obedience to Synod's injunction. Nearly three months have now passed since the meeting of Synod; one Presbytery (Wilmington) has remitted in full for all dues to Oct. 1st, 1893; another (Fayetteville) has remitted in part, while Orange and Albemarle have made no response to Synod's appeal. Amounts still due to October 1st, 1893, are as follows: Orange $30, Albemarle $25 and Fayetteville $46.80. Total, $101.80.

As already stated there is still a balance unpaid for printing minutes of 1892; the minutes of 1893 are now about ready for distribution, and there is not one cent in the treasury. It will not be very long until the Presbyteries will be asked to forward one-half of their assessments for the year 1893–94. Therefore, it is doubly important that these arrearages should be settled before that time. It is freely admitted that these are hard times to raise money; but are not the "times" just as "hard" for the printer as for the Presbyteries? Is it right to ask him to advance money for material, labor, postage, &c., and then wait one or two years for re-imbursement? To put it mildly, this sort of procedure is not business. As the treasurer of Synod, I would, therefore, make this additional appeal to the committee of each delinquent Presbytery, and urge that the amounts still due be remitted to me me once.

J. ALSTON RAMSAY,
Treasurer Synod.

LETTER FROM REIDSVILLE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Perhaps a few lines from Reidsville may be interesting to your readers, for how are we to keep up with the progress and attainments of our churches in the State unless we get into the papers occasionally?

Our church here was never in better condition, and while at no time has there been spasmodic or special increase, we have what is spiritually better, a steady growth in numbers, usefulness, and we trust, in Christianity. And our pastor, Rev. D. I. Craig, is growing too; growing nearer and dearer to the hearts of his people each year that he adds to the fifteen he has spent here. A man beloved and respected by the entire community, one whose presence is welcomed at every fireside, and whose constant and faithful service for his Master is well known among men.

Sometime ago a movement was inaugurated in our church to remove the old manse from the proximity of a tobacco warehouse, around to Main street and construct a larger house for Mr. Craig just in the rear of the church. Accordingly the necessary funds were subscribed and the old structure removed in a few months; but instead of reconstructing a cottage, one suggestion followed another for improvements, until a few days ago when carpenters and painters had put on the finishing touches, our pastor and his family were placed in possession of one of the handsomest residences in Reidsville—nine large rooms, porches and pantries, French windows, side galleries, and everything complete, and modern in design.

It is needless to say the new quarters gave pleasure to its occupants, and Mr. Craig and his good wife gave a grand invitation to the congregation and friends to a housewarming. Last Friday evening was the date, and a pleasant one it proved to all who called at the new manse: Reception hours were from eight until eleven, and a constant stream of callers kept the bell ringing. At the door we were received by Mrs. Craig in her own gracious manner, and ushered to the parlor from whence came sounds of music and pleasant "small talk." Here we were invited to "take the house," and from nursery to garret the gay throng made its way; each cosy room lighted, and a bright fire burning, merry maidens and their beaux, in the stair way, in the halls—all chatting, laughing, and having a good time generally. Here and there were handsome and useful tokens brought along to fill an empty corner, little souvenirs of friendship laid carelessly by, etc., etc. At ten o'clock the dining room and pantry was visited, and proved indeed a popular resort for each changing company. The tables were pretty in their floral trimmings and snowy cloths, and the menu abounding in every thing good. It was a pleasant occasion, full of mutual good will and we were all sorry to say good night.

We expect to have Prof. H. L. Smith with us next Sunday to talk Christian Education and Davidson College.

MEMBER OF REIDSVILLE CHURCH.

ROLL OF HONOR.

Your roll of honor for young children in in Sabbath-schools, who memorize and repeat the names of the books of the Bible, is an excellent thing. It has caused my little folks to take an interest in the matter and the following children are entitled to have their names on the roll:

BOYS.—Wilson Tate, 12 years; Alex. Murphy, 12; John Tull, 11; James Murphy, 10; Edward Erwin, 7; Erwin Moran, 3½.

GIRLS.—Lula Martin, 11 years; Lollie Martin, 11; Leah Howard, 10; May B. Presnell, 10; Addie Erwin, 9; Annie Moran, 9; Nannie Pearson, 8; Mary Moran, 6; Eloise Erwin, 5.

One thing I would like to mention. In our Sabbath-school we take up a collection for the support of the Orphanage at Barium Springs on the third Sabbath of each month. This is an especially deserving charity and should commend itself most particularly to the Presbyterian children in our State. If each Sabbath-school would do likewise Dr. Boyd would never lack for funds.

"THE OLD WHITE CHURCH."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The burning of this old house of worshp, December 23rd, 1893, was the removal of the oldest landmark in our Piedmont region.

The town of Lincolnton was laid off into lots in 1785, and the first church was built between 1786 and 1788. It was the property of the "Dutch Presbyterians and Dutch Lutherans"—called the "Dutch Meeting House." The nails used in its construction were forged by hand—(many of them have been picked up since the fire.) Early in this century it was enlarged, weatherboarded and ceiled and has been since called "The Old White Church." During the thirties the Presbyterians left it and organized and built a house of worship of their own. In 1771 two German teachers and ministers came over, Master Gottfried Arndt (or Arends) being one of them. In 1786, he took charge of this church and school and probably served here till 1807, when he died and his body was buried in rear of the church and the enlarged house was built over it and a large soap stone slab was placed in the east end of the church to his memory with the following inscription in German:

"Here lies the body of the late most venerable John Godfried Arends, a faithful evangelical preacher. He died July 9th, A. D., 1887, of consumption of the age 66 years, 6 months and 28 days after he had exercised the office of a preacher with all fidelity, for 32 years. Blessed indeed is he who dies as thou. He comes into the everlasting rest of heaven." On the top of the stone is a large eagle with spreading wings, a star for each of the original thirteen States and words: "E pluribus unum." So we infer Mr. Arends espoused the cause of the young Republic, then struggling for independence. Those were stirring times in this section, for only half a dozen years before the erection of this first church the historic battle of Ramsaur's Mill was fought here, in 1780.

Mr. A. Nixon, the thoughtful Superintendent of Public Instruction for Lincoln county, has published an insteresting history of this old church in our county paper. All the early Christians of all creeds worshipped in it and political questions were discussed there by Reid, Manly, Dockery (the elder) and Bragg.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 17, 1894.

The debate on the tariff bill is now in a very interesting stage—the proposal of amendments thereto—but as the final result, as far as the House of Representatives is concerned, is regarded by all as the same—the passing of the bill—Secretary Carlisle's letter to the Senator Voorhees, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, is attracting more attention from thoughtful people. His estimate that the deficiency will be in excess of $78,000,000 at the close of the present fiscal year is a convincing argument that something should at once be done by Congress and he suggests that the "something" be an amendment to the special resumption act of 1875, providing for an issue of 3 per cent bonds. There is much opposition in Congress to an issue of bonds, and Secretary Carlisle is not sanguine of the adoption of suggestion, but he is fully determined that if Congress does not immediately provide for the necessities of the Treasury he will under authority of the act of 1875, issue enough 4 per cent. bonds to meet the exigency.

There is a feeling of relief, both in and out of Congress, at the present status of the Hawaiian question. Congress can now take its time to consider the matter, without being in fear of getting news by every mail that blood has been shed in the effort to restore the queen. It is regarded as almost certain that Congress will declare in favor of non-interference.

There is scarcely a limit to the good that can be accomplished by one man of courage, particularly when that man occupies an official position. When the gamblers who had been driven out of New Jersey came here to carry on their nefarious calling under the name of horse-racing the local authorities said they were powerless under the laws to prevent it, and the gambling was commenced without their raising any serious objection. Then U. S. District Attorney Birney declared that he would stop it, and with the very laws that the local officials had said would not do it. The gamblers did not believe him, so they decided to go on. He promptly had them arrested and indicted. They employed the finest legal talent that money could get, and unfortunately it can always get the best, and attacked the validity of the indictments in the courts. Yesterday the judge handed down his decision, declaring the indictments valid, and that betting on horse-racing was gambling. This decision practically drives these gamblers out of the District of Columbia and, temporarily at least, destroys the business of the pool rooms in cities throughout the country based upon the races here, although the trials under those indictments will not take place for some weeks. This is a great trumph for moral reform, although it is lessened somewhat by the fear that the gamblers may succeed in their threat of bringing influence to bear upon the President for the removal of this courageous District Attorney, because of his having dared to antagonize them. [Mr. Cleveland we think can be depended on not to do such a thing for such a reason. Ed. N. C. P.]

The greatest public interest is being manifested in the coming series of Moody and Sankey meetings. Many prominent people, among them Vice-President Stevenson, are personally taking part in the preliminary arrangements for them. The first public rehearsal of the grand chorus of 1,500 voices that is to lead the singing was held this week. Interest is added to these meetings by the fact that they will be the last conducted by Mr. Moody for some time, as at their close he goes to London, upon the invitation of English clergymen, including 183 of the Established Church, for a prolonged stay.

The Christian Endeavorers of this District are all busy preparing for their second annual convention which is to be held on Friday and Saturday of this week, but they are not neglecting their work towards the selection of Washington as the meeting place of the international gathering of 1896.

It is not often that a minister delivers the same sermon twice in one day in the same city, but Bishop Paret, of the P. E. church did it last Sunday. This sermon was a powerful arraignment of the efforts that are now being made to have public money appropriated to sectarian schools, and it lost none of its effect from being delivered by a bishop of a church which believe in, and maintains to a considerable extent, parochial schools of its own; but does not seek public funds to do it with. The bishop's text was Matthew xxii: 21. "Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's."

Are secular nswspapers subsidized to support the liquor interests to any considerable extent? Mrs. Marion Baxter, of Mich., in the course of an address delivered here on "Society as it is," under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., made the distinct charge that in the State of Pennsylvania alone 400 papers had been subsidized to support the liquor interests. Mr. Baxter also reproved the churches for not taking more active measures for the suppression of the liquor traffic.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

REV. PEYTON H. HOGE, D. D., Editor.

☞All communications for this department should be addressed directly to Dr. HOGE and not to the office of the PRESBYTERIAN.

February 4.—Beginning of the Hebrew Nation.

Gen. xii. 1-9. Commit vss. 1-3.

Golden Text.—I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. Gen. xii. 2.

Topic.—The call of Abram.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Note the fall of Noah, the curse of Ham, the temporal blessing of Japheth, and the spiritual blessing of Shem. Gen. ix. 18-27. [A better reading of vs. 27 is, "God shall enlarge Japheth. but He (i. e., God) shall dwell in the tents of Shem."]

Note (without reading) the ancestry of the various races outlined in Gen. x. In general, (but with notable exceptions) Asiatic races are Shemitic, African Hamitic, and European Japhetic. Consult Map (No. 1, Teacher's Bibles). Note the pride and presumption of the race defeated by the confusion of tongues at Babel, Gen. xi. 1-9.

Note the descent of the chosen line from Shem to Abram, with biographical notes at the close. xi. 10-32. Consult Map for Ur of the Chaldees and Haran.

Second Step. Study carefully the lesson itself and note what it says:

1. As to the command (vs. 1). 2. As to the promise,(vss.2,3.) 3. As to the obedience (vs. 4). 4. His age and companionship (vss. 4, 5). 5. His arrival and progress through the land (vss. 5, 6, 8, 9). 6. The promise renewed and altars built (vss. 7, 8).

Third Step. Write out a summary of the story of the lesson, and compare it with the one below, correcting yours or improving ours.

SUMMARY. The race having apostatised from God, God calls Abram out from his own country and people to go into a new land and found a new nation promising to bless him, and all the world through him. Abram obeys and at the age of seventy-five years goes out taking his childless wife Sarai, and his nephew Lot. Arriving at the land, then occupied by the Canaanite, God renews the promise and Abram builds an altar, first in the plain of Moreh, and then near Bethel, as he journeyed southward.

Fourth Step. Note any difficult expressions or questions, consulting your helps. Trace journey (Map No. 3. Oxford) from Haran to Sichem (Shechem) and Bethel.

Fifth Step. Take up the topics of the lesson and study them out in the light of other parts of God's word.

1. The progress of "the promise."
   The "Seed of the woman. Gen. iii. 15.
   Through Seth. Gen. iv. 25, 26.
   Continued through Noah. Gen. viii. 1; Heb. xi. 7.
   Then to Shem. Gen. ix. 26, 27 (See above).
   And now to Abram, Gen. xii. 3; xvii. 7.
   Its spiritual purpose. Rom. iv. 11-13; Gal. iii. 7-9; Heb. xi. 9 (last clause).
2. The faith of Abram.
   He obeyed God's command. Gen. xii. 4, 5; Heb. xi. 8.
   Committing his way unto the Lord. Heb. xi. 8 (last clause); compare Ps. xxxvii. 5.
   Staking his all on the issue, Gen. xii. 5; compare 1 Cor. iv. 11-13.
   With worship and sacrifice, Gen. xii. 7, 8; compare Heb. xi. 4.
   And patiently awaited the promised reward. Gen. xii. 9; Heb. xi. 9, 10. Compare Rev. ii. 10 (last clause).

Sixth Step. The practical lesson to lay to heart is that trust in God's promises involves obedience to God's commands. James ii. 18.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

First Step. Bibles closed and lesson papers put away.

Second Step. Question on the connection, topic and Golden Text.

Third Step. Draw out from the class the story of the lesson.

Fourth Step. Open Bibles and question on any points of difficulty, and clear up any difficulties of the class.

Fifth Step. Have a ten minutes Bible reading on the topics suggested by the lesson, having the texts you wish the class to read already noted on a slip of paper.

Sixth Step. Clinch the teaching of the lesson by Catechism Questions 86 and 87.

General. Impress on the scholars that the beginning of the life of faith involves a separation or going out from the world and from sin on the basis of God's promise and in obedience to His command, and that the continuance of the life of faith is merely a constant repetition of the first act. We come to Christ and abide in Christ.

Teachers' Exchange.

HOW TO INTEREST CHILDREN IN THE BIBLE.

Believing that it is of great importance to interest our scholars in the Book we are studying before we can make any part truly interesting, I adopted this plan with a class of seven boys averaging fourteen years. At the close of the lesson I would give the same question, written on slips of paper, to each boy, requesting him to bring a written answer by next Sunday, to be handed in before the school commenced. A first, a second, and sometimes a third prize was given half-yearly for the best answers. It was astonishing to me to see how quickly the boys became familiar with their Bibles. If possible, let the question be related to the next lesson. The interest aroused repaid me a hundredfold for the no slight work it became to arrange questions sufficiently interesting and enticing.

A. T. W.

With my class of restless boys I find it necessary to make my plan quite adjustable. I study much over some bright, applicable illustration for the lesson, and have some reserve illustrations to retain their attention if it seem to be slipping away. I try to have a few questions that will require some thinking on the part of the boys. I encourage each one to bring a Bible, and can often keep them interested in the lesson by having a verse that applies looked up. I find it a good plan to have a little Bible drill on rapidity in finding verses after the lesson or between times. I use home-made maps of Palestine where I can. I also find helpful a chart made of dress paper tacked to a strip of wood. The simplest outline, and even a word printed with dark crayon, keeps the eyes of the boys employed. An occasional social evening helps the teacher to become acquainted with the class and to gain their confidence.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE WITH DELIGHT.

1. Read the Bible as God's personal message to you. (Acts xiii. 26.)
2. Love Jesus Christ.
3. Then you will read the Bible more.
4. As the result of this you will love Jesus Christ more.
5. Be Christlike. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus."
6. Do the truth:—Act out in your daily life the truth you learn. We learn the truth by doing the truth. (James i. 22.)
7. Recognize and use the companionship of Jesus Christ. Blessed privilege! This is ours to posses and enjoy, for He has promised "Lo, I am with you alway" (all the days). See also 1 Chronicle iv. 23. By following these directions you will have an increasing delight in and a deeper understanding of the Bible. (John xiii. 17.)

After reading your Scripture portion, ask yourself these questions: When? Where? Who? and What? The answers will give you the Time, Place, Persons and Lessons to be learned.—Rev. J. C. Quinn, D. D.

A young lady, asked by her friend, to explain what is meant by devotional reading of the Bible, made answer, as follows: "Yesterday morning, I received a letter from one to whom I have given my heart and devoted my life. I freely confess to you that I have read that letter five times, not because I did not understand it at the first reading, nor because I expected to commend myself to the author by frequent reading of his epistle. It was not with me a question of duty, but simply one of pleasure. I read it because I am devoted to the one who wrote it. To read the Bible with the same motive, is to read it devotionally, and to one who reads it in that spirit, it is, indeed, a love letter.—The United Presbyterian.

HIGH SCHOOL OF ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

This school has enrolled this session forty students. Ten counties are represented: Alamance, Caswell, Duplin, Granville, Guilford, Mecklenburg, Orange, Rockingham, Stokes and Wake. Ten towns: Burlington, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Danbury, Graham, Greensboro, Mebane, Mt. Olive, Raleigh and Reidsville. But for the hard times of course the enrolment would have been much larger.

Scotland Neck Democrat: It is rumored that one-half interest in the Great Falls water power, six miles from Weldon, has been sold to Northern capitalists. This sale insures the erection, in the near future, of two large cotton mills and a hotel.

Mrs. BARBARA PATTERSON, died in Columbia, S. C., the 4th of December, 1893. She was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, Dec. 31st, 1820, having thus lived beyond the allotted time being over 70 years at her death. While yet an infant her parents, Capt. and Mrs. Archibald McNair emigrated to America settling in Fayetteville, N. C. Bringing with them the characteristics of their country in the sturdy religious life that has made Scotch Presbyterians the backbone of every community where they have settled. They left it as an heirloom to their young daughter Barbara from whom they were so soon taken. The blessing of the covenant-keeping God followed to keep and to shield the little orphan until she gave her young heart to the Saviour in taking upon herself the vows that had been taken for her. Thus exemplifying the truth, "I will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee." She united with the Presbyterian church, Rockfish N. C., of which she was a consistent member for over fifty years. In 1841 she was married to Capt. D. G. Patterson, of Atlanta, Ga., and was his devoted companion for forty-two years. She learned the meaning of the words: "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." In her long years of suffering realizing yet further the precious words, "My grace is sufficient for thee" "My strength is made perfect in weakness" until she could say, "not my will but Thine be done," and thus entered upon "the rest that remaineth to the people of God."

She left four sons, two daughters and eleven grand children to mourn her death.

Charlotte News: There was probably never a better prospect for a fine wheat crop in this countty. The farmers say that so far as they can tell there is nothing to hurt it. The plants are healthy good stands reported everywhere, and no small bugs or insects to suck the sap out. —— The oat crop is fine looking, though the warm winter seems not to have been beneficial to it. There is a very large acreage of wheat and oats sowed this year.

FOR THE FAMILY.

JUST BE GLAD.

O heart of mine, we shouldn't worry so!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't have, you know!
What we've met of stormy pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We can better meet again, if it blow.

We have erred in that dark hour, we have known,
When the tears fell with the shower, all alone—
Were not shine and shower blent
As the gracious Master meant?
Let us temper our content with his own.

For we know not every morrow can be sad:
So, forgetting all the sorrow we have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put by our foolish tears,
And through all the coming years just be glad.

Michael Angelo, one of the greatest of European artists, was born in Florence, Italy, in 1475. When he was only a little chap two years old his parents left him to the care of a stone mason's wife, who lived three miles out from Florence. There he began to draw as soon as he could use his hands, and the walls of the stonemason's house were covered with rough charcoal sketches made by the little Michael. His father was determined that he should go into the dry goods business, and when he was old enough put him at school in Florence, but instead of studying he would spend his time in drawing pictures, and every chance he got he was off among the artists in their studios, so it was precious little study they got out of Master Michael. His father and teachers used to beat him well for it, but the beatings did no good. Pretty soon his father found that the boy was determined not to be anything but an artist, so he put him to study art in the studio of Ghirlandalo. This artist had undertaken the job of painting the choir of a church in Florence, and one day when all the painters had gone home, Michael Angelo drew a picture of the scaffolding with all who worked on it so perfectly that his teacher when he saw it said: "This boy understands more than I do myself." Sixty years afterwards, when this sketch was shown to Michael Angelo, he said: "I almost think I knew more art in my young days than I do in my old age."

Although his father had been so opposed to his studying art, yet he could not help being proud after all when his son came home, after spending four years in Rome, and brought enough money with him to start all his brothers in business.

Years and years before a big block of marble had been brought to Florence from Carrara, from which it was intended to carve a statue for one of the churches. None of the artists would undertake the job, until finally Michael Angelo said he would make a statue from it. He was given two years in which to finish the work. Often he would sleep with his clothes on, so as to be ready by daylight to commence his work. Finally it was finished, and the great statue of David was unveiled to the world. The statue weighed 18,000 pounds, and it took forty men four days to drag it by ropes a quarter of a mile to the place where it was to stand.

The pope sent for Michael Angelo to paint the ceiling of the Sistine chapel in Rome, but the artist did not want to undertake it at first, as, he said making statutes was more his profession than painting, but the pope insisted, and Michael Angelo accomplished that which proved the greatest work of his life.

Michael Angelo was a good son to his father. He worked hard so that his father might have every comfort, and when he died, at the age of 90 years, his son gave him a costly burial.

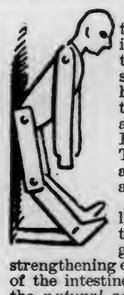
It was not until he was 60 years old that Michael Angelo fell in love, and with Victoria Colonna, a widow and a very brilliant woman, but he never married, and when she died he was almost heart broken. The great sculptor never stopped work or study. When an old man he drew a picture of himself in a cart and wrote underneath it, "Still Learning." His last work was a group of the Virgin and the dead Christ, which he intended to have placed over his own tomb, but it was never entirely finished on account of a flaw in the marble. He died when he was 90 years of age, in 1564. The pope was determined to have him buried in Rome, but his friends knew that his last wish had been to lie in Florence, his old home, so they had his body disguised as a bale of goods, shipped to Florence, where he was buried at night by torchlight. Michael Angelo was ambitious and devoted to his work. He was persevering and allowed nothing to stand in his way. He was, perhaps, stern and cold in his manner, but all little children loved him, and many a time he would stop and make sketches for them on the street. He was great in sculpture, painting and poetry, and, best of all, he was great in character.—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

Chocolate Cakes.—Take the whites of three eggs and beat them well, with a half pound of finely powdered sugar, and the third part of a cake of chocolate scraped very fine, drop in small round cakes on writing paper, bake in a slow oven.

To Remove Oil from Carpet.—No matter how large the spot of oil, any carpet or woolen stuff can be cleansed by applying buckwheat plentifully, brushing it into a dustpan after a short time and putting on fresh until the oil has disappeared.

Chocolate Custard.—Boil together one quart of milk, two ounces chocolate, until thoroghly mixed, take from the fire, and add four well-beaten eggs. Flavor with vanilla. Serve very cold.



Sweet Biscuit.—Two cups of sugar, two cups of butter, the white of two eggs well-beaten, one-half cup of sour milk, one-half teaspoon of soda, and flour enough to roll. Sprinkle with sugar.

Salted Peanuts.—A few quarts of peanuts, shelled and salted, are good to have on hand. Allow a tablespoonful of butter for each quart of nuts and brown on shallow dishes in a good oven, watching carefully that they do not scorch. Shake fine salt over thickly and throw them in a colander to cool.

Potato Soup.—A quart of milk, six potatoes, one stalk of celery, an onion and a tablespoonful of butter. Boil the potatoes and mash fine, and then add them to the milk in which the onion and celery have been boiled. Season to taste, and add any sweet cream hot that you may have, and the melted butter while it is still on the stove.

Steam Whistles.

The first use of a steam whistle for locomotives has recently been the subject of considerable discussion in technical circles and it is now stated to have been in 1833, when the "Samson," an engine belonging to the Leicester and Swannington Railway Company, ran into a horse and cart loaded with butter and eggs. The engineer had a mouth horn and could not attract the attention of the driver in time to avoid an accident. The manager of the line, Ashlen Bagster, reported the circumstance to George Stephenson and suggested that a steam whistle would be a good means of giving a warning at grade crossings. Such an appliance was at once made by a local musical instrument manufacturer and tried, with such success that all the engines were soon fitted with them. A drawing of this whistle, signed by H. Cabry the company's engine superintendent, and dated May, 1833, shows it to have resembled in outward appearance a fireman trumpet. Steam was admitted through a cock turned by a handle like that on an ordinary water faucet, and as the shaft of this handle is short the whistle was evidently placed on a dome over the rear of the boiler, near the platform on which the engineer stood.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A WINTER RESORT.

"Aren't you going South?" said the bluebird to the sparrow.
"Winter's almost here, and we're clearing up to go.
Not a seed is left on the goldenrod or yarrow,
And I heard the farmer say, 'It feels like snow!'
I can recommend it,—the place to which we're going;
There's a rainy season to be sure; but what of that?
Not a bit of ice, and it never thinks of snowing,
And the fruit so plentiful one can't help getting fat!"

"Yes, I've heard about it," to the bluebird said the sparrow;
"And it's quite the fashion to go traveling, I know;
People who don't do it are looked upon as 'narrow.'
Bless you! I don't care! And I'm not afraid of snow.
When it comes the first time I so enjoy my feathers;
After that I'm used to it and do not mind at all.
One can fly about and keep warm so in all weathers;
I've a snuggery too in the ivy on the wall.

"When the seeds are gone—and they're not before December—
I can still find spiders and flies on sunny days;
And I've all the lovely summer to remember;
My old friends are here, and they know my little ways.
Just as soon as ever the ground is frozen tightly,
All those nice kind creatures in the houses throw us crumbs.
One forgets its winter when the sun is shining brightly!
I'm content to stay here and take it as it comes."

CHAPTER IV.

As both Donald and the farmer were men of sober habits and conversable dispositions, John spent a pleasant evening in their company, and at ten o'clock they proposed, as they were to start homewards early on the following morning, that they should separate. Accordingly, the friends rose to resume their great coats, which they had laid aside at their entrance. After Donald had taken a cordial farewell of the farmer, on turning round to John Martin he was struck with the expression of dismay on his countenance, while he searched with nervous agitation in the pockets of his great coat, for something that he evidently could not find. On his inquiring if he had lost anything, he was much shocked at being told that the pocketbook containing the bank notes he had received for the cow was gone! Loud and sincere were the expressions of regret and sympathy that followed this discovery; and the kind-hearted old soldier, feeling that his own thoughtlessness in detaining his friend standing so long among the crowd at the fair, might have partly led to this catastrophe, mingled words of self-reproach with suggestions and advice as to how he should act, in order if possible, to recover the money. But poor John stood the image of despair, barely hearing a word his friend uttered; and for some minutes so overwhelming were his feelings that he could not speak.

His friend could hardly realize these feelings; for though he must have known, that to a poor man the loss of such a sum was a very serious matter, he was ignorant that it was all he had to depend on for the payment of the arrears of his rent At length John was roused to the necessity of making some exertion, and he mechanically followed his friend, as he heard him propose that he should lose no time in reporting his loss to the police, though at the same time he could not help expressing his fears that such an application would be hopeless. When Donald reflected that the robbery must have taken place at the fair, and that in all probability the thieves were by this time far on their way to the Scottish or English metropolis to share their booty with the gang to which they belonged, he felt that he could hold out very little encouragement to his desponding friend; but saying that while there was even the slightest chance it was a pity to neglect it, he persisted in urging him on onwards to the police office.

On reaching it and stating his case, John was told that nothing could be done that night; but after taking down a description of the pocketbook, and ascertaining the sum it contained, the superintendent promised to set the detectives on the alert as early as possible the following morning. He then asked John if he could give the numbers of the missing notes, and state to what banking company they belonged, adding, that such information was nearly, if not altogether, indispensable to the chance of success in endeavoring to detect the thief. Poor John was sadly perplexed at this question, for he was so ignorant of business, it had never once occurred to him to ascertain such particulars, so that on receiving the notes, he had contented himself with simply counting them over before putting them in his pocketbook. But Donald Fraser, who was a shrewd fellow, and better acquainted with the world, suggested that the person who paid them might perhaps know; and as fortunately he lived within a short distance of the town, John proposed to set out immediately in search of the necessary information. On his friend reminding him that nothing could be done that night, it would be a pity to disturb the man at so late an hour, he agreed to defer his visit till early on the following morning; and promising to call at the police office on his return, and let the superintendent know the result of his inquiries, with a heavy heart he accompanied Donald to the house of his cousin, where the friends were again to pass the night.

A long time ago, when my grandmother was a little girl, her mother—as did many other mothers of that time—used to give her a stint; that is, a certain amount of work to day. Lydia's—that was grandmother's name—was to spin the bobbin of the spinning wheel full of yarn. Not until she finished her task was she allowed to go out and play.

Lydia thought this very hard, and when she would look out of the window and see the boys at work in the fresh air, it seemed to her that her stint was the very hardest of all, having to stay in the house, listening to the dull hum of the flying wheel.

One day her longing overcame her. It was an ideal day; the scent of lavender and cinnamon roses floated in through the open window, the very breeze that fanned her rosy cheek seemed to whisper, "Come out, come out!"

Suddenly a thought entered her head. Why not wind a cloth on the great bobbin, and then spin enough more yarn to cover it up? In this way her mother, glancing carelessly at the bobbin, would think that it was full, and never give it a second thought. So intent was she in her plan that she noticed not the show in the doorway, nor did she stop to think that her usually merry voice was hushed with the excitement of wrong doing.

It was this silence that made her mother glance in, as she went past the door, and seeing, was struck with horror to see her daughter thus trying to deceive her. Nevertheless, she watched her until she finished, and then walked noiselessly from the doorway.

Lydia, unconscious of impending danger, donned her little yellow Shaker bonnet and ran out to help the boys, who were picking strawberries for supper. Nevertheless, it was with a heavy heart that she entered the house for the evening meal, and many were the anxious glances towards the spinning wheel, which stood in the corner by the fireplace.

"Thee finished thy spinning earlier than usual, Lydia," remarked her mother, warily. She had noticed the stealthy glances and thought a confession of it would soon come.

Lydia only grew furiously red. "Yes, ma'am," she answered, with her two blue eyes fixed resolutely on her plate.

"I'm glad my little daughter's so industrious," was the next blow, dealt by the father; "and quick, too," he added.

Lydia gave a despairing glance at that terrible bobbin, and burst into tears.

"I was'nt quick," she sobbed out. "I wound the bobbin with a piece of cloth, so's not to have so much to do; but I'll never do it again as long's as I live, truly."

It came out in little bursts, but they all knew what it meant very well.

"Lydia," her father said sternly, "go to thy room, and to bed immediately I am disappointed in thee."

Poor, little Lydia stumbled up to her tiny bed room under the eaves, and obediently went to bed but not to sleep. Her sobbing had ceased, and to all appearances she was asleep, but Lydia was not. She heard first the boys and then her parents ascend the stairs, on their way to bed. Her mother came last, paused a moment at Lydia's door, and thinking the child asleep, went in and leaning over the bed, kissed her refractory little daughter's wet cheek very tenderly and softly.

This was too much for Lydia. She flung her arms round her mother's neck and cried, "O dearest mother, wilt thou not forgive me? I cannot sleep till thou sayest yes."

Her mother smiled to herself a little and said: "Yes, Lydia, I do forgive thee, but be more thoughtful in the future."

The mother stooped and kissed her again, then left the room. Lydia cuddled down and was soon in slumberland. She had been forgiven.—Agriculturist.

"When I was a Boy,"

Writes Postmaster J. C. WOODSON, Forest Hill, W. Va., "I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary medicines, and advised me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."

"I have been using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for 30 years, with the most satisfactory results, and can cheerfully recommend it as being especially adapted to all pulmonary complaints. I have, for many years, made pulmonary and other medicines a special study, and I have come to the conclusion that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral occupies a position pre-eminent over other medicines of the class."—Chas. Rev. C. N. Morrow's Letter.

Hawthorn, Fla., June 23, 1890.

Rev. M. H. Houston :

Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Brother :—Yours of June received. I have had almost two years' experience with the Electropoise, and must say it far surpasses even skillful medication; and I have treated more than two hundred cases of various diseases with marked success. I have broken chills and fever of several weeks' duration in from one to three nights. It is impossible to have chills while using the Poise properly. I have treated more than fifteen cases of fever, the majority being typhoid-malarial, curing them in from two hours to four days. Diarrhœa, dysentery and cholera-morbus I have cured in from one hour to eight, generally. Rheumatism in from three hours to three days, in one case making a patient throw away his crutches and straighten his deformed limbs in four hours, and one more day's treatment made a permanent cure.

It is beyond doubt the greatest remedy God has permitted us to know. The instruments are now placed all around me, and I am treating people day and night. It is giving me influence here as nothing else can. My confidence in the treatment is almost unbounded ; it cures promptly and permanently.

I will mark a few testimonials in the enclosed circulars of cures effected by myself. The certificates of cures in Florida could be made much stronger than given in the circulars. Yours fraternally,

C. N. MORROW.

On May 22d. 1892, Mr. Morrow writes : "I am still having the most wonderful success with the Electropoise."

SAY SOES.

The first ingredient in conversation is truth ; the next good sense ; the third good humor ; the last wit.

Do good with what thou hast, or it will do thee no good.

THE MOST GORGEOUS TREASURES OF ARABIA.

What a splendid picture it brought before your mind! You read the glowing descriptions of the secret treasures which the genii of the ring spread before Aladdin's gaze. You perused this favorite story of yours in "Arabian Nights" when a boy, and your imagination pictured brilliantly for you everything that the words suggested.

That was when you were a boy. To-day, possibly, you are unable to do it. Shall we tell you the reason why ? Most probably because your liver is sluggish, and as a consequence you suffer from sick headache dizziness, and constipation. Do you want to cure all these troubles permanently, make your liver active, your imagination lively, and in general enjoy things as you did when a boy? All you have to do is to use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest and easiest to take, and they are the cheapest because they are guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. What more can you ask ?

In the face of the constant assertion that there is no drunkeness in France owing to the large use of wine, statistics show that alcoholic insanity has doubled in fifteen years, and the number of persons who have been placed under restraint on account of it has increased twenty-five per cent. in the last three years.

One lb. of sheep's wool is capable of producing one yard of cloth.

All who are troubled with Constipation will find a safe, sure, and speedy relief in Ayer's Pills. Unlike most other cathartics, these pills strengthen the stomach, liver, and bowels, and restore the organs to normal and regular action.

Under the term "grass" botanists have distinguished and named no fewer than 2,000 distinct varieties of the vegetable world.

Mr. Francis Treas, Northumberland, Penna., thinks it a good remedy for rheumatism. He writes: "I have been using your liniment called Salvation Oil for rheumatism and find it gives me great relief. It is a good remedy."

Joy, and temperance, and repose slam the door on the doctor's nose.—Longfellow.

For Sleeplessness

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

If you are a poor sleeper, not only do not forget to put on your night-cap, but on retiring also take a night-cap of Horsford's Acid Phosphate, to make assurance doubly sure.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Our beloved Church ought to take special interest in this Mission because one of its first members, Rev. JOHN McCARTHY, received our first missionaries to their work in China and has ever since, with a wide work of his own, been a helper and friend to our missionaries. He was lately in many of our churches in Virginia at the request of our young men soon to go out. At Charlottesville his work was particularly blessed. He was the guest of the parents of Dr. EDGAR WOODS whom he knows well in China and was with the younger son Dr. JAMES B. WOODS who is just going out. He knows the other son Rev. Dr. HENRY M. WOODS quite as well. Through letters of their sister and the younger brother a visit was secured for this section. He began at Goldsboro and daily meetings are being held by him in different parts of the State. He went out as one of the first twenty-five persons who began the work of this Mission in 1866. So he and his wife have been identified with the Mission ever since and their children have grown up about them and shared their love and labours. In 1875 Mr. McCARTHY with one native minister and two bearers of burdens travelled three thousand miles in opening the way for workers in the eleven inland provinces where there was then no Protestant Missionary. They travelled the first one thousand miles by boat on the Yang Tse Kiang river and the remaining two thousand miles on foot into Burmah. Following that pioneer journey, stations have been opened and occupied in all but one of the inland provinces. There are now 594 missionaries and 324 native helpers working in 106 regular stations and 104 out stations where no missionaries reside. There are 4,000 members of the churches organized by these missionaries.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION

owes its origin to the missionary zeal and prayers of Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR, M. R. C. S. He is a native of England, born of parents, who consecrated him in infancy to mission work in China, though he did not know of it until he had been many years in China. Before going out Mr. TAYLOR had studied medicine and made blessed proof of GOD'S grace and faithfulness. He went to China in 1853 as a medical missionary under the auspices of the Chinese Evangelization Society. He resigned from that society in 1857 and in 1860 returned to England because of failure of health. On his voyage home his prayer was that his return might be over-ruled for good and that at least five missionaries might be raised up for the province of Chehkiang. In 1862 the first sailed and in 1865 four others. By this time continued thought and prayer about the destitutions of China had deepened into resolution to attempt yet greater things. The result was the formation of this mission. It was desired not to divert men or means from existing missionary agencies and that anything projected should be to regions beyond and by means besides what was already in service. The great need appeared in this that in 1865 there were only ninety-seven Protestant missionaries to the hundreds of millions of people in China, and all these were in ten or eleven ports along the sea-board in the six maritime provinces except one at Hang-Kow in the Central province—Hu-peh. The other eleven provinces were without a resident Protestant missionary. With the purpose of commencing missionary labor in these interior provinces, with from 100 to 150 millions of population, the China Inland Mission was formed—with what result the foregoing figures show. Three new rules were fixed:

1. That duly qualified candidates for missionary labor should be accepted without restriction as to denomination, provided there was soundness in the faith in all fundamental truths.

The confusion and conflict feared by some has not come and each missionary organizes churches under that form of government he holds or prefers.

2. That all who went out as missionaries should go in dependence upon God for temporal supplies, with the clear understanding that the mission did not guarantee any income whatever; and knowing that, as the mission would not go into debt, it could only minister to those connected with it as the funds sent in from time to time might allow.

The mission has never wanted for funds and more than once large numbers of recruits have gone forth in answer to prayer. It was Mr. TAYLOR who refused money with the plea: "Brethren do not give me money unless you give me missionaries to use it." Many, like Mr. ORR-EWING, of Scotland, have placed themselves and their means in the service of the MASTER in this Mission while the whole Church has received a new illustration of the text: "Have faith in GOD."

3. That there should not be any collections or personal solicitations of money.

The temptation to set aside this rule has often been presented and as often refused. The receipts for amounts received and the use made of these have been made by members so that only the donor and the treasurer could know who gave, and so as to avoid the temptation to rivalry in giving, or giving for the praise of men. In a busy life as the general director of this mission under its American, Australian and British branches Mr. TAYLOR edits China's Millions, the monthly organ of the Mission. He writes spiritual articles for the several numbers. Those now current are rich and suggestive. Out of these have been issued a little book of spiritual sweetness entitled, "Days of Blessing in Inland China." He has also prepared a book, "China's Spiritual Needs and Claims." Either of these may be had of the Mission Office, 632 Church street, Toronto, Canada. On the title page of "China's Millions," at the head of bamboo frame pieces holding the map of China are these words: EBENEZER and JEHOVAH-JIREH. The one saying, "hitherto hath the Lord helped us," and the other, putting a platform for faith, saying: "The Lord will provide," are not only the mottoes of this mission, but a suggestive message to all of us to be thankful for GOD'S blessing in the past and to put our unfaltering trust in Him for the future.

SAYS THE ST. LOUIS PRESBYTERIAN:

"Now and then we meet with items of Church news from our Arkansas churches, in other papers, which have never been sent to us. There is no objection to their publication in any of the papers besides this, provided they are sent to us also. Please give us the advantage of such contributions and help the paper which the Synod has adopted as its medium of communication."

We clip this because we suffer from precisely that which troubles our contemporary. No doubt friends suppose that we will see the items in exchanges and copy them, but there are several contingences liable to intervene. We may not exchange with the papers containing the items, or we may not scan the paper containing the news, or we may overlook it, or for some other reason we may fail to get the intelligence and then the loss is to our readers, and, possibly the dissatisfaction to those who might have greatly obliged us by dropping a postal direct to us. There are other reasons not necessary to name, but in any view of the matter items direct, aside from being more certainly correct, are very much to be preferred. We beg our friends to remember us in this regard.

HERE AND THERE.

THE MISSIONARY FOR FEBRUARY comes to us in a new suit of Presbyterian "True Blue," and an unusually interesting list of contents. The sketch of Dr. KENNETH MACKENZIE is only one of a number of interesting sketches. The illustrations too are of a fine order and admirably serve, as designed, to illustrate the text. The frontispiece shows us the Presbyterian Missionaries in Korea. The last picture of the Girls School in Hangchow accompanies the "Story of AH-VONG; one of the girls in the Hangchow School."

THE BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCE ON the Subject of Negro Evangelization does not seem to have elicited much interest in either the Northern or Southern Church, thus far. It really amounts, it would seem, so far as the Southern Church is concerned to little more than a suggestion of utter abandonment of the work it has been doing; for the Northern Church will absolutely control and direct and it can hardly be supposed the Southern Church, so lukewarm now, will be excited to greater zeal under the changed condition of affairs. In fact as said above it is very like to utter abandonment.

THAT THE PAPERS HAVE SAID nothing is probably because they have no better plan to suggest. Our Southern Church, it must be confessed, and for our part we are sorry to have to confess it, has not shown any great interest in the work of Negro Evangelization, and those having it in immediate charge seem to despair of ever bringing them up to the full measure of duty, or even approximately thereto, and so make the proposition of the Birmingham Conference. If any of our ministers have ought to say pro or con of the proposed scheme we will be glad to hear from them. Dr. PALMER in the Southwestern Presbyterian gives his views very plainly. We publish them elsewhere.

ANOTHER SUBJECT NOT CONNECTED with the question of Co-operation in Colored Evangelization, but cousin-german to it, is that of the union of churches (Northern and Southern) within the bounds of the Synods in which they are located. This is not quite as broad a question just now as the first, but tends doubtless, in the view of some of its promoters, to even broader results, or to the broadest results more directly and much sooner in point of time. In Tennessee it was proposed last fall that the churches connected with the two Assemblies should be united in one body. The progress of the matter discloses that the Northern Churches favor the union of the two Assemblies. but will form no other union. The matter in Texas has developed fully. The Northern Church intimated through one of its Presbyteries that the question of Synodical union was desirable. The Southern Synod of Texas appointed a Committee of Conference and the Northern Synod did the same. The committees met early in last month and lo! the Northern Synod suggests organic union of the Assemblies, by declaring that no other union is practicable. The Southern Synod made the following courteous reply:

"Our Synod expressly limits its proposition to an equitable union of the Presbyterians of Texas, as is contemplated in the action of Trinity Presbytery, in response to which our action was taken, and we are assured that our Synod had no intention whatever of opening the question of organic union between the two Assemblies and conferred on us no power or authority to do so. The only course left to us, therefore, is to make the following proposal, which we recommend to the Synod appointing us to make to the Synod of Texas, United States of America, a standing offer of union on the following just and liberal terms, to-wit: That the two Synods combine into one on the basis of the Confession of Faith, and book of Church Order and Discipline; that Presbyterial lines be rearranged by the united body in accordance with the constitution of the Church and convenience of ministers and congregatinos; that this union leave intact all pastoral relations, the existence of all organized churches and all rights of property vested in existing congregations, except as said parties shall freely choose to modify them; and this proposition we make in all heartiness and Christian cordiality to you.

"R. L. DABNEY,
"W. K. MARSHALL,
"S. B. CAMPBELL,
"W. N. SCOTT,
"JOSEPHUS JOHNSON."

THE MATTER OF SYNODICAL UNION may be said to have ended, leaving one to wonder why it was begun if so soon it was to be done. The truth is, the Northern Church would like to revive the question of union of the two Assemblies, and the Southern Church, especially after the knowledge acquired during the past two years, has tenfold better reason than before to decline being involved in the turmoil and trouble from which our good sister is not yet extricated. We believe Dr. DABNEY has voiced Southern sentiment when he says:

"Southern Presbyterians occupying the territory of the late Confederate States were compelled thirty-three years ago to assume a position of ecclesiastical independence (not of antagonism or hostility). The reasons demanding it were weighty and absolutely impractice and all subsequent events have only added to their weight. The same differences of principles, the same practical reasons necessitating our separate independence, still subsist. The marvelous growth and success of our Church in the South in consequence of this independence and in spite of the calamities and depression of our people, point out more plainly than ever our right and duty of remaining independent. I know of no intelligent Southern Presbyterian minister or layman who is not more fixed in this conviction to-day than in previous years.

THE INTERIOR, (CHICAGO), SAYS:

The Catholics ought to be satisfied with the United States, free schools and all. Here is a statement by the Inter Ocean of their holdings in this city. They fill the offices of the mayor, chief of police, chief of fire department, post master, State's attorney, clerk's of the circuit, probate, and superior courts, a number of the judges, forty-five of the sixty-eight aldermen, sixty-seven per cent. of the school teachers, eighty per cent. of the fire department, ninety per cent. of the police force, and nearly all the candidates for possible future places. Now if anybody says that a minority sect gets all these plums and preferences without a secrect organization working incessantly and ubiquitously to that end, then we must admit that Americans import, and do not produce, their supply of brains.

TWO MOST SIGNIFICANT INCIDENTS occurred last week in the political world of Europe. On last Friday BISMARCK the "Iron Chancellor," visited Berlin and was publicly, even ostentatiously, received and welcomed by Emperor WILLIAM. The people on the line of the route from Friedrichsruhe to the Imperial Palace were mad with joy. Prince HENRY of Prussia received the great statesman and the Emperor welcomed him with a cordial embrace and a kiss. The desire for reconciliation may have originated from political stress with the Emperor, but it doubtless met with joyous welcome from one whose lifelong principle has been imperialism, and who must have fretted under the enforced antagonism to his nature under which for years he has been living. The Italian ambassador referred to the reconciliation as an historical event of the first magnitude.

ANOTHER INCIDENT IS THE EXPULSION of one the socialist deputies by force from the French Chamber of Deputies. The recent house-to-house search for anarchists could hardly have failed to inflame the socialist deputies in the chamber—to the number of fifty—and they must have chafed at their lack of power to prevent the measures taken by the government. On last Saturday, in a discussion of the subject of search, reference which displeased the socialists was made by a speaker to a socialist member. At once a cry was raised of "Vive la Commune." The President of the chamber demanded from a prominent offender the withdrawal of the cry and was met with defiance. For awhile the uproar caused a suspension of all business, but the President remained firm, and the chamber adopted a vote of censure against the refractory member and ordered his expulsion, which was effected by the military guard. The other socialist members then left in a body.

Life or Death in the Monthly Concert.

In an article, last week, we endeavored to point out the importance, nay the necessity, of a revival of this valuable institution.

We promised to return to the subject again and offer some suggestions, which might be helpful. In redeeming that promise, we shall borrow many thoughts, as we have borrowed the title of this article, from a valuable contribution, on this subject, by one of the District Secretaries of the American Board.

The missionary meetings do not enjoy the reputation of being especially interesting. Why this is so we will not now stop to discuss, but we are perfectly confident in saying that, with a little test, prudence and forethought, they can be made interesting, instructive and inspiring, more so than any other meetings of the Church.

Do not lay the burden of this meeting upon the pastor. Few pastors have the time for the details of such work, and it may be far better for others to do it.

There should be a committee to prepare for the Concert. The benefits, mental and spiritual, to be derived, by those on the Committee are many and rich. The wise pastor is glad to afford such opportunities, of Christian culture among his people.

The selection of this committee may be made annually by the church, or by the several organizations, of the church, where such exist. Ordinarily it will be found most desirable to have upon it an earnest, broad-minded man, with fair intelligence on missionary objects, methods, and literature, then a good active representative from the Ladies' Society, and some one to represent the younger people of the Church.

The fixed purpose and aim should be nothing less than the broad culture of the Church on missionary intelligence.

An opportunity is offered, each month, to bring before the whole Church the work of Christ's kingdom, in its length and breadth.

Different people have special interests, in different branches of the Church's work, some in Home Missions, some in Sabbath-schools, and others in Christian Endeavor, etc.; but the duty of this Committee is larger, to keep a steady hand on the lines and, in the course of the year, present the great phases of Christian missions, leading the people, now by one turn, now by another, even to a broader and truer missionary spirit.

To reach this goal, praying and planning go hand in hand. Difficulties and perplexity will arise in the Committee over the details of a live missionary meeting—but the reward is sure.

One committee, after experience, suggested the following:

ELEMENTS OF DEATH.

1. The reading of "articles," one after another.
2. Several parts at great length.
3. Much recital of naked facts and figures.
4. The formal handling of the program by the pastor.

A lifeless calling of the parts will make the parts lifeless.

ELEMENTS OF LIFE.

1. The exact opposite of the last element of death. It is well to pass the program to the pastor some days before the meeting, that he may make it his own and be in sympathy with the subject. A bare announcement of parts, or reading from the paper as if for the first time, ill befits the occasion. It is in the pastor's power to create respect for an otherwise torpid concert.
2. A well defined object, or topic, around which all the other parts will gather.
3. Something to appeal to the emotional nature, such as touching stories of a missionary life, or poetry and music that have a missionary meaning.
4. Those who take part should stand and speak distinctly.
5. Let the parts be taken briefly though the heavens fall. Let there be variety, with more talking from the heart than reading from a book.
6. Let it never be forgotten that this a Concert of Prayer, and make it so.

Hints. Variety may be secured by using blackboard diagrams, five minute map exercise, "chalk talks," Bible reading, led by one of the people, five minutes talks upon subjects assigned, letters from missionaries, sketches of lives of recently deceased missionaries, imaginary journeys to the field, and all blended with many brief and definite prayers.

THE VOICE IN THE STORM.

Not always under calm and sunny skies
The Lord doth meet us though we seek him there,
Eager to hear him talk of lilies fair
And utter parables that make men wise;
Nor do we find the One whose word we prize
Always at feasts, though he doth love to share
Our social joys and when we feasts prepare
'Tis he with better wine our want supplies;
But sometimes on the wings of storm he comes,
In the deep midnight of our black despair,
'Mid raging waves and winds that never cease;
When the helm fails us, and the cold benumbs
Our helpless hands—then, as we lift our prayer
He speaks, and lo! our hearts are filled with peace.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

III. TWO DECADES OF DEPRESSION, 1831–1851.

In November, 1831, the Rev. George A. Baxter, D. D., succeeded Dr. Rice as Professor of Systematic Theology, and in April. 1834, the Rev. Benjamin M. Smith was appointed Assistant Instructor, a position which he held for four years. No man except the founder has ever done so much for this institution as Dr. Smith; we shall speak at length of his services when we come to the time of his permanent connection with the Seminary twenty years later. In 1835 the Rev. Stephen Taylor, D. D., was elected Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity, being the first incumbent of that chair.

The faculty was an able one, but the hand of Rice was no longer on the helm, the country was just entering upon a period of industrial depression, and the Church was trembling on the verge of a controversy which was destined to split it asunder. The number of students declined; in 1835 there were only twenty. On the issue before the Assembly of 1837 the Faculty divided, Dr. Baxter espousing the cause of the Old School and Drs. Goodrich and Taylor that of the New. "The students almost unanimously determined to leave the institution unless something was done to remedy this state of things." In April, 1838, the Faculty called the attention of the Board to the small number of students (Nineteen—nine in the Senior Class, eight in the Middle, and two in the Junior), stating that they expected a still smaller number in the next session (and in fact there were only 13). Thereupon the Board requested Professors Goodrich and Taylor to resign their positions, stating that on the one hand their views alienated the support of the Old School friends of the Seminary, and on the other did not secure the support of the New School element. To supply the vacancies thus made the Board elected the Rev. Samuel L. Graham, D. D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity; and appointed the Rev. Francis S. Sampson Assistant Instructor, a position which he held for ten years, winning golden opinions on every hand for nobility of character, fervor of piety, fulness of learning, and skill in teaching. In 1849 Dr. Sampson was made Professor of Oriental Literature, and occupied this chair during the remaining five years of his life.

In the meantime Dr. Baxter died (1841), and was succeeded in the chair of Systematic Theology by the Rev. Samuel B. Wilson, D. D. (nomen clarum et venerabile), who spent the rest of his life, twenty-eight years, in the service of the Seminary.

During all these years, for the reasons already referred to, the number of students was small. The total attendance from 1823 to 1850 was indeed 250. But in 1850–'51 there were only twelve, in 1851–'52 only eleven, and in 1852–'53 the same number. In that year, however, there were eight in the Junior Class, which gave reason to hope that the point of lowest depression had been reached and that thenceforth there would be a more encouraging attendance. And so it proved.

AN EXCHANGE OF WORK.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS:—As committees in Tennessee and Texas have been appointed to confer about the meeting of the Northern and Southern Synods in these States, and as nothing practical has grown out of it, it has occurred to me to suggest that instead of attempts at union, the two Assemblies agree to an exchange of work as follows:

1. Let the Southern Church agree to turn over the management of the Colored Evangelistic work entirely to the Northern Church. At the same time let the Southern Assembly still require its churches to make an annual collection for the Colored Evangelistic cause, to be sent to our Atlanta Committee of Home Missions, and by them turned over to the Board of Missions for Freedmen of the Northern Church.

2. Let the Northern Church turn over all its churches and ministers in Southern States to the Southern Church, and let the Northern Board of Home Missions be instructed to appropriate for Home Missions in the South at least as large a sum as they now appropriate for Home Mission work in the South (and larger if in the judgment of the Board it be expedient), and let the Northern Board of Home Missions turn over this fund to be disbursed by the Atlanta Home Mission Committee of the Southern Church.

Some of the advantages of this exchange of work would be:

A more economical use of Northern money in promoting Home Mission work in the South, as, in many instances, a Northern and a Southern Church in a small town could be consolidated, and make one self-supporting Church.

2. Our Northern brethren, seeing that the Home Missionary work in the Southern States is too large for the ability of the Southern Church, very naturally wish to aid in advancing the Presbyterian Church in the South, and wish to share in the good work. They are conscientious in desiring to do this. By this plan their conscience may be satisfied, for they would be contributing of their money (and men too), for this very purpose and placing their money in the hands of a Southern Committee of Home Missions, who are well acquainted with the work of the South and where the money is likely to be spent to the best advantage to accomplish the wishes of the contributors.

3. The Colored Evangelistic work would be likely to be prosecuted more vigorously, and efficiently, and economically, if turned over entirely to the Northern Church. Tuskaloosa Institute would not be needed, or, if retained, could be strengthened. Our Colored Evangelistic Committee would not be needed. And the office expense of administering a large fund is much less in proportion than that necessary to administer a small fund (such as our Colored Evangelistic Fund now is.)

4. Prejudice would be eliminated to a large extent, both in the management of the Colored Evangelistic work, and in the management of Home Missionary work.

Would it not be well for our brethren, both North and South, to consider this whole matter, and see if some action in this direction by the two Assemblies, next May cannot be taken?

This is an age when economies must be closely studied. In railroading, merchandizing, and the management of machinery, economy must be closely applied, so as to eliminate all intermediate and unnecessary office and expenses. So the Church may learn a lesson of economy also, and, perhaps, in the direction I have suggested, may cut down expenses considerably, and be able to raise larger funds and reach better results.

Fraternally yours,
S. F. TENNEY.

God's Kindness.

"We love him because he first loved us." Here is the starting point of love's race. This is the rippling rill which afterwards swells into a river, the torch with which the pile of piety is kindled. The emancipated spirit loves the Saviour for the freedom which he has conferred upon it; it beholds the agony with which the priceless gift was purchased, and it adores the bleeding sufferer for the pains which he so generously endured. On taking a survey of our whole life, we see that the kindness of God has run all through it like a silver thread.

BROKEN CISTERNS WHICH CAN HOLD NO WATER.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It is curious to note the various efforts of the self-righteous to reform the world. These efforts seem particularly rife just at present. In England, there is Gen. Booth with his costly scheme for raising the submerged tenth. In South Africa, a philanthropic German has established a community whose chief advantage is access to free land. And in Australia, arise a people who are called "New Australia" and who follow their teacher William Lane to the rich, unoccupied land of South America to realize their utopia. Much as we long to see the dawn of the promised millenium, we see but broken cisterns in all these schemes. There is too much human invention about them—and too little faith in that fountain of living water, God's own Word. Like the Brook Farmers of New England they are all too self-righteous. If combined genius and learning and honesty of purpose could have ensured success, the experiment at Brook Farm ought not to have been so total a failure, as to call forth Carlyle's sharp sarcasm upon their "trying to reform the world by growing onions." Had his joke made it beans instead of onions, he would have brought it nearer the Boston ideal. The New Australia colony have, as one of their fundamental rules that "women are the equals of men." And that sentiment alone is a bit of worm-eaten timber which will eventually wreck their ship. It is in direct contradiction to God's Word which places woman in subjection to man from Genesis to Revelations. And the South African experiment will fail also, because they offer free land. Land is not free, never—it was never meant to be free; it belongs to God alone; and God has ordained that every citizen shall have the use of a citizen's share of the land during his life-time and then it is to descend to His Son; (or sons, if the double portion of the first-born does not include the whole.) Of course as the population increases, the citizen's share must be readjusted (say every 50th year) and grow smaller and smaller every jubilee, until the population require more room, and they must colonize and begin again the same system.

Every law of God is perfect and brings its own reward. And man-made law is always going to result in failure; total failure for two reasons: they have forsaken God, the fountain of living water, and hewn out for themselves cisterns; broken cisterns which can hold no water. Even when partially obeyed, the laws of God produce wonderfully successful results. The Mormons organized their political system upon that of the Hebrews as ordained by God; and behold the difference between them and the ill-starred Brook Farmers.

Then look at the swarming millions who profess the faith of Islam. To what is it owing but to that outside frame which Mahomet copied from the early Christians. They, the Mahometans, claim that the four great pillars of their ecclesiastical structure are prayer; fasting, alms and cleanliness. They saw the primitive custom of daily prayer preceded by daily ablutions; daily almsgiving and daily self-sacrifice for the poor. And upon these foundations, they planted a religion which, with all its errors, has wonderfully improved the pagan world.

What right had the Romish Church to abolish these safe guards? A convert who comes to the hour of prayer, having his body washed with pure water, is not likely to forget his religion. And a convert who gives up a portion of his daily luxuries in order to contribute to the daily ministrations of his brother saints, (rich or poor) is not likely to forget that one of the pillars of his faith is self-sacrifice. The only sin recorded of Dives is that he fared sumptuously every day. To fare sumptuously while our brethren (the body of Christ) are suffering for food is a sin; a very great sin; yet what multitudes of so-called Christians do it. "For he that eatheth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh judgment to himself, not discerning the Lord's body") (the Church of His saints). And so we no longer have any Agapæ (feasts of love) nor Eucharists (feasts of thanksgiving. We merely have memorial services in reference to the death of our Lord. It was not so when the apostles ordained the first deacons for the daily ministrations. Will no faithful messenger of the God of hosts teach us the truth?

"THE VOICE OF THE LORD IS UPON THE WATERS."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It is in the still small voices that God generally speaks to His children, but there are times when in His infinite wisdom He calls in louder tones, because, "My people doth not know, Israel will not consider."

And surely He is speaking in trumpet tones to us now not only in the flames of burning cities, or in financial calamities, or yet in pestilence, but His voice is heard on the waters, calling to our land to-day.

Oh, that His people would consider! Oh, that we might turn an obedient ear to this Voice that we might see what He means by the judgments that are abroad on the land.

"The Lord doth not afflict willingly (or, as the margin beautifully expresses it, grieve from His heart) the children of men," but He must chasten those He loves, "else were they bastards and not sons."

And the questions must arise in mind and heart of the thoughtful: What have we done, that God's judgments should fall so heavily upon our country? What does God mean to tell us? What object lesson is there in flames, and storms and financial troubles?

With all humility, we would submit the following suggestions:

As a Christian people are we not violating God's express commands by permitting the presence of Pagan worship on American soil?

1. Are we not as a nation breaking openly and deliberately the Fourth commandment?

5. Are we not seeking first the things of this world, rather than the kingdom of God and His righteousness?

The rich man who Christ condemns in the twelfth chapter of Luke was one who "lays up treasure to himself and is not rich toward God."

2. Are we not as Christians, silently acquiescing in the breaking of God's laws, when we do not protest against their violation?

3. Have Christians, especially in the South and West, not kept a cowardly silence in reference to the lawlessness that stalks abroad in the land?

Have not many Christians encouraged mob-law, if not by their participation in the diabolical deeds perpetrated in the name of justice, at least by not protesting against them, and putting a stop to them by every means in their power?

Have we not robbed God by not bringing our tithes into His store-house?

6. Have we not mocked Him by praying: "Thy kingdom come" and living: Let self be advanced?

The sin of idolatry was the sin that brought destruction on God's ancient people, and the violation of the Fourth commandment added sorrows. And through all the years of the declining prosperity of God's people He still pleads with them, promising to keep covenant with them if they would repent, cast out their idols, and keep His commandments.

"Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples, or types, and they are written for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world have come."

Thank God! there may be individuals who can answer an honest "no" to most of the above questions.

In Israel's darkest days God could say: "Yet have I reserved to myself seven thousand men who have bowed the knee to the image of Baal."

"Even so at this present time also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace."

But may God help us from self-deception in this matter, and may He save our country from the fate of Israel!

S.

Give Systematically.

Giving should be systematic as well as spiritual. Order is never a foe to spirituality. Irregularity in giving is as dangerous to the grace as irregularity in prayer. There are no go as you-please methods in the kingdom of heaven. The attempt to leave giving to such methods in the Church has opened the door for the rabble of the world, in a vain endeavor to supplement Christian deliquency by worldly devices to raise money. We might as well ask the world to do our praying for us when Christians neglect their closets, as to ask it to do our giving for us, when Christians withhold their offerings. The only system of giving in the New Testament is a laying aside in store week by week on the Lord's day as the Lord has prospered, so as always to be ready on call. Open an account with the Lord into which you place His gifts and from which you distribute His bounty, and you will find Christian giving as delightful as Christian prayer.—Christian Intelligencer.

A Nut Saved Him.

A nut once saved the life of a German count. A plot had been laid to murder him, and the murderer lay hid in his castle through the day. Before going to bed he drew some things from the pocket, and a nut fell on the floor, which he did not notice. That night the murderer entered the bedroom, but stepped on the nut, which, in breaking, cracked loud enough to waken the count, and the murderer fled.

Who would say that all this was by mere accident? In God's providence the man might have stepped just beside the nut, or the count have picked it up, or he might not have let it fall, or one of a dozen other things might have been; but we know what was, and was not by chance. All things are in God's hands. —Christian Witness.

Suffer Little Children to Come.

Parents are often in doubt about allowing their children to make a profession of religion at an early age, and may withhold them from church-membership because, as they allege, "they do not understand." But often these same children have a clearer perception of the relation of God's children to him than the parents have. The power of children to understand essential truth is often clearer than in older people. De Quincy put the matter plainly when he said; "I maintain steadfastly that into all the elementary feelings of man, children look with more searching gaze than adults. Children have a specific power of contemplating truth that disappears as they enter the world. Children, upon elementary paths which require no knowledge of the world to unravel, tread more firmly than men, and, according to one immortal ode, are in far closer communion with God."—Christian Intelligencer.

Reputation.

A man's reputation, like his coat, may be soiled without touching the man himself, since the reputation is not the character, any more than the sleeve is the arm it envelops. The character can be soiled only by what the man himself does, while the reputation may have mud thrown upon it by any wretch unmanly enough to want to injure the standing of another. We are to see that our motives are pure, our principles honorable, and our outward life governed by them, and then to go about our duty calmly, confident that in the end they who unjustly seek to injure us will do us no harm.

JOINT HEIRS.

There came a precious meaning
Into the Word to-day—
A waft of sweetness from the land
That is not far away,
A thought so pure, so high, so strong,
That in my lonely lot
I kept the measure of a song,
And bore me free from spot.

Joint heirs with Christ the Blessed,
The Father's only Son,
So lifted into equal place
With that Beloved One.
So given rights to sonship
Before the Father's face,
So made the heir of all things,
By heaven's most royal grace.

Not as the younger children
Who forth from home may fare,
But as the first-born of the line
The birthright I shall share.
In the presence of the Father,
Uplifted by the Son,
I shall be loved as Christ is loved
And dwell near to His throne.

Dear thought that bids me cherish
To-day the hidden name
Which will be mine when Jesus
His own shall come to claim;
Dear hope that casts its glory,
A charm o'er daily care,
And gives me joy and freedom
Oft as I kneel in prayer.

Joint heir with Christ the Blessed,
The Christ-life mind to live,
And every day some sacrifice
Of my own will to give,
Some trial to endure for Him,
Some brother's load to ease,
Or in the quiet home routine
Some little child to please.

Joint heir with Christ in heaven,
Joint heir with Christ on earth,
Made equal in the Father's sight,
Divinely dowered in birth.
A waft of precious meaning
Comes floating from that word,
A harp note from the ceaseless strain,
By saints and angels heard.

Presbyterianism Tolerant.

In the religious world there has always existed much confusion of thought and beliefs. Hence denominations, sects, and parties have arisen to divide the great catholic body, the Church. This diversity comes from the imperfeceion of man's knowledge, his peculiar mental characteristics, and the bias of associations and education. Uniformity of belief, by some most devoutly wished for and urged, does not seem to be attainable nor practicable.

Identity of belief is not consistent with the law of progress. The Great Creator has shown no tendency to preserve uniformty in His works. All around us we observe infinite variety and diversity. No two things are identical in every feature and outline. No two leaves of the same tree, no two flowers of the same plant are just alike in every part. Even the innumerable grains of sand on the seashore, under the microscope present a variety of outline, as great as the mountains and hills around us.

If such diversity indicates the wisdom of the Divine Creator, may we not expect the same in mental characteristics, modes of thought, and forms of expression?

A distinctive principle of Presbyterianism is the right of the individual to think and speak after his own way. With the Bible as his guide, he must follow the dictates of his own conscience and reason, and the light within him, as he must answer to God. That conviction of personal responsibility to the Great Judge of all, made him capable of the highest endurance and self-denial, yea, even a martyr's death. For this liberty he was willing to sacrifice comfort, position, and all earthly reward. Such was the spirit of the Reformers, the Puritans of England, and the Pilgrim Fathers of Holland. Plymouth Rock stands to-day as the symbol of this personal right and liberty divinely accorded to every man.

When the Christian comes into a larger freedom of the truth his heart extends a greater charity towards brethren who may not agree with him. He loves the truth, but he loves his brother more, and sympathizes with him, even while their thoughts and convictions may differ. The liberty which he claims for himself, in all justice, and reason, he accords to his brethren of other views and conclusions.

The well-equipped Presbyterian Christian has a clearly defined Creed. He finds great help from it. But he rests on the solid rock of Bible truth. The standards of his Church are to his mind the best expression, so far as he knows, of the substance of Christian doctrine. But his final appeal is to the Bible. Creeds are fallible and subject to revision, but the Bible is as unchangeable as the Author Himself. But thus equipped and settled in his convictions of truth, he is qualified then to embrace, in all due regard and charity, his brethren whose creed and modes of thought do not harmonize with his own.

Such tolerance, however, is not indifference. It does not extend to the enemies of the evangelical truth—to the caviler and the destroyer of truth and morality, nor to the man who sees in all religions equal merit, and therefore pronounces all good in their place. To none of these is there a claim for such charity. But to the earnest, reverent seeker of truth from the great source and fountain of truth—the Word of God, to the great evangelical body of Christians, is our plea for all forbearance and charity towards views different from our own, and yet not essential to the Christian system.

It is to the honor of the Church that on all the vital truths of Christianity she stands a unit. The Bible is the common platform. And now, as never before, her various branches are coming to recognize this unity in all the essentials in one another. The acrimony of controversy has passed away. More emphasis is placed upon the character of the work being done in building up Christ's Kingdom and saving men. There is, likewise, a growing spirit of co-operation in Christian work, union services and united efforts are the error of the day. The great army is closing ranks and keeping step. They together give origin to the "Blended strain from which issues the perfect music, which utters the perfect truth."

In the Presbyterian fold there is observed a growing tolerance toward inquiry and criticism. Less than a score of years ago, no minister in the Church would dare question the truth of any article of her Creed. To-day some of the conservative challenge certain alleged defects and shortcomings of that Confession.

More liberty is given to inquire and test human formulas of doctrine by the teachings of the Bible. That means progress, and is the only true attitude of mind to receive greater truth. Nor can this spirit of inquiry be arrested by any voice or decree of a Church Court. To the devout inquirer, seeking the truth in love, and with reverence for the services of it, we may safely trust the issues.

Upon private members the Presbyterian system lays no formulated Creed. He is not supposed to know or understand so condensed a system of doctrine as our Confession of Faith. He is only asked to receive such truths as are regarded by the Evangelical Church as essential to Christian experience and Christian love.

This trends towards a broader charity is demonstrated in our Church, in her large and undenominational spirit in certain lines of Christian work. Denominationalism is necessary for organization, co-operation, and efficiency in the work. But the Presbyterian Church has always lent a willing hand in support of the undenominational enterprises of the American Bible Society, the Tract Society, and Sunday-school Union. Through these and other channels, large streams of benevolence have flowed, showing her devotion to the great common cause of building up the kingdom of our common Lord. The spirit of comity and Christian union has always received the hearty support of the Presbyterian Church. She pleads for Christian union and co-operation in the great common cause—she asks a halt in the unseemly rivalry of Churches that crowd in upon one another, in the new and sparse districts of our country, to their injury, if not to their destruction.

So the spirit of Christian union and fellowship is working out itself in this closer coming together of brethren of different branches of Christ's Church. In this growing unity the Saviour's prayer is being answered. All hail the day of its fulfilment!—Rev. S. M. Glenn, in Philadelphia Presbyterian.

The Yielded Life.

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Jesus of Nazareth has again conquered, and Saul of Tarsus has found his Master. The proud Pharisee is in the dust, humbled, penitent and submissive. He surrenders his self life, and Jesus becomes Lord of his heart. He yields up his own plans that Jesus may rule in his life. This is essential. There must be no reserve, or Paul will fail of the high place God has planned for him, and the "chosen vessel" will be spoiled.

Jesus must have entire management of the life that would receive of his fullness. It is here that we fail, and self is the source of our weakness. We cherish our plans, and do our pleasure, and blunder. The complete Christian life is found in a hearty, unreserved yielding to the Master's plan.

Once the disciples were in danger of shipwreck because they were managing the vessel. They awakened Jesus, and let him take command, and immediately there was a calm and perfect safety.

They once toiled with the oar till past midnight, and made no headway toward the desired land. Then they saw Jesus walking on the waters, and welcomed him aboard. And when he had taken charge of the boat they quickly reached the shore.

They dragged their nets throughout the whole night and caught no fish. But in the morning, when they reached land, Jesus drew near. He entered the boat as Commander. "Launch out into the deep; let down your nets," he said. They obeyed, and drew up so great a catch that the nets broke.

We have tried to be holy and helpful, and have been humiliated by our weaknesses and failures. Is there not a more excellent way? Why not let Jesus take complete control, and do in us what we have failed to do? Acknowledge him as our King, who has absolute right to do with us as he pleases. Be willing that self be crucified, and that Jesus be enthroned in our hearts. Be willing to have our plans set aside, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ."

Invite Jesus to occupy your whole being as Lord of the house, and be thou his bond-servant. Commit every care to him. Receive everything needed from him. The blessed Lord will assume the responsibility for the success of the life which is fully yielded to him.—Rev. Charles A. Oliver.

A Newspaper Item.

We read in the paper the other day an incident replete with shame and horror. A man had lost one of his legs in some railroad accident. As soon as he was able he journeyed to the company's headquarters and received $150 as reimbusement. It was in his mind to secure with this money a winter's supply of household goods for his wife and children. But instead, he "laid it out" in sport and drink. Every cent was thus squandered. When soberness returned he realized his weakness and his criminality, and taking a dose of strychnine he ended his days.

This tale though no more painful than hundreds of others in the liquor annals of to-day, has been haunting us ever since we read it, and our imagination has suggested the features of the picture. We think we see the man as he leaves the railroad office. In the rooms of the large corporation there has been shown him an official consideration and a sense of justice, and perhaps along with that there was also some manifestation of kindly sympathy in his misfortune. Perhaps he had never been "made so much of" before. The $150 is a large sum in his eyes. On his moderate standard of outlays it will go very far. Then there arises in his mind a noble thought—his thought of home. The money shall avail for the wife and children as well as for himself. How glad they will be to see such an amount, and how much of home comfort it will represent in their eyes! The poor man is proud and happy as he thinks of their gladness.

Now we see him out on the streets. What know the people there of his bright visions? What interest have they in the wife and children waiting eagerly his return? He is a stranger on these streets, and his thoughts are with his home. Pursuing his course, his way leads him by a saloon. Soon he passes another. In fact, the way seems lined with them. Fumes from the open doors strike his nostrils. At length he stops at one and takes a look within. It is an inviting scene to his eye—the cordial bar-keeper, the bottles drawn up in battle-array, the loungers, the cozy chairs. Well; he will celebrate his good fortune of money by taking a drink. The liquor is good to his taste, and with his well filled purse he thinks he can afford another. Now, maudlin with liquor, he boastfully displays his money, and instantly is attended with a bevy of boon companions. We need not imagine the further stages. His better feelings of a few hours past, his visions of home and dependent ones, his responsibility as a husband and father, the wants of the coming winter, all these unselfish and manly thoughts are gone. He makes a fool of himself, a beast, a despicable creature, and a criminal before the bar of an outraged domestic hearth. At length appetite sated, the debauch over, the money all gone, there comes remorse and self-loathing. His reason, or his despair, tells him such a life is not worth living, and in reckless resolve he ends it forever. Oh, the wickedness and ignominy and the self-incurred responsibility of such a horror! And oh, the flagrant, crying iniquity of the saloons which line our streets as decoys to hell. The $150 has changed owners, the bottles are refilled, and the portals of death stand ready for another victim.—Mid-Continent.

Pearls From Thomas a-Kempis.

"A certain woman," says a-Kempis in a "Sermon to Novices," "who loves those things which are God's, used to visit frequently the church, and to hear freely the preaching of the Word of God.

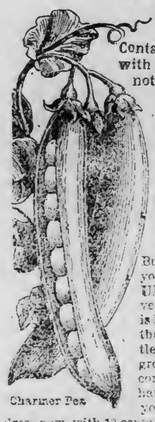
"Once, when coming out of the church, she was asked what good she had retained out of the sermon. Answering briefly, she said: 'I know not how to tell you much; but I heard well and retained this, that I am unwilling to sin.' She answered well and prudently, as she had carried with her the fruit of a good discourse, that she would sin no more. Hence our Saviour says in the Gospels to the devout woman: 'Happy are they who hear the Word of God and keep it.'"

"Study at first," he writes in his "Garden of Roses," "to learn humbly and to perform little things, and God will give thee greater things to understand more quickly if it would be useful to thee. He who knows and reads many things, if he does not do what he has known and learnt, departs empty and hungry from a full table."

"Our own curiosity," he declares in Doctrinal Juvenum," "often hinders us in the reading of the Scriptures when we wish to understand and discuss, where we should simply pass on. If you wish to drink profitably read humbly, simply and faithfully, nor even wish for the name of learning. Ask freely and hear quickly the words of the saints, let not the parables of the elders displease thee, for they were not produced without cause."

"Whatever things are written in the Old and New Covenant," says Thomas a-Kempis in the "Valley of Lilies," "are written to teach our souls that we may serve God faithfully by hating evil, and by cleaving to God, our highest happiness, with a pure heart, whole and perfect here and hereafter."

Forget.



If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbor's faults. Forget the slander you ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding, and give little thought to the cause that provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and only remember the good points that make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories that you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out, as far as possible, all the disagreeables of life: they will come, but they will grow larger as you remember them, and constant thought of the acts of meanness, or, worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more familiar with them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday; start out with a clean sheet for to-day, and write upon it, for sweet memory's sake, only those things that are lovely and lovable.—Lutheran Observer.

True Piety.

The piety that Christ smiles upon is a piety that will stand a pinch and face a storm; that would rather eat an honest crust than fare sumptuously on unholy gains; that gladly gives up its couch of ease to sally on its mission among the outcasts; that sets its Puritan face like a flint against fashionable sins. We talk glibly about "taking up the cross," but a cross is intended for somebody's crucifixion. On Calvary's cross we know full well who bled away His precious life. On our cross self is to be the victim. Paul, the heroic, was emphasizing this fact when he commanded Christians to mortify their members which are upon the earth. The American revision of the New Testament hits the sense of this passage more accurately: "Put to death your own members," etc. Loyalty to Christ often demands the plucking out of the right eye and the amputation of the right arm. The sublime glory of Abraham's offering really was that he was willing to thrust the knife through the very heart of self. O, it is not the taking up, it is the giving up, that makes a strong, athletic, heroic Christian.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D.

SUPPORT OF INDIVIDUAL MISSIONARIES AS SPECIAL OBJECTS.

Of our missionaries now in the field fifty-three are supported in whole or in part, as special objects, by separate churches, groups of churches, missionary societies or individuals.

There is a larger number for whom no such provision has been made, who are supported out of the general fund of our treasury. We will send a list of those, on application, to any church, missionary society, or person desiring to engage in this special object work. From this list a selection may be made of any one, whose support, either in whole or in part, they may wish to undertake.

On notice of such selection being sent to the Foreign Mission office, the missionary will be notified of the fact, and the parties contributing will be put in correspondence with him or her, as the case may be.

Our experience is that this plan of work always increases the churches' interest in missions, and as a rule contributions are increased ; sometimes as much as two or three fold. We will be glad to hear from enough churches to take up all the names now on our roll, and will be glad to correspond with any church on the subject, and furnish all information that may be desired.

Churches in Wilmington Presbytery :—I am gratified to be able to state the Lord continues to bless us within the bounds of my work. Our new church in Smith's township, in this county, wil soon be ready for occupation. We have recently received one member at Harmony, one at Stanford, two at Hebron and one within the bounds of the Chinquepin church - all persons of mature years. J. D. STANFORD.

Items from Gaston county :

Lowell :—At our first quarterly communion at Lowell on first Sabbath of January, we had two additions. Bro. J. W. Siler, a favorite with our people, was with us, and did work for the Master. The annual report showed that this church paid to all causes of the Church about $9 per member.

New Hope :—On second Sabbath we held our first quarterly communion at New Hope. Our expected brother, to our regret, failed to come. Had two additions. Our annual report even though the times are pressing, and we have lost by removals, was much better than our last. To God be all the praise.

From this church the following Sunday-scholars have memorized and recited the catechism and received Bibles, viz :

Mary Craig, Myrtle Bradley, Florence Hoffman, Emma Rankin, Emma Harrison, Nona Harrison, Carrie McKee, Cora Lewis, Mary Bradley, Mary Hoffman, Cevetus Hoffman.

The following children at Lowell have done the same :

Erwin Robinson, Irene Hamilton, Jasper Hand. Two of these are boys and thirteen are girls. With well drilled catechism-girls I think there is hope for the church.

Belmont :—On third Sabbath we had our communion at Belmont. Bro. Williamson was with us on the week days. He gave us well digested sermons. Owing to the weather, roads and the sickness of a number of our family our congregations were small. We deferred our annual report till our next appointment, and we are confident that this report as a whole will be the best in the history of this young church.

Hope for Gaston County Presbyterianism :—For the first time in a number of years all of our church are supplied with regular preaching of the Word, and so far as I know these men are acceptable to their people. I don't think we have a single schism or contentious feud in any of our thirteen or fourteen churches. We hope soon to form a ministerial association to look after our interests throughout the county, and do as much evangelistic work as we can consistently with our pastoral duties. By the help of the Lord we hope to do this year great things for our God. R. A. M.

Rutherfordton :—The church at Rutherdton, made vacant by the resignation of Rev G. A. Sparrow, has tendered an invitation to Rev. G. A. Hough, of Brittain, to serve them for half time till spring meeting of Presbytery with a view of making the arrangements permanent.

Union Revival Meetings :—Meetings properly called "revival" meetings, have been held for something over four weeks in Tabb-Street Presbyterian church, Petersburg- Dr. Rosebro's. The church has been filled to overflowing and about one hundred and firty persons have professed faith in Christ and united with some evangelical church.

These meetings are properly styled "Union" meetings. Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians heartily unite in them and work together in delightful harmony. A committee of three ministers, from the denominations named have the conduct of the meetings and decide where services shall be held each week, who is to preach and when.

Bolivar :—On last Sunday the Presbyterian church of Bolivar, enjoyed its third quarterly celebration of the Lord's Supper since the beginning of the present pastorate. During the last quarter thirteen were received into the church on examination, and three by letter. At the Thursday evening prayer-meeting of last week, a congregational meeting was held for the purpose of electing one more elder and deacon, which resulted in the election of Mr. J. T. Roberts as elder, and Mr. Geo. T. Ingram as deacon. Bro. Roberts was already a ruling elder, having been ordained as such by the session of the Laurinburg church in the Presbytery of Fayetteville. From that church he was dismissed to Bethesda church in the same Presbytery, in which he was again elected and installed to serve in the capacity of ruling elder, and from which he was dismissed to this church only a few months ago.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore Sun : The trial of Rev. David B. Greigg, pastor of the Twelfth Presbyterian church, who was charged by certain members of his church session with acting in a manner unbecoming a minister and with a violation of the government and discipline of the Presbyterian Church, came to an abrupt end before the Baltimore Presbytery on Thursday by Mr. Gregg entering a qualified plea of guilty. To the charge of conduct unbecoming a minister there were five specifications, stating that Mr. Gregg threatened violence to members of the congregation and session ; that he said certain persons would have to leave the church, and that he disturbed the peace of the church by calling on some young men to throw one of the elders out. Mr. Greigg admitted that this was all true, but said the provocation had been great. The specifications to the second charge were to the effect that he usurped power not his in attempting to govern the church without the session ; that he called a meeting of the congregation without proper authority and took part in its illegal action, which consisted in part of the election of three elders, and that he refused to call a meeting of the session when requested to do so by a majority of its members, and at a subsequent meeting of the session refused to entertain certain resolutions. In pleading guilty to the second charge Mr. Greigg said the action complained of had taken place after consultation and with the advice of prominent clergymen, without intention of violating the law of the Church and with the conviction that he was right. A third charge, that of violating his ordination vows, was thrown out by Presbytery. The verdict of the Presbytery was that it was unnecessary to censure Mr. Greigg further than to counsel him to endeavor to heal existing breaches in the church to avoid occasions of offense in the future. It also passed a resolution requesting all parties to the case to forget past grievances and be peaceable in future.

The three ruling elders it is understood will transfer their membership to other churches. [The result would seem to be a settlement that will hardly settle.]

In 1853 a Mrs. Davey conveyed property on 166th street, New York city, to the Roman Catholic Church authorities with the condition that in a reasonable time a house of worship should be built and consecrated on the land. A few days ago the courts on an ejectment suit brought against Archbishop Corrigan turned the property over to the plaintiff. The land is now worth $60,000.

A CALL.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Is not this an unmistakable call from God to the churches of our Synod ?

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST :—Do you know that Rev. J. W. Moore and his sister have applied to the Assembly's Committee to be sent to the mission field in Japan, and have been informed that there is no money with which to send them ? Let us stop and think what this means !

It will be remembered that Rev. Mr. Moore returned from Japan several months since on account of the illness of his devoted wife. Since his return to this country, God has indeed led him through deep waters. First, his infant child was taken into the arms of the Good Shepherd and safely folded above. And, in a little while, the mother was called to follow her beloved into the Saviour's presence. And now in the midst of these storms of life the heart of Mr. Moore in its loneliness and grief turns to the benighted heathen across the sea, whom he loves so much and for whose salvation he has already labored with such earnest success.

One obstacle, however, seemed to lay in the way of the accomplishment of his heart's desire. God had left him one dear little child—his solace in his bereavement and the one remaining link with the happy past. But what could he do ? It was too much to give up this little one and leave her behind in this country and yet he could not carry him in his tender years back with him to the mission field.

God preciously solved this problem for him by making his sister willing to give herself to the work. This seemed to remove the hindrances completely and gladly and confidently did these two young servants of Christ ask the Executive Committee to send them at once to Japan. But alas ! they were doomed to a very sore disappointment for the answer came back from Nashville that the funds did not allow the committee to authorize their departure.

What is the significance of this reply to the Christian people of our Synod ? Is it not a distinct and solemn call to us, brethren, to come up to the help of the Lord in this matter and supply the necessary funds to enable our missionaries to go on their way rejoicing ?

This will appear the more emphatic too when we recall this fact : We have only two male missionaries for the Synod of North Carolina, Rev. John Davis and Rev. J. W. Moore. One of these is at home in the Providence of God and to-day, earnestly urges the Church to send him back to this field of labor. Brethren of this noble Synod, will we allow this brother to call to us in vain ? Is not this God's voice and can we thus allow it to be unheeded ? God forbid ! Are there not some consecrated men and women who will feel moved by this appeal to furnish the means for this brother and sister to go forth to the Master's service at once ? Or cannot our churches by united, earnest effort raise the salaries of these two missionaries and bid them go forward without delay upon this journey ? I have this proposition to make : Let us forwith raise an emergency fund of $1,800 to defray the travelling expenses and furnish the necessary outfit of these servants of God and support them for one year in Japan. I say for one year only, because by the end of that time the Assembly's Committee will be able, doubtless, to put them upon their books ?

Who then will respond to this call ? We are abundantly able to do this thing. May God give us a willing mind to do our duty when His call is so clear and so urgent.

Will not the people of God in our Synod send to me immediately, sufficient names and pledges to secure the payment of this amount ? Let us act quickly brethren, "for the King's business requireth haste."

Yours in the Master's name,
ALFRED T. GRAHAM,
Agt. For. Mis. in the Synod of N. C.

MANSE UNION CHURCH, GASTON COUNTY, N. C.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

TO THE N. C. PRESBYTERIAN :—It is with pleasure we have read in the recent issues of your paper so many notices from the brethren of the ministry of the kindness, hospitality and substantial evidences of the love of their people, but we are sure that none of these can exceed what has been done for the pastor at Union and Olney churches in Gaston county. Since taking charge of this field the good people have shown a spirit of love, kindness and generous appreciation of their pastor that is indeed refreshing. Pantry, barn, stable, poultry-house have all been kept filled while the good ladies of the congregations have determined that we shall not get cold. We doubt if any other brother ever had as many pretty quilts, &c., given him by his people. Personally we are not much of an advocate for giving publicity to these things between pastor and people, but since it is the custom we fall into line assured that no people ever deserved it more than these, and we hereby acknowledge all these courtesies and hold them out to other churches that they may "go and do likewise."

Surely they will receive their reward, and we pray that the coming year may not only be one of great temporal but spiritual prosperity.

The second Sabbath at Olney was our regularly quarterly communion and services were held from Thursday until and including Sunday, while the attendance was good. Each day it was large on Saturday and quite large on Sunday. It does the minister's heart good to preach to such large serious and attentive congregations and cheers him in his work. Only one person was added to the church, but the season was enjoyed by all. Saturday, the 20th, we attended services in Bro. McAlister's church in South Carolina (Bethel) and heard an excellent sermon from Rev. B. P. Reed, of Kershaw, S. C He is a good preacher, a wonderfully ready talker and a better beggar for Home Missions. In Bro. McAllister we found an old school and class-mate which makes it pleasant as we are only five miles apart. If Bro. Miller and Smith in this county can carry out their project for work, &c., the better parts of old Mecklenburg will have to pick up and brush up. First Sunday in February is our communion season at Union.

THE BIRMINGHAM CONFERENCE ON THE SUBJECT OF NEGRO EVANGELIZATION.

MR. EDITOR :—The text of the report adopted by the joint committee of the Northern and Southern branches of the Presbyterian Church, as to the future management of the colored work, is before your readers through the columns of your valuable journal. In reference to which let the following facts be carefully noted :

1. That the Southern Church is required to yield its opposition to the system of Boards, against which it has earnestly contended since its organization in 1861—its leading men warmly resisting the policy in the undivided Church, long before the late war. It is now arranged for us that we deliberately recede from our declared principles on this subject ; and re-adopt the system which we have long since rejected, as being foreign to the Constitution and government of the Presbyterian Church.

2. Not only so : but this Board is to be constituted of persons who belong to distinct bodies, having no ecclesiastical relations ; and its operations are to be subject to the review and control of courts which do not recognize the same authority. Can such an anomaly be seriously proposed for adoption ? Or is the suggestion made with a secret purpose to effect, surreptitiously, a fusion of the two bodies into one ?

3. This Board is to consist of twenty-two members ; of whom fifteen are to belong to the Northern Branch, and seven only to the Southern Branch ; thus binding us hand and foot, by a majority against us of two to one, in submission to a body distinct and foreign to us.

4. This Board, in which we are in a hopeless minority, is a corporate society, holding property and to which bequests are made ; and by this Board all monies are to be disbursed in the work of Colored Evangelization.

5. This Board is to have its seat at Pittsburg—a place far removed from us, and where our influence will scarcely ever penetrate.

6. We are thus to be delivered over, body and soul, to the Northern Board of Missions for Freedmen—giving them full jurisdiction over us in a matter more intricate than any other, and in which our people are peculiarly jealous of foreign interference—a matter which involves the most difficult social problems, and in which our interest are most vitally concerned.

If it is the design of this report to inaugurate a movement looking to the unification of the two Churches, it has simply blundered into a movement to arouse the fiercest antagonism that can be engendered.

Yours truly,
B. M. PALMER.

BEWARE OF RABBI SERGIUS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

In July, 1893, Savannah, Ga., was afflicted with one Rabbi John Sergius, Ben Israel. He said he was a Christian Jew by inheritance, being descended from Jews who were converted at Pentecost in Jerusalem, or in India by the Apostle Thomas. He affirmed that there were many thousand Christian Jews in India, and that he was the pastor of a large but very poor congregation and Sabbath-school of Jews in the province of Travancore, on the Malabar coast in Madras Presidency The rabbi was accompanied by his wife and three children ; the former was said to have been a Zanana missionary of an English Missionary Society Assistance was asked for himself and his work.

ENDORSEMENTS.

Numerous complimentary letters were shown from clergymen for whom he had lectured or preached, and who took up collections for him and his work. He also offered to exhibit his church court's endorsement from India. Several ministers in Savannah were thus induced to let him address their congregations, and to give him a collection. His historic statements, however, differed from those of reliable historians and travelers. Other circumstances, too, aroused suspicion that he was not what he professed to be. Inquiries were made of great Missionary Boards, and of persons who had commended him ; but all failed to give light as to who the man was

A letter of inquiry was then written by Rev. L. C. Vass, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Savannah, to Rev. S. Mateer, a Missionary of the London Missionary Society in Trevandrum, Travancore District, Southern India, Asia, as Sergius hailed from that region. Recently the following reply has been received.

THE RABBI UNMASKED.

TREVANDRUM, Oct. 7th, 1893.

"DEAR DR. VASS :—Your letter comes to me, as Mr. Mateer is in England. Never having heard of any Christian Jews in the L. M. S., or Southern part of Travancore, I sent it on to Dr. Hodges, C. M. S., (i. e. Church Missionary Society), Bishop of Travancore. His Secretary writes me for him : "Sergius is a gross impostor, for there are no Christian Jews in Travancore." The Venerable Archdeacon Koshi, D. D., a native gentleman of long experience of this land, says : "I have never head of such a person as Sergius, or of a Jewish Christian congregation in Travancore. The whole story appears to be a black species of imposture,"

This is to my mind conclusive ; that is, if his reference to Travancore is correct. This, of course, is but a very small part of India ; and we should know the name of the place where his schools are, to be quite sure. * * * I am sorry I cannot send you better news, but you will be able to deal with the matter all right I trust. * * *

Yours most sincerely,
HAROLD J. WILLS, M. A.,
Lay Missionary,
L. M. S.,
(London Missionary Society.)

On Sunday, December 31st, 1893, Rabbi Sergius is reported to have preached in the Baptist church in New Bern, N. C. He also lectured in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. In both places collections were taken up for his work, according to the report in the New Bern Journal ; as he says his local church has six missions, his denomination has three hundred and sixty missionaries at work !

But the foregoing letter, and all the circumstances surrounding this man, seem clearly to indicate that he is an impostor, getting money under false colors. The American Israelite, edited by the distinguished Rabbi Wise, of Cincinnati. Ohio, denounces him as an "Oriental scamp ;" says, "the story that Mr. Sergius tells altogether lacks probability, and we have no doubt he is laughing in his sleeve at the fine harvest he is reaping from his dupes."

Sergius is a man of low stature, stout, with dark and long hair and whiskers. His address is plausible, his manners unctuous, and his English very broken and indistinct. He says he came by way of Vancouver, through British America. He left Savannah ostensibly for the World's Fair ; leaving his wife and children in a small house on Second Avenue. Finally they disappeared, and have perhaps joined him in his tramps.

Let all beware of this man and the letters he has from persons in this country, who know nothing of him, except what he says about himself. It takes a goodly sum of money for a man to travel over two continents, and the Pacific Ocean, with a wife and three children. Not much would remain for the six missions, the orphans he pleads for and the three hundred and sixty missionaries, if they existed.

LIGHT ON THE CHURCH ERECTION PROBLEMS.

BY REV. W. P. MC CORKLE.

My last "mail" in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN has brought some help. Rev. P. H. Dalton of Mocksville, sends $3.00 as the contributions of himself and wife—a dollar for each of my three churches. Bro. Thos. W. Dixon, of Rutherfordton, handed me $1.00 for the Waco church. May God bless these dear friends, and reward them a thousand fold. Bro. Dalton exhorts me to "keep on wailing," and reminds me that in former years he lifted up his voice in behalf of the churches of High Point, Jamestown and Tarboro, and succeeded in securing neat and comfortable churches at all these points. I shall take his advice. Bro. Campbell, let us "cry aloud, and spare not." We need help, "and that right early."

Here is how the account stands with Waco church :

Contributed by	Presbytery.....	$ 50 00
"	" Shelby church.....	14 00
"	" Mrs. Elam.....	2 00
"	" Rev. and Mrs. P. H. Dalton.....	1 00
"	" Bro. T. W. Dixon..	1 00
Total.....		$ 68 00

This amount, with local subcriptions, has enabled the committee to put the house under cover. The flooring is ready, and will be laid as soon as the weather will permit. Sash, blinds and doors have been paid for and are ready to be placed. But there is not a dollar in the treasury to buy other necessary materials—such as laths, bench-timber, lime and nails—and to pay for the work that is next to be done. Who else will give us more light on our problem, by sending a contribution for this church.

WILMINGTON P. ESBYTERY.

The collections in the Presbytery this month are for Presbyterial Home Missions. We have two men in the field whose support is almost entirely derived from this collection, while others are in part dependent upon it. Without this fund five counties and about fifteen churches would be deprived of the preaching of the Word by our Church. Cards have been sent to the churches naming the amount each church is apportioned. A determined effort in each church to raise this amount will enable us to carry on this work for the Lord.

February 11.—God's Covenant with Abram.

Gen. xvii. 1-9. Commit vss. 7, 8.

Golden Text.—He believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness. Gen. xv. 6.

Topic.—God's everlasting covenant.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Note the four stages of the promise to Abram before this lesson; (1.) When commanded to go into the land (xii. 1-3); (2.) When he had come into the land (xii. 7); (3.) When Lot had chosen the country of the plain (xiii 14-18, read whole chapter); (4.) When he had defeated Chedorlaomer (chapters. xiv. and xv). Consider reason for each of the last two revelations. In chapter xvi. we see how Sarai presumptuously tried to help out the Lord in the fulfilment of His promise, and the unhappy results of the experiment. These events and the increasing satisfaction of Abraham in Ishmael (xvii. 18) were the occasion of this the fifth stage of the promise.

Second Step. Study the text of the lesson itself and note what it says as to:

1. God revealing Himself, vss 1, 3.
2. The everlasting covenant, promising (a) a numerous and powerful offspring, vss. 2, 4, 6; (b) an assured dwelling, vs. 8; (c) a covenant God, vss. 7, 8.
3. The witness of the new name, vs. 5.
4. The Divine requirements, vss. 1, 9.

Third Step. Write out a summary of the lesson, and compare it with the one below, correcting yours or improving ours:

SUMMARY. [Thirteen years after the birth of Ishmael (vs. 25)] when Abram was ninety-nine years old, God appeared to him and declaring His own omnipotence required from him a perfect walk. To His reverent servant He revealed the nature of the everlasting covenant He was about to make, assuring him of a numerous and powerful seed, of a secure possession of Canaan, and of God to be His God, and the God of His seed. As a token of its fulfilment He changed his name to Abraham, and in turn required Abraham and his seed to fulfil the conditions of the covenant.

Fourth Step. Take up any points needing explanation and consult your helps.—for example:

Many nations, vs. 4—Properly, as in the margin, "a multitude of nations." The text of Gen. xxviii. 3 uses this expression of Jacob, but there the margin is correct, "an asssembly of nations" and the same is true of the two other places where the expression is used. Jacob was the father only of one confederated people. Abraham of many distinct peoples, both literally (vs. 20, xxv. 1-4; xxvi. 9) and spiritually (Rom. v. 11, 16, 17.)

Abram—Abraham, vs. 5. Ab-ram, high father, was the name given at birth, with the optimism common in the giving of Oriental names. Ab-raham, father of a great multitude, was deliberately given by God to signify a certain event.

Fifth Step. Take up the topics suggested by the lesson and trace them through the Bible. Most good, perhaps, will be gotten by giving all your time to the one topic of God's covenant relations to His people, brought out in vss. 7 and 8. Attention to the context will bring out fidelity and protecting care on God's part and His expectation and demand for trust and obedience on the part of His people. This topic runs through the whole Bible.

A covenant people and a covenant God.

The covenant with Abraham—a fulfilment of the blessing of Shem. Gen. ix. 26, 27. (See reading of last verse give Jan 18.)

The covenant renewed to Isaac (Gen. xxvi. 3-5), and to Jacob (Gen. xxviii. 13-15).

Confirmed to Moses, Ex. iii, 6, 7, 12.

Embodied in legislation, Ex. xxix. 43-46, Lev xxvi. 11, 12.

Repeated in view of the captivity, Jer. xxxi. 33; xxxii. 38-40; Hos. i. 9, 10.

And during the captivity, Ez. xi. 20; xxxvi. 25-28; xxxvii. 26, 27.

And after the restoration, Zech. viii. 8; xiii. 9.

In view of the coming Christ, Mal. iii. 6, (See context, especially vs. 1)

Enlarged to the Gentiles in Christ, Eph. ii. 11-22, Gal. iii. 14, 29; 2 Cor. vi. 16-18.

Consummated in glory, Rev. xxi. 2-4.

Sixth Step. Appropriate the practical teachings of the lesson. The leading idea is brought out in vs. 1. God being what He is we do not have to help out His plans by doubtful or sinful expedients (as Abraham had done in the matter of Hagar) but only to walk before him with a perfect heart. To us, as brought out in the Bible Reading is the same covenant promise, "I will be a God to thee." Having these promises, let us cleanse ourselves, etc., 2 Cor. vii. 1. Note preceding verses.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

First Step. Close Bibles and put away Lesson Papers.

Second Step. Question on the connection, Topic and Golden Text.

Third Step. Draw out the story of the lesson from the class.

Fourth Step. Open Bibles and question on difficult points, and answer questions from the class.

Fifth Step. Have a ten minutes Bible reading on the topic given, drawing out of the context what God is to His people, and what His people must be to Him.

Sixth Step. Apply Catechism, Questions 3, 20 and 42.

Prize Questions.

Some of those sending in answers seem to think that all questions must be answered by a reference to a text, and nothing more. When a name is called for it should be given in the answer though it is found in the reference. Then the reference should be given to sustain the answer. We have not yet counted this against any one, but will have to do so in the future. In several cases, however, a text was given that mentioned the name, but did not prove the point. This we had to count as a mistake. Several answers to 11 gave Lamech and Noah. The reference to Enoch is so distinct that by comparison it excludes all others, especially as Noah was referred to under a different term in the next question.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF JAN. 18.

13. (a) Matt. xxiv. 37-39; (b) Luke xvii. 26, 27.
(Although the sayings are so similar, these were two different occasions).
14. Enoch. Jude 14.
15 Noah. 2 Pet. ii. 5.

(Note. In last week's paper 12 should be omitted after the name of Beatrice McEachern. The name from Gulf is given in this week's paper with some other answers that were not gotten in on account of the editor's absence.)

NEW QUESTIONS.

19. What two great peoples living in the earth now are known to be the descendants of Abraham?
20. What three great religions have come from the descendants of Abraham?
21. What one great fact is recognized by all three?

(Note. You cannot answer these questions from the Bible, but if you study them out from histories, lesson papers, etc, they will help you to understand the Bible lesson.)

Teachers' Exchange.

One thing that children dislike exceedingly is monotony. One thing that they especially like is surprise. So while we give a routine for teachers to follow as the normal type of how a lesson is to be taught, such variety as their ingenuity can suggest in carrying out the plan is very desirable. Now and then it would be a good thing to have the scholars prepare essays or "compositions" on some subject connected with the lesson. They might either be read in the class instead of a recitation, or read at some special meeting at the teacher's house, or handed in to the teacher to be corrected and returned to the scholar. We suggest this just now because Abraham is such a splendid subject. How he looms up above all the men of his time, simply because he lived for God and for spiritual things instead of for those things that the rest of mankind lived and died seeking. Dr. McLaren (S. S. Times) sums up the lessons of his life to us:

To possess God is only possible on condition of yielding ourselves to Him. When we give ourselves up, in heart, mind and will, to be His, He is ours. When we cease to be our own we get God for ours. The self centred man is poor; he neither owns himself nor anything besides in any deep sense. When we lose ourselves in God, we find ourselves, and being content to have nothing, and not even to be our own masters or owners, we possess ourselves more truly than ever, and have God for our portion, and in Him "all things are ours."

NOTICE!

We are sorry to see it stated in the last Home Missionary that there is a serious shortage in the Invalid Fund. Presbyteries have asked that aid be given for thirty-six ministers, aged, infirm or sick, and for 105 families of ininisters deceased. Among these are a number of widows elderly and infirm, while a number of others have families of small children. Many of these deceased ministers were very useful, greatly beloved and honored among us in their day. The whole amount needed for year July 1893 to July 1894, is about $16,500. Receipts to January 1st, were not quite $9.000. The second installments should be paid within the next sixty days. In many cases this aid constitutes all the cash income, and in a number of other cases it is all the income of any sort, which these friends receive. The last two applications for aid were for two old ministers near the four-score line or beyond it, both of them having been honored and very useful men, for more than fifty years, both now about penniless and infirm.

Any sudden change in the condition of the atmosphere is certain to bring its harvest of coughs and colds. These, if suffered to run on, are likely to terminate in consumption; but they may be readily cured by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

For whipped cream put the cream in a bowl, and with a whisk whip it smartly. It is better to whip at one side of the basin and the froth will collect at the other. Common cream whips quite well. If cream is to be whipped for the top of fruit or a trifle it is better to add a little sugar, and lift off the froth as it gathers on to the top of a sieve with a plate under it Whatever milk drops on the plate can be put back in the basin and whipped again.

You can never tell what a slight cold may lead to; it is best, therefore, to give yourself the benefit of the doubt, and cure it as soon as possible with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A day's delay, sometimes an hour's delay, may result in serious consequences.

To acquire a bright and smooth skin.—Take tepid baths and use a harsh towel; plenty of air and exercise. Oat meal rubbed into the skin, after it has been washed with soap and water, will give smoothness and brilliancy to the skin.

A "Run-Down"

That is the time to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, to repel disease and build up the needed flesh and strength, there's nothing to equal it. It rouses every organ into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, braces up the whole system, and restores health and vigor.

The Best Men Wanted.

"Yes, sir; we want some good men, men of first-class character and ability to represent us. Among our representatives are many of the noblest and best men in America, and parties of that stamp can always find a splendid business opportunity at our establishment." That is the way Mr. B. F. Johnson of the firm B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., stated the case in reference to their adve tisement in this paper.

Bethlehem Evangelical Lutheran church in St. Louis, Mo., was destroyed by fire on Wednesday of last week. The church was dedicated on 29th October last. It cost $75,000 and was the largest and finest Lutheran church in the West.

To Church and Sunday School Treasurers of Orange Presbytery.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I notice in December receipts to the Orphans' Home support, from sixteen churches and Sunday-schools, the total sum $266 00 was sent in December, which did not go through my hands, and while the Presbytery pays this sum, she gets no credit for the same, and will not in the yearly report of contributions, unless these parties furnish me duplicate receipts for the same to file in Treasurer's Book. The Orphans' Home, as I now understand it, is put as much under the care of the Presbyteries and the Synod, and claims the same place in the contributions, as any other objects of the Church, hence it seems but right and proper that every church and Sunday-school should see that their contributions should go through the Presbytery's Treasurer so that they should have their proper credits in the yearly reports.

SEEDS! WORLD'S FAIR MEDAL AND DIPLOMA.

Tested & Proven THE BEST.

My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Incouraged by this success, I sent a collection of Seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the Seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package my Cotton, "King's Improved;" 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all postpaid for $1.00. Circulars telling all about my Seed free.

THE CHRISTIAN'S SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

FOR THE FAMILY.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS.

Be still, my soul; the Lord is on thy side;
Bear patiently the cross of grief and pain;
Leave to thy God to order and to provide;
In every change He faithful will remain,
Be still, my soul; thy best, thy heavenly Friend
Through thorny ways leads to a joyful end.

Be still, my soul; thy God doth undertake
To guide the future as He has the past,
Thy hope, thy confidence let nothing shake;
All now mysterious shall be bright at last.
Be still my soul; the waves and winds shall know
His voice who ruled them while He dwelt below.

Be still, my soul; the hour is hastening on
When we shall be forever with the Lord:
When disappointment, grief and fear are gone,
Sorrow forgot, love's purest joys restored.
Be still, my soul; when change and tears are past
All safe and blessed, we shall meet at last.

DEATH OF "A. L. O. E."

The Indian mail last week brought news of the death of Miss Tucker, better known to the world under the initials of A. L. O. E For years she has lived in India, the unassuming head of one of the simplest and best examples of a missionary community in our great Indian Empire. She left England some eighteen years ago, being then a somewhat old lady, for her self-imposed task of devoting the remainder of her life to the spread of the truth of Christianity; and now, when her age has exceeded the allotted "three-score and ten,' she has passed away and been buried among the people she loved.

THE SCENE OF HER LABOURS is a town in the northern Punjaub, some forty miles from Amritsar, the great centre of the Sikh religion, famous for its Golden Temple and its valuable "Grunth," the Scriptures of the Sikh. Batals, a small station on a branch line, running from Amritsar to the base of the Dalhousie Hills, is but little known to the ordinary traveller, but it was here that Miss Tucker lived for so many years, devoting all the proceeds of her pen to the benefits of the mission, and doing no small amount of work herself, even up to the last, in visiting zenanas in the city and villages around, and in setting an example of a beautiful and most unselfish life. To native Christian lads she was always familiarly known as "Auntie," and many are the boys now grown into useful citizens, and occupying responsible posts under the Government, who owe much of their success in life to

HER EARLY INFLUENCE

and subsequent interest in them. Her house, christened by her "Gruft auf Tag," as it was there she hoped to pass the "sunset" of her life, was always open to them, and at all times and seasons the sweetness and graciousness of her advice was to be had when sought. It was she whom the old Batala boys returned from all parts of the Punjaub to visit; it was she who wrote their songs for them at their breakings up, their anniversaries, or the great Curch festivals; it was she, as they well knew, who sympathised with them as European has rarely sympathised with Asiatic. But her influence was most felt in the immediate vicinity of her home and amongst those who worked rectly under her, for her zenana work bore comparatively little fruit. It was a plucky task for a fragile, delicately-nurtured woman to undertake to learn the peasant language of the Punjaub when over fifty years of age; but this effort was small in comparison with the courage required to go amongst whose husbands and men-folk had instructed them in all the most telling arguments in favour of their own religion, whether Mahommedan or Hindu. However, Miss Tucker's courage never wavered. Undaunted by rebuff at one zenana she would wend her way to some more congenial house, well shaded from the rays of a tropical sun by a large white umbrella, padded in accordance with her own orders with a thick layer of cotton-wool. When entrance was granted a native charpoy (string bed) was dusted for Miss Tucker to sit upon, and there, surrounded by a small crowd of women squatting on the floor around, she was wont to show the Biblical pictures talk a little, and end up with a hymn, sung in Punjaubi to a monotonous native melody easily caught up by her listeners. Generally while thus occupied the crowd grew and increased, fed by the inmates of neighboring zenanas, whom curiosity impelled. But even although she was respectfully and intelligently listened to, Miss Tucker rarely gained a declared convert from among the women, the influence of their men folk being too strong for them. Many, she always trusted, were converts at heart, but afraid of the consequences should they declare themselves. Thus her sympathies and labors never flagged in spite of so little outward show, and she has died as she wished, amongst the dark people she loved so well, and now lies buried, native fashion, on a charpoy, with no coffin, in the cemetery at Batala, leaving many hundreds in England and India to mourn her loss.—Pall-Mall Gazette.

BIGOTED AND IGNORANT WOMEN,

Things Useful.

The simplest icing for cake is made of the unbeaten white of the egg mixed with a cup of powdered sugar and the juice of half a lemon.

In severe paroxysms of coughing, from whatever cause, a tablespoon of glycerine in hot milk or cream will give speedy relief.

Mix fine sawdust with glue to a stiff paste for filling nail-holes or cracks, and the patch will hardly be describable, especially if the sawdust is of the same wood that is mended.

Quick Flannel Cakes.—Rub one teaspoonful of butter into a pint of flour until it is well mixed; add one teaspoonful of salt; beat the yolks of two eggs very light, and pour upon them, stirring all the while, two cups of milk; add this to the flour and beat until smooth; beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth, and when ready to bake the cakes add the whites to the batter, with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake on a hot griddle.

Chinese Eggs.—Take six hard-boiled eggs and cut the whites into strips, leaving the yolks whole. Mix one-tablespoonful of butter with one of flour and add half pint of beef stock. Stir until boiling. Add one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter teaspoonful of black pepper, and the whites of the eggs. When hot add yolks. Serve on squares of toast, one yolk capping each square.

A good furniture polish may be made by putting equal parts of spirits of wine, vinegar and olive oil in a large bottle and shaking thoroughly every day for a week, when it will be ready for use. This polish should be applied to the furniture with a soft woolen cloth and thoroughly rubbed in. If the furniture is very dirty it may be rubbed clean with a woolen cloth dipped in kerosene.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A TALK WITH MOLLY.

When Molly came home from the party to-night—
The party was out at nine—
There were traces of tears in her bright blue eyes
That looked mournfully up to mine.

For some one had said, she whispered to me
With her face on my shoulder hid,
Some one had said—there were sobs in her voice—
That they didn't like something she did.

So I took my little girl up on my knee—
I am old and exceedingly wise—
And I said: "My dear, now listen to me;
Just listen, and dry your eyes.

"This world is a difficult world, indeed,
And people are hard to suit,
And the man who plays on the violin
Is a bore to the man with the flute.

And I myself have often thought
How very much better 'twould be,
If every one of the folks that I know
Would only agree with me.

"But since they will not, the very best way
To make this world look bright,
Is never to mind what people say,
But do what you think is right."

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER V.

As the reader will easily believe the recollection of poor John's loss pressed too heavily on his mind to admit of his enjoying much sleep; as he got up between three and four o'clock on the following morning, feeling that it would be of consequence to be at the police office when it should be open at six. He was sure that the urgency of the case would sufficiently excuse his disturbing the person on whom he had to call, at so early an hour. Besides, he was thankful to make the necessary exertion, in hope of being able in some measure to divert his mind from his misfortune, for to remain inactive in his present circumstances was intolerable. But, as he traversed the dark and silent streets, in spite of his endeavors to avoid doing so, he could not help dwelling on his loss; for he could scarcely allow himself to hope that there might be a chance of recovering the money, and he pictured to himself what his situation, and that of his wife and children, might be in the event of his landlord's proving as unrelenting as he feared he would be, if he failed to pay his rent. The thought of their being ejected from their cottage, and turned out, houseless and destitute, on the lone hillside, presented itself to his mind, and he sighed mournfully, as he felt how extremely forlorn their situation would be in such a case, for he had no near relative or friend to whom he could apply for assistance, and as we have seen, poor John had not the strong faith, nor hopeful trust in God, with which his wife was blessed.

While these gloomy thoughts were passing through his mind, his way led across the principal street of D—opposite to a large, handsome building, before which three lamps were dimly burning; and within a few paces of the pavement, where the snow had been cleared away, he was struck with observing some bright object on the ground, glittering and glancing in the uncertain light. He stooped down to examine it, and found that it was a large brooch, composed of some kind of shining stones, of great size and brilliancy. As the reader may suppose, John, had no personal knowledge of precious stones, but he had heard his mother—who in early life had been a servant in the family of the great feudal proprietor whose tenant he was—expatiate on the beauty and value of the duchess's diamonds, and it struck him, that the trinket he had found might be something of the same kind. He turned it round and round in his hand, and saw that the back of it was of gold, but he in vain sought for any trace of a name, which might lead to a discovery of its owner. Presently, a strong temptation assailed him—what if he were to set off immediately for Edinburgh, and offer it for sale? Though he had not the slightest idea of its real value, yet, he was certain it would bring a much larger sum than that which he had lost, and what an infinite relief it would be to his mind, if he could by any means procure that! But the next moment he repelled the temptation; for the thought of what Marion would say if he told her—and he must do so to account for his absence—was immediately followed by one still more solemn, and he asked himself the question—"How can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" For to sell what did not belong to himself, he at once saw would be an act of dishonesty; and come what might, he never could bring himself to stoop to that! So he resolved rather, on his return from his errand, to take it to the police office, tell how and where he had found it, and beg the superintendent to take the necessary steps to discover its owner. Happy, blessed resolve! At any time, when assailed by temptations, let yours, reader, ever be a similar one! So, with a heart lightened of half its load, in consequence of his successful resistance of this temptation, John proceeded on his way, holding the brooch firmly in his hand.

But alas! on reaching the house of the man to whom he had sold the cow, he met with a sad disappointment; for he found, that for any information he could give him regarding the notes, his chance of recovering them was as remote as ever, for he had himself just received them for some stock he had been selling, a few minutes before he had paid them to John, and he had never examined them, nor did he know the persons who had given them to him! So, with his spirits again sunk to the lowest pitch, John retraced his steps to the police office. It was about a quarter past six o'clock when he reached it, and just as he entered a servant in livery came out and mounted a horse which stood at the door, and as he was riding off, John heard the superintendent desire him to tell his lady that her orders would be attended to immediately. Then turning to John, whom he did not at first recognize, he asked—"Well, my man, what may your business be?"

John reminded him of his having called at the office on the previous night about the money that had been stolen from him; and then, in despairing accents, he related the result of his application that morning.

"That is sad pity," was the reply, "for as I said last night, I fear your only chance of recovering the money would depend upon your being able to obtain the information I wanted. But cheer up, my man," he added kindly, as he observed poor John's despairing look, "it is just possible that the thief may yet be traced; let me have your name and address, and I will see what can be done for you." And as he seated himself at a writing-desk, for the purpose of taking them down, John thanked him gratefully; but on seeing him still linger, after they were written, the superintendent asked—if there was anything else he could do for him?

Monkeys in India.

Once upon a time when I was in India, I was staying at a place called Seringham. It was an island surrounded by two rivers,—one the Coleroon, the other the Cavery.

In this dry season we could walk very nearly across the rivers, excepting just where the stream ran, and there we had to cross over in round basket boats covered with skin of some animal.

The first night the children and I were very tired, and soon went to bed. I woke up quickly, feeling that something was in the room. Then I heard a sound as of some one drinking water I sat up in bed, and what do you think I saw? A large monkey helping himself out of the water-jug.

I threw one slipper, then the other, at him. He quietly picked them up, and walked away with them. I called the ayah to run after the monkey, but she was too frightened. The next morning she came to me, saying, "Oh! please, ma'am, some thief has been to my box, and taken all my jaggery."

Jaggery, you must know, is the sugar the natives eat, made from the juice of the palmyra trees, and is a horrid brown mess to look at.

I went to look at the place where the ayah kept it, and found the cord had been untied from the box, and the jaggery taken away.

I gave the ayah a little money and told her to buy some more, and tie the box up well.

The next morning she found the box open and the jaggery gone again. So we watched and saw a monkey come, untie the cord, and help himself. The next morning, going into my bedroom, I found another monkey on my dressing-table with the violet powder all spilled out of the box. He was powdering his own baby monkey with the powder-puff. The monkeys were so impudent we did not know what to do with them. I tried to poison some of them, by spreading the poison on some bread and butter; but the monkeys were so cunning that they rubbed the poison off against the trunk of the trees, and then ate up the bread. So that was no good. At last a friend of ours shot a few of these troublesome and unwelcome visitors; and after that they left us in peace for a little while.—*Mrs. F. F. Mrs. J. H. HORSNYDER, 152 Pacific Ave., Santa Cruz, Cal., writes:

"When a girl at school, in Reading, Ohio, I had a severe attack of brain fever. On my recovery, I found myself perfectly bald, and, for a long time, I feared I should be permanently so. Friends urged me to use Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, on doing so, my hair and I now have as fine a head of hair as one could wish for, being changed, however, from blonde to dark brown."

Began to Grow,

"After a fit of sickness, my hair came out in combfulls. I used two bottles of and now my hair is over a yard long and very full and heavy. I have recommended this preparation to others with like good effect."—Mrs. Sidney Carr, 1460 Regina st., Harrisburg, Pa.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for several years and always obtained satisfactory results. I know it is the best preparation for the hair that is made."—C. T. Arnett, Mammoth Spring, Ark.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Peace Institute has commenced the second term under most encouraging circumstances. New students have been coming in, and with quite a number engaged for this week, numbers will be greatly increased. Everything is progressing with earnestness and enthusiasm. The girls are bright and studious—vigorous in their work in every department, and full of energy in everything they undertake. Physical culture attracts much attention, and gives pleasant and beneficial exercise during the winter season—outdoor exercise is freely taken in walks and games when the weather will permit. The present year is considered one of the best and most prosperous—having the patronage and cordial support of many of the most influential families in this and other States.

Kaolin is being discovered in different places in North Carolina. Some of the finest quality and practically inexhaustible in quantity was discovered two feet below the surface and running down thirty feet or more.

The Weldon News tells us that the farmers of that section have killed a great deal of pork this season. Some think enough to feed the entire population of the county one year.

The Goldsboro Headlight says wheat is looking remarkably well, and a larger acreage was planted last fall than heretofore. Experiments of farmers in raising stock have been very satisfactory.

A man by the name of Walker raised this year the first bale of cotton ever raised in McDowell county.

DOMESTIC.

Five deaths from accidental burning from clothes catching fire or otherwise in Alabama last week.

Some fiend placed a stick of dynamite in a smoking car stove on the Missouri, Kanzas and Texas railroad at San Marcos, Texas. The explosion took place as the train was leaving that place. Two passengers were instantly killed and six other seriously injured.

The weather on Thursday of last week was unprecedentedly severe in the South and Southwest. The mercury fell to 13 at Calhoun, La., the same at Port Gibson, Miss.; at Oxford, to 3; at Kosciusko ice was formed 2 inches thick. Fruit trees have been killed and garden truck destroyed in some places. From Houston, comes the report that in south and southwest Texas there was a fall of temperature in some places of from 20 to 60 degrees in twelve hours. Fruit trees and early vegetables killed or badly injured and thousand of cattle on the prairies perished. At Dallas they had sleet, snow and ice and the temperature fell to zero on the hills and from 2 to 4 in the city. At San Antonio fruit trees in bloom and strawberries ripening were badly damaged.

FOREIGN.

The latest news from Brazil is that the insurgents forbid United States vessels to go to the Rio wharves and Admiral Benham threatens to fire into the Brazilian vessels undertaking to prevent it. Both sides prepared for war.

The Khedive of Egypt made some strictures upon the British officers in command of the Egyptian army and was compelled to make a humiliating retraction. The hostility of the Khedive to Great Britain may lead to his deposition in favor of his brother Mehemet Ali.

The Effects of LaGrippe.

My. Dear Sir.—I gladly give you my opinion of the Electropoise. I consider it Science's Best Gift to Man. It has been of such wonderful bonefit to me that I feel as if I could not say too much in its favor. A very severe attack of Grippe in the winter of 1890 left me with a shattered nervous system and almost no digestive power at all, and for eighteen months people in Hades had as much fun and as good a time as I did. I tried Allopathic, Homeopathic and "jam of the fence" remedies all to no good. The Electropoise has made me almost myself again, and I believe will eventually make me a better man. It has been used on every member of my household of seven children from the youngest up to their mother (who is also a convert) with marked beneficial results; so much so, that I have not paid one penny for drugs since it entered my house, the first of last March. I have recommended it to many who have taken my advice and I have never known of any one to regret having done so. It is the most economical physician on earth. I would not be without one under any circumstances.

Yours truly,
JAS. D. McNEILL.

Office of Merchant Mill,
Jas. D. McNeill, Prop.
Fayetteville, N. C.; Aug. 16, 1892.

Dec. 13th, 1894, Mr. McNeill writes us, the the continued use of the Electropoise, increases my confidence in its power to cure.

IF YOUR BACK ACHES,
Or you are all worn out, really good for nothing, it is general debility. Try
BROWN'S IRON BITTERS.
It will cure you, cleanse your liver, and give a good appetite.

THE RAINBOW.

The earth was filled with violence and God sent the flood to destroy the race except the one family of NOAH, the preacher of righteousness. When the flood was passed NOAH and his family would naturally dread a return of such floods as would seriously interfere with sowing and reaping if not frequently destroying multitudes. The GOD of mercy and of justice who had visited the earth with the flood for sin would graciously prevent any return of the flood of waters. As a pledge and sign of His promise He set His bow in the clouds. It is not essential to the truth here stated to show that this bow had never appeared before. It is however natural to suppose it had and that GOD now set it apart as a token of His mercy and a reminder of His covenant never again to destroy the earth with a flood of water.

In the first chapter of Ezekiel there is a vision of the throne and the glory of the LORD, with the likeness of a man on the throne. It is the throne of the universe and the SON of MAN—seated to govern and treat with men, and the rainbow appeared round about as a pledge and promise of the constancy and protection and faithfulness of the LORD of glory in this government.

In the vision of the Revelation this bow appears twice. In the tenth chapter in the midst of darkness and terror of GOD's wrath the rainbow sign of peace and security shines forth. In the fourth chapter in the vision of the throne of GOD ALMIGHTY where worshippers bow and adore and praise, the rainbow appears behind the throne and round about the throne, like an emerald. It arises and spans the retreating storm of earth's sorrows and conflicts with an assurance that the sin, sorrow and suffering are driven away and shall never return. If we think of the arch only as a bow we can follow the thought of some older interpreters, that it is unstrung and there are no arrows as these have been received as weapons of just punishment in the heart of CHRIST. Now the bow of justice and the bow of malignant persecution are unstrung and merged into the bow of Heavenly security. It is the bow of peace. Justice is satisfied. No weapon that is formed shall henceforth prevail against the redeemed. They are safe in the regions of perpetual peace. In the background are war and storm and judgment. Against this dark background stands the throne of GOD, and about that throne the bow of promise renews the pledge of GOD that darkness is forever past in that Land of Day and destruction is driven away. Remembering that it is not merely a bow unstrung, but a reproduction of the rainbow of the flood in the midst of Heaven, we see it is not merely the arch with which we are familiar, but a complete circle, as a symbol of eternity and of the completed glory of GOD and, with its seven prismatic colors, of the harmony of all GOD's attributes in judgment past, in storm and flood driven away, in His throne established in righteousness and peace. Righteousness and judgment are the establishment of that Throne, hence clouds and darkness; but now henceforth it is the throne of grace, of covenanted mercy and reconciliation and of peace abiding and eternal. Here is the rainbow symbol of seven prismatic colors of the one white light of the eternal perfections of GOD. This is the harmony of Exodus xxxiv: 6–8.

This sign in which GOD pledged Himself to NOAH and all generations of men to the end of time and which He set in Heaven as a pledge of eternal prosperity and peace, as a natural phenomenon is far more significant than we sometimes think. In pledging Himself to its recurrence GOD pledged the continuance and rule of the laws of nature involved in its reproduction, and declared Himself in it the GOD of nature in controlling the laws He has set and the GOD of grace in keeping the covenant He has made.

Any complete analysis of its contents and exposition of its meaning and factors would carry us into the intricacies of Higher Mathematics and involve the intricacies and demonstrations of Calculus. The result is the harmonious interplay of a multitude of the laws of nature, some of which we may suggest. Both gravity and gravitation are involved in the gathering and position of the clouds, in the size and shape of each descending globule and the curve of the descending rain. The laws of light are involved in the absorption, reflection, refraction and transmission of the solar rays while they are polarized and shot forth in every possible angle and velocity. Each drop of water is a resultant of chemical affinity and molecular forces and whatever modifying conditions combined in form and transparency. The angles of incidence and reflection are related in the most exact geometrical proportion. Then the powers and laws of vision and the relation and service of these to the mental perception come in to complete the wonderful faithfulness of GOD on the side of nature. Seeing this sign and symbol in any appreciation of all involved in its reproduction, no man would have dared prophecy its frequent, recurrence. Only He who established the laws and controls the forces could do so, and He only on condition of His own purpose and promise to secure it. In this view it is the more wonderful as a sign of GOD's pledge and a symbol of His faithfulness.

Transferred to the visions of heavenly glory and worship and blessing, it teaches many beautiful and comforting lessons. It is the symbol of the unceasing calm after the storms of life. Our lives are here, even on the floods, tossed and driven in storms. There they cease forever and GOD places Himself and His established throne between the storm and the saints. There shall be no more storms. The tears, pains and groans of earth are passed forever. The complete circle, symbol of eternity and infinity may assure us of peace, perfect and unbroken through all eternity. The diversity blending in unity may fitly suggest harmony in heaven. There will be no doleful monotony. There will be no discord. All tastes and dispositions and occupations, shall have their unity in the throne of GOD and their harmony in glad allegiance to the King with cheerful and ready obedience to His commands. The emerald light, symbol of life, and color, grateful in landscape view or forest foliage may well suggest the absence of death and decay, restful pleasure to the eye, pure things for the heavenly resident and perpetual joy in "fields of living green." The thought of another, that the most beautiful things of earth are preserved in heaven, like the precious stones in the foundation and the gates, the tree of life, and the rainbow round about the throne may well cheer us as in age we lose our earlier relish for transitory things, or as we lose one by one the beautiful things of earth.

This rainbow is formed in heaven from the light of the throne of GOD. There is no temple in heaven. It is all temple before the throne. There is no light of the sun. They need no candle "for the LORD GOD giveth them light and the LAMB is the light thereof." This rainbow is the reflection of the rays of the glory of GOD in the REDEEMER shot through the shadows and showers of of the storms of earth anished now and forever.

WE HAVE IN HAND ANOTHER installment of Dr. MOORE's sketch of Union Theological Seminary. We could not get in this week, but will appear in our next issue.

HERE AND THERE.

NO MORE IMPORTANT MATTER CAN BE brought to public attention than that of the selection of Literature for Children. The article on this subject on our second page by JOHN HABBERTON will amply repay its readers in both pleasure and profit.

NEW LIGHT IS BREAKING UPON THE the proposition of the Birmingham Conference. We have seen it stated that while the Conference was in session, having before it simply the best mode of co-operation of the two Assemblies in the matter of Colored Evangelization, one of the members of the Southern Committee addressed the meeting in favor of "organic union" between the two Assemblies; and while the committee, were in Birmingham, at the request of the pastors of that section (some of them we suppose, members of the committee and others, perhaps,) a mass meeting was held in the First church, Birmingham, in order that the "visiting brethren from the North" should discuss the subject of Organic Union. These facts go far towards justifying the suggestion or hint rather of Dr. PALMER, that the report is intended "to inaugurate a movement looking to the unification of the two churches" and to convince of the correctness of his conclusion that "it has simply bluudered into a movement to arouse the fiercest antagonisms that can be engendered."

THE NORTHERN COMMITTEE IT MIGHT be supposed had simply captured the Southerners, but the incidents above stated seem to indicate that the Southern Committee went over without the formality of even a request. That those appointed by the Southern Assembly for a specific duty should propose entire surrender of this important branch of the work of the Church seems strange enough, but that, going entirely apart from and far beyond this, they should use the favoring circumstances to inaugurate a movement sure to produce discord in the Church, and we very much fear, utterly palsy the work they have in hand, excites the profoundest astonishment. Even if the Northern Committee had proposed the union of the two Assemblies, the proper action for the Southerners would have been to decline exceedlng their instructions. As it is the Committee of Conference on Colored Evangelization does not show well in comparison with the Texan Committee on Synodical Co-operation between the Northern and Southern Churches.

THE VIEWS OF THE NORTHERN PAPERS as representing the Northern Church are interesting. The Mid-Continent thinks the report and the harmonious action of the two committees suggests the practicability of a wider scope in joint relations.

The Presbyterian Journal regards the report as a "long stride towards organic union and suggests very forcibly: "If the Southern Church is prepared to adopt this agreement there can be no excuse before GOD for delaying complete organic reunion." The Journal further says: "It is significant that the idea of a separate Colored Presbyterian Church, which was embraced in the Southern action appointing the committee, quietly drops out the recommendations, not being even referred to."

ON THIS MATTER OF THE STATUS OF colored churches, the Interior is very decided thus:

"The Northern Assembly will not permit the color line to be drawn on the Church. Our colored Presbyteries stand on equality with their white brethren, and are entertained and sit at table with them. No distinction on account of color is recognized. Neither Assembly can favor independent colored Presbyteries. Much more than white Presbyteries do the colored Presbyteries need the supervision of the higher courts. Our people will not give money to the founding of associations which are peculiarly liable to run off into fanaticisms and errors. There is but one solution that we can see, and that is that the colored Presbyteries shall be attached to the Northern Assembly—in other words, that the policy of our Board shall remain unchanged. Our Assembly would not listen to a proposition to take a new departure which should set up a racial caste in the Church—and as little to a proposition to bar the doors at the color line; and as little to a scheme of hybrid independency."

Is the Southern Committee prepared to go that far?

THE PHILADELPHIA PRESBYTERIAN which understands the whole question with all the difficulties involved as well probably, if not better, than any other Northern paper, would like co-operation or even organic union, but we do not discern anything like hopefulness in its very mild and very sensible remarks on the subject.

The Presbyterian Messenger sees a good many difficulties in the way—rather a good many reasons why the plan proposed may not be desirable. It does not see how friccion can well be avoided with the variance of views on the color, line, if both churches are to be satisfied. If, it says, this work is to be done "by one of these Boards rather than the other, the other Board, that has no voice in the management, will be merely nominal and only valuable for the purpose of creating friction."

And further:

The Northern Assembly is now spending nearly two hundred thousand dollars annually on this work; the Southern Assembly probably eight or nine thousand dollars. There is no friction that interferes at all with the progress of the work as it is at present organized. Why should the Church North run the risk of introducing an element that might produce friction without any reasonable prospect of an increase in contributions?

OF COURSE IF THE PROPOSED PLAN OF co-operation in the matter of Colored Evangelization is designed simply as a wedge to the introduction of organic union the matter is very greatly simplified, but why should the Northern Church wish to embroil the Southern Church, which has been going on peacefully and successfully, in the discords which now afflict our Northern brethren, and above all why should any persons or parties in the Southern Church desire to become thus embroiled?

THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI IS LARGELY under the influence of prohibition laws, and the effect upon public morals is aptly illustrated by the following from the correspondent at Jackson of the N. O. Picayune. The reference is to the hotly contested contest in the Legislature for the position of U. S. Senator:

Let it be said to the moral grandeur of the commonwealth that the barrooms are no factor in this contest. Despite the late hours of the caucus, there has been no drinking to speak of. And this is no dress-parade, Sunday-clothes condition. It is the result of the public sentiment of the State which has gradually, but steadily, pressed forward to its present high plane. The press of the State has announced that in the future drunkards and men supported by that ilk shall know public preferment no more forever.

WE NOT INFREQUENTLY RECEIVE commendations of the new departments recently added to our paper. Usually they are from friends at home. But the following is from a brother in Alabama, who never forgets the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, we copy with special pleasure:

I send you by this mail a copy of the Alabama Presbyterian, the new organ of the Synod. The great work accomplished by your paper for Presbyterianism in North Carolina has been an incentive to us to undertake the enterprise. Presbyterianism is aggressive just now in the Synod and we are hoping for great things in the next few years. Let me congratulate you on the addition to your paper of the Sabbath-school and Foreign Missionary departments—they are a real acquisition.

Food for Reflection from India.

Our Church carries on no mission work in India. This fact, no doubt, has led many of our people to neglect to inform themselves, as to the condition of the people, or the work done by others, there—and consequently they take less interest in, and fail to keep pace with, if not to appreciate altogether, the momentous changes which are taking place, in our own day, in that most interesting mission field of the world.

China is the greatest and, at present, most difficult field, possibly, although there many of the greatest difficulties, which confronted the missionary, are gradually disappearing.

But India has always presented a greater variety of problems, as well as a kind of fascination, for the missionary; and if the difficulties seem fewer, now, it is only because so many have been overcome. It is simply delightful to contemplate the possibilities of the immediate future, for Christ's kingdom, in that wonderful land.

No one, who knows the obstacles, which still present themselves, will think of making small of them, but the future is big with promise to those who can read it. These convictions are not based simply upon personal observation, or even the representations of the missionary reports, and enthusiastic missionary speeches. A recent number of the London Times has a column and half, on Indian affairs which is written with no Christian prejudice, certainly, and yet it is one of the most remarkable evidences of what Christian civilization has been able to accomplish, that has come under our notice. The article has for its subject the Meeting of the Indian National Congress, lately held at Lahore, which was attended by over ten hundred delegates, and presided over by Mr. Naoroji, the first Indian who has held a seat in the House of Commons.

In his opening address the President emphasized the fact, that the expansion of the legislative councils had introduced a representative element into the government of the country—and most of those who had gained admission to the councils were members of the Congress.

He also claimed that electors had made no differences of creed but had honestly endeavored to secure the best available men for the duties. He then quoted Sir Bartle Treves' declaration that "wherever he went he had found the best exponents of the policy of the English government and the most able co-adjutors, in adjusting that policy to the peculiarities of the natives of India, among educated natives."

The correspondent of the Times then adds; "If we cannot unreservedly accept the inferences, which Mr. Naoroji draws, we admit the skill with which he leads up to his conclusions." One of these conclusions is—"that the thinking and educated men of all classes and creeds were becoming the leaders of the people." "Is it true, continues this thoughtful correspondent, that a new India has thus suddenly grown up in our hands? The India of antiquity was the India of the supremacy of caste; the India of modern history was the India of the supremacy of race; the India of but yesterday, was the India of the supremacy of status; the India of all times has been the India of the supremacy of force. Is it possible that the India of to-day is an India of the supremacy of education?

"Great Britian might well be proud of her work in India if the state of things which Mr. Naoroji pictures had been realized.

"When the hardships of caste, the cruelties of custom, the turbulent ambitions of the warlike races and the fanatical hatred of crowds and sects are things of the past; when the weak are safe from the strong and when education and intelligence do actually take the place of oppression and force, among the Indian peoples, then perhaps the British government may chant its Nunc Dimittis."

That time naturally this political writer thinks has not yet come.

But even he is forced to confess, "British rule and Western Education are doing much to bring it about. The many movements moral and political, now stirring the life of the Indian peoples are doing still more.

"Those movements are the direct results of the enfranchisement of thought, the individual security and the freedom of speech and opinion which British rule has secured for India.

"Among such movements the Indian National Congress holds a foremost place. But it is from the fact that it is only one of many and that it is the product, not of an isolated agitation, but of a general social awakening, that it derives its true significance."

For the general purposes of our article we might substitute the word Christian for "British", "Western" and "moral," and only be doing justice to the source from which all that is best in those movements is derived.

A source which the correspondent never, for one moment, recognizes. This makes his testimony only the more remarkable.

THE BELL OF THE ANGELS.

There has come to my mind a legend, a thing
I had half forgot,
And whether I read it or dreamed it, ah well,
it matters not.
It is said in heaven at twilight a great bell
softly swings,
And man may listen and hearken to the wondrous music that rings,
If he put from his heart's inner chamber all the passion, pain and strife,
Heartache and weary longing that throb in the pulse of life—
If he thrust from his soul all hatred, all thoughts of wicked things,
He can hear in the holy twilight how the bell of the angels rings.
And I think there lies in this legend, if we open our eyes to see,
Somewhat of an inner meaning, my friend, to you and to me.
Let us look in our hearts and question: Can pure thoughts enter in
To a soul if it be already the dwelling of thoughts of sin?
So, then, let us ponder a little—let us look in our hearts and see
If the twilight bell of the angels could ring for us—you and me.

THE JERUSALEM CHRISTIAN UNION MISSION.

(Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.)

After finishing the round of the Rev. D. M. Stearns' 15 Bible classes, the Rev. A. Ben-Oliel with his wife and daughter spent a pleasant Sunday by the invitation of the Rev. J. Edmonsons at Belvidere, N. J., where he preached in the morning at the Second Presbyterian church, addressed a crowded Sunday-school at the First Presbyterian church in the afternoon and a large mixed audience in the evening at the Methodist Episcopal church. Mrs. and Miss Ben-Oliel also addressed a gathering on Saturday evening at the Rev. Edmonson's and the Sunday-schools on Sunday.

Then they went to Brooklyn where Mrs. and Miss B. were invited to address several ladies' meetings, and Mr. Ben-Oliel preached at the Baptist church of the Revs. Hull and Greenwood, besides addressing a gathering of young men and women.

While at Brooklyn we had the joy of hearing that one of the Jerusalem converts had succeeded, after the fruitless efforts during the past year in getting to England, where he is studying English steadily and is desirous of coming to this country if some theological and missionary college can be found willing to educate him for the Master's service. His family are sorely tempting him to return, offering him any money he likes to ask, but he says his desire is to glorify the Messiah Jesus, thanking God every day for having brought him to the light.

At Boston Rev. A. Ben-Oliel preached at the Congregational church at Somerville and also at Lynn, and on Dec. 30th, conducted the noon prayer-meeting at the Evangelistic Hall.

On Sunday he preached, by request of the Rev. I. J. Lancing at Park Street church, although that minister had announced his own subject in the papers before he met him, and in the evening at the church of the Rev. J. A. Gordon, D. D., where we had the joy of witnessing the baptism of a Jew. Both on Saturday and Sunday afternoons he addressed large gatherings of Jews brought together by local missionaries and Christian friends. We also addressed two branches of the Y. M. C. A.

At Pittsburg, though suffering a severe cold, Mr. Ben-Oliel preached or addressed the congregations of seven different Presbyterian churches, through the kind exertions of Dr. Ferson in making the appointments beforehand.

He is now resting a few days at Philadelphia having preached at Bishop Nicholson's Reformed Episcopal church on Sunday, Jan. 21st, on "Prophecy Actually Fulfilling in Jerusalem and the Holy Land" and to Jews and Christians in the same Church on Wednesday evening on "Has Messiah Come and who is He," proved from the Old Testament.

On Sunday, the 11th of February, he is announced to be at Scranton and from thence he will D. V., proceed by Binghampton and Elmira to Syracuse in all of which places Miss Ben-Oliel has been addressing gatherings of the Y. M. C. A. King's Daughters and working up a great interest in the Jerusalem Mission.

We should like to see our friends in North Carolina, Toronto, Canada, &c., but we go only where the Lord calls by the voice of His people and earnestly request their prayers for our guidance and success in our arduous undertaking, viz: to raise the much needed funds for carrying on the mission and for building an evangelistic hall in the city of Jerusalem to be used for Christian union work among Jews and others, and for English services for the numerous non-Episcopal visitors who yearly flock to Jerusalem in greater numbers, and for whom there is no other place of worship than the Upper Room in the missionary's own hired house.

In many places we have been warmly welcomed by those who have been in Jerusalem and worshipped with us there, they express the warmest interest in our mission to this country and heartily wish us Godspeed.

We are longing to go back to our work, among the dear Lord's ancient people in the city He wept over and are only waiting until He sends us the needed means to carry it on by the hands of His own devoted stewards.

LITERATURE FOR CHILDREN.

BY JOHN HABBERTON.

Author of "Helen's Babies," "All He Knew," Etc.

If there is any truth in the saying that "The child is father of the man," the greater literary minds of our country should busy themselves principally in devising reading matter for boys and girls. Certainly children, as a class, read more than adults; they more thoroughly absorb what they read, and they give it more thought afterward than their fathers and mothers can give to literature or anything else but the battle of life. Their tastes may differ, like those of older people, but of literature which they like they will consume an enormous amount, often seeming to care more for quantity than quality. In well-meaning conclaves of teachers and other adults one may sometimes hear the question, "What will the children read?" but hundreds of thousands of parents might truthfully answer with another question—"What won't the children read?" The habit of "looking over" any print that chances to catch their eye seems common to children who like to read. I have seen scores of village children, of as many grades as are usually found in a country town, pore over the pages of a newspaper lying on the counter of a shop to which they had been sent on errands; it seemed to matter little which page of the paper lay uppermost—foreign news, court reports, editorials or advertisements. They longed to read something, apparently merely for the sake of reading, and the columns of the paper supplied it. It seemed to me at the time that the moments thus spent were as good as thrown away, but I can not forget that some of those same children reached prominent positions early in life, through a display of intelligence for which the very imperfect village school could not claim the credit. They read all the better books in the local Sunday-school libraries, carefully eschewing those made specially for children, and many of them attended the Sunday-schools of two different denominations so as to draw from two different libraries; they also borrowed all they could from private book-shelves, and although scarcely any of them digested all the literature they swallowed, in which respect they were very like grown people, they nevertheless acquired a fair general education at an age, for which many authors write books painfully barren of ideas—write under the impression that literature for children should be of very light mental calibre, lest it should otherwise-weary young readers.

What I was compelled to believe, in those days, about the reading habits of children, has since been confirmed again and again, by observing general assortments of half-grown boys and girls elsewhere, and it convinced me that much time was wasted by authors in trying to bring material and moral truths down to juvenile comprehension. I think no one will deny that most children who are old enough to read at all are also intelligent enough to catch the meaning of most of the conversation they chance to hear between adults. Woe betide parents and relations who imagine it safe to talk freely before children about any thing which they do not wish repeated—talk freely before children who seem too young to understand or take any interest in what is being said within their hearing. Whole shelves of big scrap-books might be filled with stories of what came of such misplaced confidence, and even then the greater part would remain untold. The little ones can repeat stories quite as correctly as their elders, though that may not be saying much, and they seldom miss the point of a story, either. If they can comprehend ordinary conversation, why, not the diction of a book?

The experience of most persons who have had much to do with children, outside of institutions for the feeble-minded, will support me in the assertion that most books in which children take no interest do not repel the little ones by the greatness and quantity of their ideas, but through ponderous and confusing verbiage: in this respect, again the little ones are not unlike their parents. Clearness of statement will bring the great majority of subjects of adult interest within the understanding of ordinary children. Not all portions of the common version of the Bible is in the simplest English, yet who is there that does not know children who have read with much interest, and with need of little or no more explanation than grown people, the historical books of the Old Testament, the Psalms and Proverbs, the four Gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles? Indeed, the Book of Revelation seems to trouble them less than it does some adults, for imagination is a mental plant of early growth. I know many men and women who think Sir Walter Scott's novels terribly heavy and "long winded," but quite as many others have told me that they began Scott before they were ten years of age, and kept at it, with great delight, until the entire series was finished. Longfellow's "Evangeline," when found in school libraries, is usually thumbed to significant shabbiness, and not only by the larger children. Tennyson's "Idyls of the King" is not far behind it in popularity; while many collections of verse manufactured expressly for children's use are undisturbed; the reason need not long be sought. Longfellow and Tennyson, refined and scholarly though they were, maintained the simplicity and clearness of diction peculiar to writers who have something to say and have thought much before attempting to say it, while the well-meaning persons who tried to write down to the supposed level of the children were sure to be either stilted or verbose in diction, and lamentably lacking in ideas.

A larger illustration may be found in the "School District Library" of three hundred volumes, selected nearly half a century ago for use in the State of New York, and still to be found in hundreds of towns. It was intended that these books should be at the service of adults as well as children, and that they should have some educational value, so nearly all were of the class known as "solid;" certainly if such a lot were selected at the present day there would be a general complaint, by purveyors of juvenile literature, that it would be heavy beyond endurance. Yet these books were in incessant demand, and they were quite as popular among children of ten or twelve years as with the larger boys and girls. It is true that none of the volumes were very large, and that writers, "hard to read" were excluded, but that a set of three hundred solid books became popular with the general run of school children of the State should serve as an effective denial of the statement, now persistently made, that children won't read books that are not light or "bright."

The popularity of this old library with a generation of the same blood as our own, and fully as wide-awake, should also silence the statement that children like fiction—stories, and little else. It is contrary to human nature not to like stories, whether for instruction or edification, but the men and women who know children best know also that it is only in approaching adult years that the mind insists upon confining itself to a single literary groove. The most experienced caterers to juvenile taste are the makers of the most widely circulated periodicals for boys and girls—the editors of the Youth's Companion, Harper's Young People, St. Nicholas, etc., but none of these ever fill a number with fiction; as a rule, fiction is seldom half of the contents, the remaining space being occupied by biographies, sketches of travel, short articles about birds, plants, animals, minerals, and many wonders, of nature, art and science. Many weeklies and monthlies have been started for the purpose of giving children their fill of stories, and they succeeded so well that apparently the children wanted no more, for most of these periodicals died for lack of support. The man or woman who can tell or read stories may always be sure of a large retaining of children, but none of the little hearers disappear if the subject is changed to some department of natural history, art or science, provided what is said is well and clearly said. When interest lags, the fault will be in the telling, not in the subject. Some years ago the principal of a large public school in the city of San Francisco told me that the most popular study in his school was geometry, and that many of the pupils who followed it were only ten years of age. I expressed astonishment, remembering that when I was at school the student of geometry ranked as a "big boy," and even then he seldom seemed to like the work, but my informant said, "Well, geometry is as simple as elementary arithmetic, and a great deal more interesting, if you teach it simply, but I had to write a special text-book to make it so."

The purpose of all that has been said above is to urge that in the selection of books for children, whether at home, at school, or in the Sunday-school, the prospective readers should be credited higher intelligence than they now seem suspected of. Stories, whether called fiction or by any other name, should not be excluded, for there is no better means of making children acquainted with the customs, manners and motives of humanity at large. The poorest stories for this or any other purpose, however, are the majority of those made specially for and about children. There are honorable exceptions, hundreds of them, but on the shelves with these should be the best tales, written for adults, which deal less with love than with the play of motives and characters upon one another. There should be liberal selections from the great mass of books of travel, care being taken to exclude such works as are merely geographical. In recent years the literature of natural history has been wonderfully enriched, and scores of books may be selected which cannot fail to please boys and girls. Biographies do not necessarily bore children, and there are histories which are not tiresome, for historians began sometime ago to comprehend that mere dates and names do not make the story of a nation interesting. Even classical history which young people used to find as dry as an old almanac and as dreadful as Fox's "Book of Martyrs," has been made deeply interesting by some recent writers who have kept young readers in mind. Children will also read much poetry, if it is really good and such authors are selected as waste fewest words.

With such a range of material from which to select, there is no possible reason why children should be compelled to find their own reading matter, and fall into the habit, even more deplorable in youth than among adults, of confining themselves to weak and vicious fiction. Early absorption of prose fiction, most of which deals only with love and its counterfeits, is a sorry preparation for adult life, and a terrible handicapping of the better qualities that are born in children. Yet between this kind of reading matter and the goody-goody stuff which is issued in immense quantity, the child will almost always choose the former, for it has at least the merit of interest, or, as an omnivorous little reader once said to me, "All the interesting hasn't been left out."

In reply to questioners of the class that can not leave one extreme without hurrying to the other, and who will therefore ask, why, if I am right, children should not at once be supplied direct from ther parents' libraries, I would repeat the old saw that "You may lead a horse to the water, but you can't make drink." Most family libraries came together partly through accident and partly through special tastes or needs. Children, however, are not expected to select or decide for themselves regarding any of the other necessities of their lives; their minds are plastic and receptive, so as much care should be exercised in selecting their reading matter from the great mass as in feeding and clothing their bodies and in shaping their morals and manners. If the home library is what it should be, some books may be found in it which will interest the children from a very early age—so early that they cannot read for themselves, but must be read to. But the variety, distinctness, for which children long can seldom be found in any family's chance collection of books; it must be carefully sought, but it is well worth looking for, for of all the unconscious influences of child-life, there is none, except the example of parents, that has more lasting effect than the contents of the books which children read. In reply to another possible question I would say that the selections from adult libraries are not suggested as substitutes for the really good books written specially for children, but additions.

The Little Loaf.

In the time of the famine a rich man permitted the poorest children of the city to come to his house, and said to them; "There stands a crate full of bread. Each of you may take a loaf from it, and you may come every day until God sends better time."

The children at once surrounded the basket, striving and quarreling over the bread, because each desired to obtain the finest; and they finally went off without a word of thanks.

Only Franziska, a clean, but poorly clad little girl, remained standing at a distance, then took the smallest of the loaves left in the basket, kissed her hand gratefully to the man, and went quietly and becomingly home.

On the next day the children were equally ill-mannered, and Franziska this time had a loaf which was scarcely half as large, as the others; but when she reached home and her mother broke the bread there fell out quite a number of new silver pieces. The mother was frightened, and said: "Take the money back at once, for it certainly got into the bread by accident."

Franziska did as she was bid, but the benevolent man said to her: "No, no, it was not an accident. I had the silver baked in the smallest loaf in order to reward thee, thou good child. Ever remain as peace-loving and satisfied."

He who would rather have a smaller loaf than a quarrel about a greater will always bring a blessing to the home, even though no gold is baked in the bread.—Reformed Messenger.

Good Advice.

"Don't be laughed out of your money or your prayers." A great and distinguished English admiral, who rose to a very high station as the effect of his meritorious exertions, used to be very fond of relating that, on first leaving an humble lodging to join his ship as a midshipman, his kind-hearted landlady presented him with a Bible and a guinea, saying, "May God bless you and prosper you, my dear lad; and as long as you live never suffer yourself to be laughed out of your money or your prayers." The young sailor carefully followed the landlady's advice through life; and he had reason to rejoice that he did follow it.

BOOKS.

The Gospel in Genesis. Many of our readers will remember Rev. S. C. Alexander the author of "The Stone Kingdom," who lived for several years on Black River. He has since published a work on "The Covenant and its Seals." We have received this new book from his pen and published by J. T. Smith, of St. Louis. The work is constructed by the use of questions and answers to bring out the salient points of the first book of the Bible. The main purpose of the book is given in the title while the author makes a study of the whole book in its archeology and ethnology as well as its prophecy. The style is plain and the writing clear. Some topics like that of the lost ten tribes or the curse on Canaan are given more than ordinary attention. The author has given us, a work thoughtful and quite readable in a small compass and convenient form in cloth pp. 257, chapters xxi. Price $1.00. Copies may be had from the author, Prattsville, Ala.

BENEFICIARY EDUCATION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS:—In the Synod of South Carolina last October, Rev. B. P. Reid, chairman of Synod's Committee on Education, presented an able report which I believe was unanimouly adopted. The whole report is worthy of being re-published, but I make only a few extracts intended to show why the Central Committee does not receive enough money to pay the appropriations of the candidates recommended to them for aid.

1. The increase in the number seeking aid is twice the increase of the whole number, and the percentage of increase in the number seeking aid is more than five times that of the contributions from which they are to be aided. Some fifty-one from this Synod will ask aid from the Memphis Committee for the coming year. The humiliating fact still confronts our Synod, that while during the last ecclesiastical year, we have drawn from the Assembly's Committee $3,377, we have contributed to that treasury only $1,548, that is to say, no matter what we have done independently of the Committee, the great Synod of South Carolina is a candidate for aid at the door of her sister Synods, three-fourths of whom are weaker than herself for a sum far in excess of her entire contributions to the cause of Education.

Surely, brethren, our zeal to contribute to the Assembly's Committee ought to bear some proportion to our zeal to send them applications for aid. Looking now at the Presbyteries separately as to contributions and applications to the Central Committee we find that Bethel Presbytery with twelve caddidates asked aid for six, and gave $501 or $84 each; Enoree with seventeen candidates asked aid for fourteen, and gave $204 or $14 each; Harmony with nine candidates asked aid for six, and gave $199 or $33 each; Pee Dee with three candidates asked aid for three, and gave $91, or $30 each; South Carolina with five candidates asked aid for three, and gave $264, or $88 each; Charleston with eleven candidates, asked aid for eleven, and gave $186, or $17 each. Charleston Presbytery spent most of its education contributions independently of the Central Committee. The average contribution per member from this Synod to the Assembly's treasury is 8 cents.

The above Messrs. Editors, tells the the whole story. And let it be remembered that this is the utterance of the Synod itself. Would that other Synods had been as thorough and as candid in their treatment of this subject. It is simply astonishing that the deficit of the Central Committee was no greater. If this one Synod had paid into our treasury as much as it received our deficit would have been less by $1,829. And if the Synod of North Carolina also had paid into treasury as much as it received we should have had barely any deficit at all. The simple truth is, that many Presbyteries do not do what they promised to do when they recommended their candidates for aid, try to make diligent efforts to secure contributions from all their churches, or if these efforts are made, the money is sent directly to the candidates and not to our treasury. While the Church should welcome the discussion of any defects in our system or any errors in its administration, care should be taken to stimulate the churches to more liberal contributions. The way to injure any cause is to prophesy evil of it.

HAS THE WORK BEEN A SUCCESS?

In 1880 there were 145 candidates; in 1893 there were 427 candidates; in 1880 the contributions were $11,145; in 1893 the contributions were $22,238. In the last two years there has been a net increase of eighty-five ministers, while there have been fifty-nine deaths. This shows that there were in the two years 144 ordinations. Is the Church prepared to change a system that produces such fruits? The report of the Synod of North Carolina closes as follows: "Let us remember that our system of Beneficiary Education is no experiment, but it is the result of the acknowledged obligation of our Church to secure and maintain for herself a gifted and pious ministry, together with her experience during a century of her history in this country. It has given us many good and great men, all down the line of history. Read the past and the present, and see how the life of our Church is bound up with this system. When our membership refuse to support it, they are guilty of disloyalty to the Church, and when Presbyteries fail to exercise due care in the administration of the system, they are guilty of criminal negligence, which strikes at the very vitals of the Church. Let us realize the perils of the hour. By a careful obedience to the advice of our highest Court we can rally our churches to the cause; and now let us do it."

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Above Our Thoughts.

The man who should attempt to measure all celestial distances with a two-foot rule, or who should seek to investigate the mysteries of space by the aid of a tape measure, would only be laughed at for his folly. And yet such a man would be quite as wise as those who think to comprehend the things of God by the unaided powers of the human mind. "I cannot comprehend heaven," said one man to a Christian. "Did you suppose you could?" was the reply; that would be a poor heaven that we could comprehend now." When blind men come to be regarded as judges of paintings; when deaf men are reckoned skilful in music; when dumb men become famed for eloquence, then we may expect that poor, ignorant, erring, short-sighted mortals can comprehend the glory of our God.

The Apostle says: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I thought as a child; I understood as a child." Our present life is child life; and a condition of glory which we could comprehend would be no more adapted to our real needs hereafter than the play house of a child would be fit for his dwelling in the maturity of his manhood.

The present, in the midst of which we dwell, is often beyond our comprehension. We, in our bodies and minds are mysterious to ourselves and to all mankind. The world is full of unsolved problems and riddles, which we cannot unfold. There are many men whose wisdom in some directions is far beyond our own powers of comprehension. What, then, shall we say of a poor, blind, ignorant mortal, who thinks to comprehend not only man but God. We must learn our littleness before we ever can become great, and in learning our littleness we prepare for the greatness which only God can bestow.—The Armory.

Personal Faith.

What a change would come over our whole lives were we—from this hour to the final close—men and women of faith in the highest sense! Vast possibilities of usefulness, hitherto unknown, would open before us. We would then live no longer under the control of mere conventional standards. Efforts for God and humanity would no more be paralyzed by depression and fitful impulse. Divine promises would continually come to us with all the force of a fresh spiritual revelation. Though immersed in the details of ordinary life, we should feel every moment that we were on our way to a higher destiny. Crosses and losses would be to us the means of a more intimate fellowship with God, and our conviction of the reality of the Gospel would be to us an ever-growing stimulus in the path of duty.

But let us not make any mistake at this point. Such a faith would not always insure an even path for our feet. The victory of faith can only be where there is something to overcome, some struggle, some combat, some burden to litt for the Master. The assurance that we shall have tribulation in this world is not fully understood by many. Our faith does not annihilate our foes; it only makes us conquerors over them. Enemies will still rise up along life's pathway before us, plotting evil against us, seeking in every possible way to destroy our trust, and leaving no stone unturned to hinder our progress. "The devil goeth about like a roaring lion;" he is not yet consigned to his dark abode. The battle still rages. Let us not, therefore, be tempted to think that because there is struggle we are not men and women of faith. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

Economy.

It is strange, considering what vital interests are affected by it, that so little attention is paid to the education of youth in the handling of money. The main thought that most Christian parents have concerning the relation of their children to wealth is to "bring them up" and leave them a fortune During their minority the bills are referred to the parents and the money supplied to the boys and girls is understood to be for "pin money," that is for such things as please the fancy and attract the eye. Until the boy or girl arrives at an age when he becomes necessary to earn and save, the average American youth knows no more about the proper use of money than as if he or she had been dropped from the moon. How can one associate that with self-restraint which has hitherto been supplied only for purpose of indulgence?

Many a marriage is "a failure" just because the earlier years of the young married couple constituted a training wholly in the wrong direction. The girl has never been taught to live within an allowance; the young lover with the natural hopefulness of youth gets trusted for a diamond ring with which to seal the engagement, and will "see" the tailor who made his wedding suit "later." And so they are launched upon the sea of matrimony amid splendors they cannot afford, loaded with debts they cannot pay; and nothing but death or the grace of God can now save them from a life of mutual recrimination and heartburnings. No reasoning, no argument, no exhibition of the household budget will move one hair's breadth the wife who when she wants money has only one thing to say and that she "must have it." No kindly or angry admonition will check the young husband who piles debt upon dept in order to meet demands as unreasonable as they are unsatiable. Care wakes with them in the morning and goes to bed with them at night. It takes but a few months to wear off the bloom of their first married life, and with increasing years come increasing entanglements but not increasing wisdom. It is a sorrowful story, told a million times over in our American homes in each generation, all because the little craft was thrust out to sea without a pilot, a chart, a compass or a helm. The first lesson for the heads of the new household to learn is that which they may never have wisdom or grace to master, that embraced in the apostolic warning to "Owe no man anything but to love one another"—Interior.

The Growth of Character.

Character grows for the most part insensibly, as the life grows at first. Now and then it gets notable impulses which we can mark, but commonly it grows imperceptibly, like our bodies. The influences around us are self-registering. Our spirits, like the winds, unconsciously write their story in all its fulness on the anemometer—life; slowly in light airs, quickly in storms, all goes down. Little by little the whole comes in the end. Single acts may show character, but they seldom form it, though some are supreme and ruling. It grows ring by ring, and the twig of this year becomes the bough of next. Our habits are another name for it, and they grow like the grass. The man's face lies behind the boy's, but it comes out only after a round of winters and summer.—Dr. Geikie.

As Lights in the World.

I remember of hearing of a blind man who sat by the wayside with a lantern near him. When he was asked what he had a lantern for, as he could not see the light, he said it was that people should not stumble over him. I believe more people stumble over the inconsistencies of professed Christians than any other cause. What is doing more harm to the cause of Christ than all the skepticism in the world is this cold, dead formalism, this conformity to the world, this professing what we do not possess. The eyes of the world are upon us. I think it was George Fox who said every Quaker ought to light up the country for ten miles around him. If we were all brightly shining for the Master, those about us would soon be reached, and there would be a shout of praise going to heaven.—D. L. Moody.

The Argument of the Life.

'When I was young," said a good old man, "I did not care for the concerns of eternity, and was very different from what I afterwards became. Aye, there was an infidel once as used to come and argue with me about religion, and one day I turned to him and said, 'You knew me as I used to be before I gave my heart to God; now tell me, was I a better man then, nay, was I half as good a man as I have been since'? And the sceptic had not a word to say.' There was no answering this plain argument. The sceptic knew what a sad, sinful young man this old man had been before he was brought to Christ and made a new creature in him, and he could not deny the change that had been wrought in him. A changed life is indeed one of the hardest arguments for an infidel to answer. There he sees power of God unto salvation.

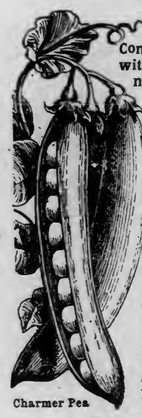
The Beauty of a Holy Life.

A holy life is made up of a number of small things—little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles or battles: nor one great act of mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeams, not the lightning; the waters of Siloam "that go softly" in the meek mission of refreshment, not "waters of the river, great and many," rushing down in noisy torents, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of the flesh; the avoidance of such little things as those goes far to make up, at least, the negative beauty of a holy life.

What They Say.

Wine and Spirit Gazette:

This paper utters this wail which will be to all who desire suppression of the liquor traffic, encouraging:



There are many men still in business in this city (Boston) who can remember when the sale of liquor was practically as free as the pursuit of any other lawful business. * * To-day the traffic is absolutely outlawed in half a dozen States; local option excludes it from large portions of other States; high license curtails the profits it yields elsewhere, while wherever permitted—mark the word permitted—it is weighted down by exactions and restrictions of the most galling and oppressive character. Indeed, every effort is made to rob the business of any claim to respectability, and to brand those who follow it as criminals, or, at least, men of no standing in the community.

FOREIGN MISSION RECEIPTS FOR JANUARY.

The receipts for January 1893 were $12,615.90. The receipts for January 1894 were $12,566.92, a decrease of $48.98. This is not a very large decrease, but what we are working for is an increase of $25,000 by the 1st of April.

This little falling off brings down our gain for the year to $6,841.13. We are not very happy over this report, still we are not discouraged. Presbyterians sometimes lag by the way, but they are a great people to come in at the last. This is all that is guaranteed by their doctrine of final perseverance One brother sympathized with us so much in our desire for an increase over last January that when he mailed us a check for $364.00 he sent us a telegram to let us know that it was coming. But it was delayed in the mails and did not get in on time. It is here, however, this morning, February 1st, to give us a good send off for the new month.

Some of the remittances received during the month were accompanined by a statement that they had been in the hands of Church Treasurers for several months. It is time now for these sleeping treasurers to wake up in order that the work their churches have done for missions may receive acknowledgement in our annual report.

I wish to repeat here what I have stated before, that a subscription to "The Missionary" is practically a contribution to the cause. "The Missionary" is paid for out of our general treasury, and the money sent for it goes into the general treasury. If we could have a thousand new subscribers between now and the 1st of April it would be a thousand dollars added to the treasury receipts to be reported for the year.

Praying again that God's blessing may abide upon all lovers and helpers of this work, I remain,

Fraternally,

S. H. CHESTER.

Montgomery :—At the quarterly communion service of the Central church seven members were received; four on profession of faith and three by letter. The new organ, built by Messrs. Mason and Rich, of Worcester, Mass., at a cost of $1,500, has been shipped and will soon be in place. It is the first organ of its kind to be built with an extended key-board, the organ proper being built in the rear of the pulpit and the key-board in the choir alcove to the right. Rev. J H. Every vacant field in the Presbytery is put under the charge of some member of the committee with instructions to correspond with the churches and endeavor to get them to call a pastor at once. Paducah :—An exceedingly interesting and profitable series of services which were continued two weeks and a half at the Second Presbyterian church of this city, of which Rev. S. L. Grigsby is pastor, were brought to a close Wednesday evening, January 24th. Rev. William Thorn, of Tiptonville, Tenn., who assisted the pastor, preached the Word "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power" to the comfort and edification of the large audiences which daily filled the capacious auditorium of the church, and to the hopeful conversion of about twenty-five persons, who professed faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Bro. Thom has endeared himself to our people by his earnest preaching and evident consecration of life. Already there have been eight accessions to our church as a result of the meeting, and we hope to receive others of those who have made professions. About ninety persons have been received during the past year in this church.

DOMESTIC.

The Catholic missionaries are making steady progress among the negroes of the South. It is stated that there are about 160,000 negro Catholics in the United States; there are 21 sisterhoods teaching in 108 schools over 8,000 negro children. Four communities are especially devoted to the negroes. The Sisters of St. Francis, from England; the Sisters of the Holy Ghost, San Antonio, Texas; the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, Mother Katherine Drexel's community; and the Mission Helpers, of Baltimore.

Rev. Dr. John B. Newton, of Richmond, has been elected assistant bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Virginia. He was educated for the practice of medicine and was a surgeon in the Confederate army. He has been one of the most prominent clergymen in the diocese, and has taken great interest, and been specially helpful in the matter of colored evangelization.

The question of making women eligible in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church to the offices of ruling elder or deacon has been before the Presbyteries Only one-third of Presbyteries have voted thus far and the interest is very small. In the matter of change of name even less interest is taken. Only one Synod, Pennsylvania, has approved the proposed change; three Synods and twelve Presbyteries oppose it.

The Strossa Roman Catholic, Cincinnati, O., was destroyed by fire on Wednesday of last week. Loss $50,000.

FOREIGN.

It will interest the friends of the Bible to know that the National Bible Society of Scotland has struck out a new departure of the greatest interest and significance in connection with Bible circulation in China. This is the production of the Gospel of St. Mark in Chinese, with short notes calculated to make the narrative intelligible to the Chinese. This departure has received the approval of many missionaries.

Father Joseph Vincenteni, of the Roman Catholic Order of St. Charles Borromeo, has been sent from Rome to look after the Italian Roman Catholics coming in such numbers to this country. He arrived in New York last week, and is looking over the ground preparatory to entering upon his work.

The Pope wrote an autograph letter to the Czar in behalf of the Roman Catholics of Russia and has received in reply assurance that peace towards these religionists shall be observed throughout the empire.

The returns of the Welsh Presbyterian churches for the past year, as issued in the official diary, show that in England and Wales there are 1,282 churches connected with that body, of which 204 now conduct their service in the English language. The total church membership is said to be 139,648 (an increase of 2,283), and in addition 292,638 adherents, who are not communicants. There are 192-004 in the Sunday-schools, and 706 ordained preachers, of whom 482 have pastorates. The chapel debts are reported to be £280,489.

POUNDED BUT NOT HURT.

Last Tuesday night, the first in our new home, the members of Red Springs and Antioch congregations gaveus a good pounding. We often read of such things but no correct idea of how pleasant they are can be formed except by those who have learned by personal experience. Being beginners at house-keeping we needed a great many articles of both furniture and food and our friends, the pounders, supplied nearly every demand for both. Some fifteen necessary articles of furniture were given us, and an abundance of provisions of all kind. In the way of meat alone, besides sausage and other things of that kind, twelve nice hams were left in our possession. Nor did our friends forget our horse, but filled our little barn with corn and fodder. We do thank these people from the very depth of our hearts for thus remembering our needs, and for this token of esteem. May God's richest blessing be upon both pastor and people helping us all to labor together for the upbuilding of His kingdom.

A GENEROUS DONATION.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

I have not seen a notice in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN of the generosity of Messrs. J. Van Lindly and J. A. Young to the Orphans' Home. Last fall I laid before these gentlemen, the claims of the institution. They are both of other persuasions and churches than ours, yet Mr. Lindly said he would donate one hundred, each, apple and peach trees. When "Our Fatherless Ones," acknowledged receipts of them, it stated he even did better, sending other varieties and some fifty varieties of roses also. This orchard is to be known perpetually, as the Van Lindly orchard, and the other one by Mr. Young, as the Greensboro Nurseries' (as per acknowledgment to me by Rev. Boyd the superintendent.) This was fifty apple and fifty peach trees. It is but right and justly due to these men that our churches and our people should know these facts, and more particularly so, as they are not of our denomination.

No one can estimate what an amount of good these trees—more than three hundred—will be to this institution when they get to bearing.

I write that you may make extracts as you like, and in the hope that others may be induced to imitate such generosity.

Respectfully,

W. S. MOORE.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 18, 1894.

Representative Morse, of Massachusetts, speaking of the resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by himself and in the Senate by Senator Frye, providing for a Constitutional amendment recognizing God and the Divinity of Jesus Christ, said: "It is a remarkable fact that neither the Constitution nor the Declaration of Independence have a direct reference to Divine power. A movement was made ten years ago to secure a suitable amendment to the Constitution, and quite an agitation ensued, but it was not successful. The present movement was inaugurated by influential gentlemen in Pittsburg and Baltimore. The amendment, if agreed to by Congress, would, of course, have to be referred to the States for ratification, but that formality would be quickly complied with, as the Christian element in the various States has a controlling influence. The amendment is, I believe, acceptable to all religious denominations."

Senator Kyle has introduced, by request, a bill requiring the United States officials to be temperate. The idea is all right, but it would be better to substitute for the somewhat complicated and clumsy preamble and three sections of this bill one with a single section, simply adding to the oath which every official takes upon assuming office the words—"and I solemnly swear to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage while I remain in the employ of the government." The great good that would be accomplished by such a law may not be so apparent elsewhere as in Washington, where there are so many intemperate government employes, men whose families suffer for lack of the money they spend in rumshops. But, aside from its moral effect, would it not be a good move from a common sense, business point of view to compel all officials to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor ?

The most interesting event of the week in the Senate was the short speech made by Senator Sherman in favor of the right of Secretary Carlisle to issue bonds. It is all too rare in Congress for a political opponent of an administration to make a speech endorsing any act of that administration. It was this fact that gave unusual force to Mr. Sherman's language, coming, as it did, just after the failure of the attempt of the Knights of Labor to get an injunction from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to prevent the issue of bonds to-morrow, in accordance with Secretary Carlisle's announcement. Mr. Sherman said: "The Secretary of the Treasury has full power to sell bonds to maintain the gold reserve. It is his duty to do so. This is the first time in fifteen long years that any one has denied that power. It never has been disputed before. It is almost unpatriotic to question this power at a time when the revenues of the government are insufficient to meet the expenditures. It is a question that should be above partisan discussion. I feel like standing up for the honor of the country and for the power of the Secretary of the Treasury." Before concluding he said: "I regard the credit of the United States government as safe in the hands of Grover Cleveland and John G. Carlisle as if it was in the hands of a Republican."

The debate over the tariff bill with its income tax amendment is drawing to a close in the House of Representatives. The final vote will be taken to-morrow, and it is considered certain that the bill will pass.

The news from Brazil aroused keenest interest, but no excitement, here. The administration and members of Congress who know him have every confidence in the discretion and conservatism of Admiral Benham, who is in command of the American vessels in Brazilian waters. His instructions were to protect American interests, and the feeling is general here that whatever he has done has been done solely with that end in view.

The most prominent official in Washington who teaches a Sunday-school class is Justice Brewer, of U. S. Supreme Court He has a large Bible-class of adults and he never misses a Sunday when he is in the city, unless compelled by sickness to do so. He is said to give the same study and care to preparing for the lesson that he does to preparing an opinion upon an important legal case, and those who have had the pleasure of listening to his Bible talks to his class speak in the highest terms of his ability as an expounder of the Scriptures.

Everything appears to be moving auspiciously in the preparations for the Moody and Sankey meetings. The great chorus of 1,500 voices is actively rehearsing. This week a series of union meetings are being held in a number of our churches, preparatory to the great revival. and public interest is being manifested to an unusual extent. Great things are expected, and many prayers are being offered in behalf of the expectations. T.

February 11.—God's Judgment on Sodom.

Gen. xviii. 22-33. Commit vss. 23-26.

Golden Text.—Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Gen. xviii. 25.

Topic.—Abraham's prayer for Sodom.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Note how Lot came to be in Sodom (ch. xiii). Read the rescue of Lot by Abraham (ch. xiv). Locate the Oaks of Mamre (the true rendering—it was not a plain) on the map (xiii. 18). Find Elam, and trace the route of the Kings. This will show that the vale of Siddim was not at the south but at the Northern end of the Dead Sea, as Hazezon-tama is the same as Engedi which is located beyond question on the middle of the western shore of the Dead Sea, and they passed it going from Kadesh to the vale of Siddim. This is confirmed by the description of Lot's choice (xiii. 10, 11) and by Abraham's route in pursuit (xiv. 14, 15) passing between Salem and Sodom (xiv. 17, 18) on his return to Mamre—(Locate Dan and Salem on the map.). Archeological discovery has thrown much light on this whole chapter—identifying the names, and showing even earlier invasions of Palestine from Babylonia for the purpose of keeping open the caravan route from Egypt.

Read the early part of chap. xviii, and note Abraham's visitors (vs. 2 compared with vss. 16, 17, 22 and xix. 1); his hospitality (vss. 3-8); the promise given him (vss. 9-14); the reason for communicating his purpose about Sodom to Abraham (vss. 17-19). Abraham had a representative capacity given him as the source of blessing for all nations and so must know why God destroyed one of them; and as Abraham was to instruct his descendants in righteousness he must know that this overthrow of the cities had a moral purpose and was not an accidental convulsion of nature.

Second Step. Study the lesson itself for its teachings on the following points:

(1). Abraham's attitude, vss. 22, 23.
(2). His arguments, vss. 23-25.
(3). His progressive appeals, vss. 28-32.
(4). His humility and reverence, vss. 27, 30-32.
(5). The Lord's gracious and extending mercy, vss. 26, 28-32.
(6). The close ot opportunity, vs. 33.

Third Step. Write a summary of the lesson and compare it with the one below:

When His two companions went on their errand to Sodom, the Lord remained with Abraham still standing before him. Abraham drew near and pressing the distinction between right and wrong and appealing to the character of God, he urges the deliverance of Sodom if there be fifty righteous men found there. With many expressions of his own unworthiness and of reverence for God, he continues to urge his appeal until God has promised that he would spare the city for the sake of ten rightcous men, when the interview closes.

Fourth Step. Consider any questions of difficulty, consulting your helps.

The men, vs. 22. Evidently, the angels (xix. 1, 10, 16) Note that the Lord, though appearing the superior of the others from the first (vs. 3) is also called is also called a man (vss. 1, 2.) For other instances of similar usage see Gen. xxxii. 24-34; Judges xiii. 9, 10. Compare Ezek. i. 26, 28.

Sixth Step. Take up topics suggested and study them in the light of other parts of God's Word.

1. Intercessory prayer. Conditions of success.
   a. Righteousness before God, vs. 19; Ps. lxvi. 18; Jas. v. 16.
   b. Personal effort and sacrifice. (Abraham fought for Sodom as well as prayed, xiv. 15). Compare Moses (Ex. xxxii. 32); Paul (Eph. iii. 13, 14; Rom. ix. 3 and x. 1); Christ (Luke xxiii. 33, 34).
   c. Zeal for God's honour, vs. 25. Daniel ix. 17-19.
   d. Confession and humility, vs. 27; Daniel ix. 5-8.
   e. Importunity, vss. 20-32; Luke xi. 8; xviii 1.
   f. Expectancy of results, xix. 27, 28. Mark xi. 23.
2. Sowing and Reaping.

The title of the lesson and the whole background of the narrative require a consideration of the doom of Sodom in relation to Lot and Abraham It is best studied under the above aspect (Gal. vi. 7, 8.)

a. The men of Sodom—
   Sowed wickedness Gen. xiii. 13; xviii. 20.
   Reaped destruction, Gen, xix. 24, 25; Luke xiii. 3, 5; Matt. xi. 24.
b. Lot—
   Sowed selfishness (Gen. xiii. 10, 11), compromise with evil (Gen. xiii. 12, 13), neglect of God's altar. (Compare Gen. xiii. 18—"Abraham built—did Lot?).
   Reaped trouble (Gen. xiv. 12), and—that warning unheeded—loss of influence in his household (xix. 14), loss of children (xix 15), loss of wife (xix. 26), loss of property (xix. 25), corruption in his own heart (xix. 8) and in his children xix. 32.) 1 Cor. iii. 15; 1 Peter iv. 17, 18,
c. Abraham—
   Sowed generosity (Gen. xiii. 9); magnanimity (xiv. 14), unworldliness (xiv. 22, 23), worship of God (xiii. 8), righteousness (xv. 6; xviii. 19.)
   Reaped a royal inheritance (xiii. 14, 15), the protection (xv. 1), the friendship (Is. xli. 8; Jas. ii. 23) and confidence (xviii. 17. John xv. 15). of God, and became a fountain of spiritual blessing to all the earth (xviii 18.)

Sixth Step. Prayerfully consider the personal application of the above outlined lesson. Another truth tacitly assumed in Abraham's prayer and God's answer is the value of the righteous in preserving the world from destruction (Matt. v. 13). The way in which Abraham's prayer was answered, even though the condition was not met, should be meditated upon (xix. 16, 22).

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

The various "steps" should now be familiar to the teachers following this course. For younger classes the lesson on sowing and reaping is the most important. For young and mixed classes be careful to avoid reference to the revolting corruptions in the family of Lot.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF JAN. 25.

16. (a) Leaving his country at God's command, Gen. iii. 1-5; Heb. xi. 8.
   (b) Accepting the promise of a son, Gen. xv. 5, 6; Rom. iv. 3, 18-21.
   (Most of the answers refer to Heb xi. 9; we tried to make it plain that it was single, definite acts of faith that we intended, but as it was difficult to frame the question, and as the chapter in Hebrews three times says of Abraham. "By faith" he did so and so, we accept this as a proper answer.)
   (c) Offering up Isaac, Gen. xxii. 12, Heb. xi. 17-19.
17. By faith, Rom. iv. 16; Gal. iii. 7.
18. Abraham's prayer for Sodom. Gen. Gen. xviii. 23-32.
   (The question was raised whether xvii. 18 was not the proper answer. That is rather awish than a prayer, though we could not count it a mistake.)

Successful answers were sent as follows:

PASTOR.

The session of the First Presbyterian church, Salisbury, N. C., desire to place on record the following testimonial of respect to the memory of our late brother, Dr. J. J SUMMERELL.

Joseph John Summerell was born in Halifax county, N. C., Nov. 1st, 1819, and died in Salisbury, N. C., December 17th, 1893, age seventy-four years, one month and sixteen days. In 1842 he graduated at the University of North Carolina and in 1844 took his degree in Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. The same year he was married to Ellen H., daughter of Dr. Elisha Mitchell of the University of North Carolina and settled in Salisbury where he continued to reside till he died. For nearly fifty years he devoted himself to the practice of his chosen profession, in which he was eminently successful, enjoying the confidence of the community and the respect and honor of his medical brethren throughout the State. For a number of years he was Superintendent of Health for Rowan county, and physician for the County Home. When the N. C. State Medical Society was formed he became a member, and in 1862 was elected President of that distinguished body. Being warmly attached to his chosen profession he by constant study kept himself acquainted with the new discoveries in medicine and surgery and was a faithful reader of medical literature.

As a man he was straightforward and conscientious and having the courage of his convictions was not afraid to express an honest opinon when he deemed it his duty to do so.

On the 1st of April 1847 he connected himself with the First Presbyterian church, Salisbury, N. C., and in 1852 was ordained a deacon, and after serving the church most efficiently for fourteen years in this capacity, he was elected ruling elder in 1866, and for twenty-seven years faithfully discharged the duties of his office and was present at the last regular meeting of the session before his death. He often represented his church in the meetings of Presbytery and Synod and was a delegate to both of these bodies in the fall of 1893. He also represented his Presbytery in the General Assembly.

In view of the long and faithful service of our brother, be it therefore,

Resolved 1st. That we deeply feel the loss we have sustained in the removal of our departed brother, and bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who does not willingly afflict the children of men.

2d. That we emulate his many Christian virtues, his faithful attendance on the services of the sanctuary, his zeal for the welfare of the Master's cause and his earnest prayers for the success and growth of the Church.

3rd. That we mourn the loss of his wise counsels and active labors as a member of the session and cherish pleasant memories of the many harmonious meetings we have held as co-laborers in the Lord's vineyard.

4th. That this memorial tribute be entered on our sessional records and a page be set apart on which shall be inscribed his name and date of his birth and death, and that a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased and sent to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

MRS. THOS. G. HYMAN.

IN MEMORIAM.

On Wednesday evening, March 1st, 1893, in the First Presbyterian church of Greensboro, I solemnized the marriage of Mr. Thos. G. Hyman, of Goldsboro, and Miss Elizabeth Gretter Sloan, daughter of Thos. J. Sloan, and grand daughter of Rev Jno. A. Gretter, deceased, first pastor of this church. Our church was crowded to almost its utmost capacity, and bright eyes and radiant faces and loving hearts rained benedictions over the happy pair, as young and hopeful they left the church united and blest. All felt that God had given him one of our best and sweetest girls, and we thanked God that her young husband was well worthy of her, and thus:

"Across the threshold led,
And every Tear kissed off as soon as shed,
His house she entered there to be a Light
Shining within, though all without were night;
A guardian-angel o'er his life presiding,
Doubling his Pleasure, and his Cares dividing!"

And now, looking back, how like an evanescent dream or vision does it all appear!

"Oh death! thou severest every tie, the strongest and the nearest;
At thy dread call the stoutest fall, the loveliest and the dearest."

On Wednesday of last week, Jan. 24th, 1894, a telegram from Goldsboro announced that Mrs. Thos. G. Hyman, our bright, sweet "Bessie" and only in her 23d year, had been called away by her Saviour's summons, and leaving a little daughter only ten days old. I may not say all I feel like saying of this young Christian wife, so soon translated.

"Bessie" was received into the First Presbyterian church, of Greensboro, being one thirty who appeared before the session—on Saturday March 19th, 1887, and on the next day with eight others, she was baptized. She was an unusually bright and cheerful girl, of a friendly and cordial disposition, self-sacrificing, and ever ready to help others. Her deft and skillful fingers decorated with taste and beauty whatever she touched. Her presence was sunlight in every circle she entered, for she was beloved indeed, and welcomed by everybody who knew her. Her death has thrown a shadow over Greensboro, over our church and over her home and kindred here, but oh, how much more over her young husband's heart and home, and that too, of his father's in Goldsboro, where she was welcomed, and "dear as an own daughter and tenderly loved and nurtured as such," and where too she died.

When during her brief sickness some mention was made of the uncertainties and possibilities of her condition, she readily understood it, and expressed herself as prepared and ready—that her peace was made with God, and that her trust was in Jesus Christ, her Saviour.

The sudden and unexpected announcement of her death spread sorrow and gloom throughout our town and is deeply lamented by all; and knowing, as we do, her bright, vivacious and warm-hearted character and social and Christian worth, we sympathize here most tenderly with the bereaved ones in Goldsboro, and we earnestly invoke upon the young and desolate husband and his little motherless babe, and upon his dear father's household, who mourn and are bereaved with him, the special and promised grace of the Holy Ghost, "the Comforter," and of that God and Saviour who pities as a father, who "knoweth our frame, and remembereth that we are dust," who is "the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort."

"Bessie was buried in Goldsboro, the funeral being held in the Presbyterian church there, and conducted by the Rev. Mr. Farries, who repeated the following lines, favorite verses of the dear departed:

"And if sometimes commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this potion for our lips to drink,
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with obedient grace!
And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God sends His friend,
And that sometimes, the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon His love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key!
But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans like lilies pure and white unfold.
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold,
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say, 'God knew the best'!"

Several tender and beautiful tributes have already appeared in both the Goldsboro and Greensboro papers. From the latter I transcribe two stanzas expressive of the feeling and love of one of her most intimate associates:

Oh yes! the light is breaking,
She's only gone before
And waiting on the shining sands
That guild the farther shore,—
Waiting as oft she waited
In the happy hours gone by,
For me to walk in the twilight
As the stars came in the sky.

I think beyond the sunset,
Beyond the "gates ajar,"
When I shall cross the river,
I shall see her from afar,
Shall see her crowned with glory
Where dreams unfailing flow,
With outstretched hands of greeting
As in the long ago.

J. HENRY SMITH.

Greensboro, N. C., Jan. 29th, 1894.

At his home in Stokes county, Dec. 6th, 1893, Mr. THOMAS MARTIN, in his 82d year. He was an excellent man, had many friends and few if any enemies, was for years a member of the church, one of its best supporters, and best attendants. He loved the cause of true religion and his example and influence were in that direction. He leaves a Christian wife, who will sadly miss him, and a host of friends who will ever revere his memory.

Called Home Jan. 27th, 1894, Miss EUPHROSINE ELIZABETH FRONTIS, in the 52d year of her age. She must be one of those who 'come out of great tribulation" as she was a constant sufferer from childhood never seeing a well day. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Her father was the Rev. Stephen Frontis of sainted memory. A devoted sister, her constant companion, and Dr. D. B. Frontis a half brother mourn their loss.

FOR THE FAMILY.

TWO LITTLE HANDS.

Once on a summer day divine,
Two little hands fell into mine;
How pink they were! how frail and fine,
Each one a crumpled velvet ball,
So soft and so absurdly small,
Ah, me! to hold within them all
Life's tangled and mysterious skein,
The mingled threads of joy and pain
Whose hidden ends we seek in vain.

O! fast the years have fled away;
Two little hands, at work or play,
Still bide with me the life long day;
Now on some wilful mischief bent,
And now to loving service lent,
Now folded—sleepy and content—
The dimpled fingers curled, like those
Sweet jealous leaves that cling and close
About the red heart of a rose.

I kiss them with a passionate sigh;
The quick fears spring, I scarce know why
In thinking of the by and by!
How will they build, these little hands?
Upon the treacherous, shifting sands?
Or where the Rock Eternal stands?
And will they fashion, strong and true,
The work that they shall find to do?
Dear little hands, if I but knew!

Could I but see the veiled fate,
Behind your barred and hidden gate!
Yet trusting this, my love must wait!
O! when perplexed no more by these Tear-blinded ways, my wanderings cease
In the sweet valleys of His peace;
Beyond the dark, some heavenly sign,
Some clew, however faint and fine,
Shall guide these little hands to mine!

Items for Lady Readers.

An English lady, Miss Agnes S. Lewis, through whose enterprise the Syriac manuscript of the four Gospels was secured from the Convent of St. Catharine, on Mt. Sinai, is now trying to raise money to build a suitable library room to preserve the treasures of ancient literature which are there. They are now very poorly preserved and difficult of consultation.

Madam Carnot, wife of the President of France, is not a young woman, for she is a grandmother. But there are times when she seems not more than twenty-five years old. There is not a wrinkle on her serene face, nor a thread of silver in her black hair, and her dark eyes are as brilliant as those of a young girl. She is well read and well informed on the subjects of the day. No French woman understands better than Madam Carnot the political situation of Europe. She speaks English fluently. Before her husband's election to the Presidency Madame Carnot was known only as a good wife and mother, devoted to the interests of her husband and the education of her children. Her home was simple, and neither she nor her husband cared much for society.

Miss Dorothea Klumpke, a native of San Francisco, passed on December 12th her examination before the Faculty of Science, Paris, for the degree of Doctor of Mathematics. Her thesis, which is said to have elicited the highest praise, is entitled "A Contribution to the Study of the Rings of Saturn." She is the first female graduate in the department of mathematics at the Sorbonne. At the graduating of this young lady there was perfect silence; and this must be accepted as complimentary, for when only a year ago Mdlle Chauvin, a young French lady, graduated, she was almost actually mobbed by a howling horde of law students. Miss Klumpke is not the only one of her family who has distinguished herself, for a few years back a sister of hers graduated in medicine.—

Miss Elizabeth Palmer Peabody, the elebrated educator and authoress, died on January 4th, at her home in Jamaica Plain, Mass. She was one of the advanced educators of the century, and was directly concerned in the introduction of the kindergarten system in this country, and has been foremost in all educational reforms, especially in that of establishing new and important methods in the existing school system. She was born in Billerica, Mass., May 16th, 1804, the daughter of Nathaniel Peabody, a physician. Her sister Sophia became the wife of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the novelist, and another sister, Mary, married Horace Mann, who founded the school for the deaf and dumb. Miss Peabody's writings were mainly in the line of educational work. She was a woman of great culture and foremost in all works of reform.

The will of Mrs. Harriet Hayden, colored, who died recently in Boston, bequeathed her estate, valued at between $4,000 and $5,000, to Harvard College to found, in memory of her son, a scholarship for the benefit of poor and deserving colored students. By the terms of the will a medical course to be preferred.

Things Useful.

Boil two roots of celery until soft; also six potatoes, which should not floury. Let them cool, then slice them as thinly as you would cucumbers. Grate a little onion and lay at the bottom of the salad bowl, then put a layer of potatoes and a layer of celery alternately until you have used all. Mix a little salt, two spoonfuls of vinegar and four spoonfuls of oil, and pour gently and gradually over the vegetables. Garnish with small olives.

In buying whalebones for a waist, select those that are flexible rather than those that are stiff. The former bend to the shape, yet hold the waist in position, while the latter are apt to snap or break. If a bone becomes very much bent, do not throw it away as worthless, but hold it close to the fire or lamp chimney, and the heat will straighten it out as good as new. Hold the bent or curved side towards the heart. It is best to buy bone by the yard and cut lengths to suit. You can buy casing or covering for them for about five cents a yard.

Use as many oranges as are required. Cut off the top of the fruit carefully and take out the pulp without breaking the skin. Then make a jelly from the orange and replace it in the skin. Gently lay over the top again. A pretty and original dish is the result.

Almond Taffy.—Boil together half a pint of water and a pound of brown sugar for ten minutes. Blanch and slice through the middle one and one half ounces of almonds. Stir them in the syrup with two ounces of butter. Let the mixture boil hard for ten minutes. Pour on a well-buttered dish to thickness of half an inch.

Gentleness.

Gentleness is an every day garment. It is always suitable for a journey and is never out of style at home. It is the best oil to prevent friction, the best salve to heal bruises, the best provender for a long journey, the best testimonial to a good character. It never plants a thorn in your pillow or a pain in your heart. It is a coin that is current in both worlds, and is a commodity that is never a drug on the market. As children of God, covet and claim and cultivate this fruit of the Spirit of God.—Christian Intelligencer.

FREEDOM from the aches, pains, and weaknesses peculiar to womanhood comes with Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. First it relieves them; then it cures them. Have a little patience, perhaps, if they're serious. The troubles that come slowly have to go slowly: but go they will, if you'll faithfully use the "Prescription," and they'll go permanently.

For every "female complaint" and derangement, or in any "run-down" and exhausted condition of the female system, this medicine is the only remedy so safe and certain that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in the case of every tired or afflicted woman, she'll have her money back. Chorea, St. Vitus's Dance, Nervous and General Debility, Sleeplessness and kindred ailments promptly relieved and cured by it.

A certain and lasting cure, for the worst Catarrh in the Head, is guaranteed by the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER 6.

"Yes, sir," replied John, "here is something I found in the street this morning, and I've brought it to you, as I think you may be able to find out the owner;" and as he laid the diamond brooch on the desk, he proceeded to relate how and where he had got it.

The superintendent uttered such an exclamation, which made all the policemen who happened to be in the office at once flock round John, to see what could have occasioned it.

"Well, I declare," continued the superintendent, "a little ago I was thinking what an unfortunate fellow you were; and now, I must congratulate you on your extreme good luck."

"Yes, if so be that this is really the brooch we are in search of! said one of the policeman.

"There's little chance of two such being lost in one night," replied the superintendent, laughing; "indeed, I question if there is one like this in all Scotland," he added, taking up the brooch and examining it. "Besides, this answers the description exactly, and was found in the very place. Look here," he continued, turning to John, and he pointed as he spoke to a placard which one of his men had just been fastening to the door.—"Just before you came in, we received this notice, and I was about to send off a copy of it, to be printed and posted up in the streets; I little expected to be so soon saved from requiring to do so!"

John obeyed, and proceeded to read the announcement of the loss of a very valuable diamond brooch, which had been dropped that morning, between two and three o'clock, by a lady on her way from the assembly-rooms, where a ball had been held the night before. It then went on to describe the brooch, and to state that "any one finding it, and bringing it to the address given, would receive the reward of—50*l*."

When John had read the above, he stood like one bewildered, and hardly believing the evidence of his eye-sight; for, in his simplicity, when he determined honestly to bring the brooch to the police office, the idea of reward never once crossed his mind; so that the revulsion occasioned in it, by this sudden transition from utter hopelessness to extreme happiness, was so strong that he could scarcely command his feelings so as to avoid bursting into tears.

"What ails you, my man?" exclaimed the superintendent, observing his emotion; "you seem to take your good fortune in rather an unusual manner!"

"Oh, sir! if you did but know all, you would not wonder at my feeling overwhelmed," replied John. "The loss I met with yesterday left me penniless; and now—to think of my good fortune in chancing upon such a sum of money, and all for nothing too!"

"I can assure you, the lady who lost the brooch won't think it nothing. Why, man, do you know it is of immense value? and might bring—I can't tell how much money; and being such a rich prize for any one who might find it, I do believe she considered it ten chances to one that she would ever see it again. Her servant, whom you met leaving the office as you came in, had been to the assembly-rooms to search inside and about the doors, before coming here, as he said his lady was in a sad way about it, when she missed it; for besides its great value, it was the gift of an esteemed friend. It was fortunate indeed for you, that you chanced to be there before him. And now, you'd better lose no time in taking it to her. Here, Tom," addressing one of his men, "take this honest fellow along with you to Beech-Wood, and be sure to tell Mrs. Montgomery, that he never once calculated on receiving any reward, when he brought the brooch to me. Go along, my man, and I promise you, that you won't have to complain of your reception." And John departed with his escort, accordingly.

While he was on his way, we may inform our readers, that the brooch he had found had been given to Mrs. Montgomery by a Russian princess, to whom she had been introduced in early life when she resided with her father in St. Petersburg, where he held an official situation at the court of the emperor. Mrs. Montgomery had first attracted the notice of the princess by her extreme beauty, and then, on discovering the amiability of her disposition, she become exceedingly attached to her. This attachment had been strengthened, by the circumstance of the young lady having gone to assist in nursing a beloved and only child of the princess in a dangerous and protracted illnes; and in token of her gratitude she had presented her with the costly brooch, when she left Russia on her marriage with Mr. Montgomery, who was a rich merchant of D——, but connected in business with that country. Hence the high value she set on the brooch, her distress at losing it, and the large reward offered in hopes of recovering it.

And now, instead of accompanying John to the beautiful villla of this lady in the neighborhood of D——, we shall return to Marion, whom we left three days ago—"troubled yet not distressed, perplexed, but not in despair, cast down, but not forsaken," in her lonely cottage in the Highland glen.

Dixie's Six Cents.

A short time ago a pale-faced little girl walked hurriedly into a book-store in Annasburg, and said to the man serving at the counter; "Please, sir, I want a book that's got 'Suffer little children to come unto Me' in it; and how much is it sir? and I am in a great hurry."

The shopman bent down and dusted his specks. "And suppose I haven't the book you want; what then, my dear?"

"Oh, sir, I shall be sorry; I want it so!" and the little voice trembled at there being a chance of disappointment.

The kind shopman took the thin hand of his small customer in his own. "Will you be so very sad without the book? and why are you in such a hurry?"

"Well, sir, you see, I went to school one Sunday when Mrs. West, who takes care of me, was away; and teacher read about a good Shepherd who said those words; and about a beautiful place where he takes care of his children, and I want to go there. I'm so tired of being where there's nobody to care for a little girl like me, only Mrs. West, who says I'd be better dead than alive."

"But why are you in such a hurry?"

"My cough's getting so bad now, sir, and I want to know him before I die; it'ud be so strange to see him and not know him. Besides, if Mrs. West knew I was here she'd take away the six cents I've saved, running messages, to buy the book with, so I'm in a hurry to get served."

The bookseller wiped his glasses very vigorously this time, and lifting a book from off the shelf, he said: "I'll find the words you want, my little girl; come and listen."

Then he read the words of the loving Saviour (Luke xviii: 16)—get your Bibles and find the place, children—and told her how this good Shepherd had got a home all light and love prepared for those who love Him and serve Him.

"O how lovely!" was the half breathless exclamation of the eager little buyer. "And he says, 'Come.' I'll go to him. How long do you think it may be, sir, before I can see him?"

"Not long, perhaps," said the shopkeeper, turning away his head. "You shall keep the six cents, and come here every day, while I read to you some more out of this book."

Thanking him, the small child hurried away. To-morrow came, and another morrow, and many days passed. But the little girl never came to hear about Jesus again. One day a loud-voiced, untidy woman ran into the shop, saying: "Dixie's dead! Dixie's dead! She died rambling about a good Shepherd, and she said you was to have these six cents for the mission box at school. As I don't like to keep dead men's money, here it is," and she ran out of the shop. The cents went into the box, and when the story of Dixie was told, so many followed her example with their cents that at the end of the year "Dixie's cents," as they were called, were found to be sufficient to send out a missionary to China to bring stranger-sheep to the good Shepherd.

Wonderful Cures

performed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one in particular being that of a little daughter of a Church of England minister. The child was literally covered from head to foot with a red and exceedingly tronblesome rash, from which she had suffered for two or three years, in spite of the best medical treatment available. Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. I am sure, were he here to-day, he would testify in the strongest terms as to the merits of

WHAT THEY SAY.

The Mid-Continent :

Some day an evangelist will appear who doesn't know a single funny story, who tells no personal experiences, who allows infidels to do all the sneering at churches, but who just preaches Christ crucified. Multitudes are looking for that man.

United Presbyterian :

David met Goliath with a sling. It was an insignificant weapon, but it was the best he had. In fighting our spiritual foes, it is foolish to attempt to use the armor which other men may have used with success. If we use wisely the best we have, God's blessing will do the rest.

Talmage :

As a father in a garden stoops to kiss a child the shadow of his body falls upon it. So many of the dark misfortunes of our life are not God going away from us, but our Heavenly Father stooping down to give us the kiss of His infinite and everlasting love.

Brandywine flouring mills destroyed at Wilmington, Del., by fire last Saturday. Loss over $150,000.

A Greensboro Report.

Dear Sir and Brother :—Just one year ago I began to treat myself with the Electropoise.

I have not taken a single dose of medicine of any kind in that time. For several years I had poured down every abomination that doctors, druggists and old women suggested, in the vain hope of recovering my lost health, but I went down hill all the time, and was fast sinking into the grave.

For over thirty years, I suffered inexpressibly with torpid liver and indigestion ; that disappeared entirely as soon as I began the Electropoise treatment. I was so stiff and rheumatic that life was largely despaired of.

Diabetes had depleted my system, and an impoverished state of the blood, caused numerous carbuncles of most painful and long standing nature. I suffered in this condition tion for two years.

I fought the battle faithfully, and to-day I am a healthful, vigorous man ; probably as fully restored as it is possible for one my years (61), and constitutionally ruined by drugs to be.

A number of most notable cases of improved health, could be given among my personal friends and acquaintances.

I have not had on the 'poise now for two months, but "it is loaded" and ready for business.

Yours truly,

It is intended to aid the planter in selecting the Seeds best adapted for his needs and conditions and in getting from them the best possible results. It is not, therefore, highly colored in either sense ; and we have taken great care that nothing worthless be put in, or nothing worthy be left out. We invite a trial of our Seeds. We know them because we grow them. Every planter of Vegetables or Flowers ought to know about our three warrants ; our cash discounts ; and our gift of agricultural papers to purchasers of our Seeds. All of these are explained in the Catalogue, a copy of which can be yours for the asking.

THE RECHABITES.

In our city there is a lodge, called a tent, of temperance reformers and this is one of many in this country under the jurisdiction of a supreme lodge or high tent of Rechabites. The order is founded on the record and references of the thirty-fifth chapter of JEREMIAH. The people referred to in that chapter take their name from RECHAB a descendant of HOBAB the Kenite, father-in-law of MOSES. These Kenites had come in and settled in the territory of Judah. They come into prominence for obeying the command of their father, JONADAB, not to drink wine. To make sure of this for them they were not to build houses nor cultivate fields and vineyards. Thus their name and their distinction in history have different sources. They take their name from RECHAB which is said to mean a rider and may refer to their nomadic life or to the association of JONADAB with JEHU who rode swiftly. At any rate their ancestor was not the same as JONADAB, but one of his forefathers. When JEHU was zealous and rode swiftly in the destruction of BAAL, as a great reformer, he found JEHONADAB and, proving themselves in sympathy, took him into his chariot and into the plan to destroy all the promoters and priests of the worship of BAAL. They were confederate when the priests of BAAL were gathered and slain in the temple of their worship.

This JONADAB commanded his descendants, men women and children, not to drink wine, and gave other commands to secure this one more effectually. This is clear from the fact that in the beginning of the reign of JEHOIAKIM they went into the city and pitched their black tents in the open spaces of Jerusalem for fear of NEBUCHADNEZZAR—and from the further fact that in the room of the temple they refused to drink wine offered them because their father had commanded. This test was made as an illustration to rebuke Israel for their disobedience of GOD'S commands. The prophet JEREMIAH was instructed from the LORD to bring the Rechabites into the room of the Temple and set wine before them and invite them to drink before witnesses. Their refusal, which GOD foreknew, was made a text for the prophet to rebuke Israel. Israel had reasonable requirements of GOD'S law and these commandments were from the living GOD. They had not obeyed. The Rechabites had received commandments from their ancestor with arbitrary particulars, and their author was long since dead. They had kept these. The LORD instructed His prophet to make this comparison and administer this rebuke; and added a prophecy, as a promise, that this people should not want a man to stand before Him forever.

We see, from this a fact fully illustrated in general history and in our times, that men are more careful to obey commaandments imposed by their fellowmen, and are more zealous in institutions of human origin than are many nominal Christians to do promptly and thoroughly what CHRIST commands. MAHOMET, of no good character himself, gave laws to fanatical followers in a religious body which he founded. With his cry on their lips, his successors call hordes of devotees to war and to tyranny and plunder, while nominal Christians refuse to obey the peaceful command of CHRIST to give His gospel to every creature. The followers of the false prophet will risk starvation and disease while they breed pestilence and court death on man-imposed pilgrimages to places of obligation and sacredness, while nominal Christians will not go at CHRIST'S command to feed the hungry and to visit the fatherless and the widow in their affliction. At the call of the muezzin the Moslem worshipper, no matter where he is or who sees, will fall down and repeat the formulas of his man-made prayer while the nominal Christian neglects the call of CHRIST to turn aside and speak to the FATHER in the closet place of secret prayer or to have a spiritual feast of communion with CHRIST in the blessed help and guidance of the HOLY GHOST.

The seven times sworn member of the Jesuit order will obey without question or hesitation the commands of his superior, in this most perfect human organization of the world, though such commands have been to the dread of kings and a very pest that must often be expelled from civil governments, while the nominal follower of CHRIST will not do what the MASTER commands to further the interest of civil government and the common good if it is unpleasant to him personally. Monkish orders, man-made and in disobedience of the Scriptures they profess to teach and hold, by their traditions command to abstain from meats which GOD has given and other things sanctified by the Word of GOD and prayer and their members obey, while nominal Christians will take and delight in what GOD forbids as dangerous and deadly. Members of secret societies will obey the commands of their man-made fraternities that keep them from occasions and opportunities to worship and serve GOD All this is like the faithfulness of the Rechabites to the commands of their father. They are warnings against obeying man rather than GOD in any man-made order or institution. At the same time they show the help human institutions and laws may be and should be in obedience to GOD and for our own good and the service due our fellow-men.

The Rechabites are still in existence. In the sixty-first psalm the Septuagint translation refers to one of them and in the third chapter of Nehemiah as well as the second chapter of First Chronicles there are names of this people as found among the Levites. The Rechabites, in part at least, were adopted into the tribe of LEVI, and on that account probably could go into the Temple, and this may be part of the meaning of the phrase "a man to stand before the LORD." Their general preservation to the end of time is certainly another part of the meaning. This was so far a prophecy of JEREMIAH, and in its fulfillment to our day may well confirm our faith in the fulfillment of all prophecy and in the truth of GOD'S Word of which these prophecies are an important part. KITTO, the conservative author of several helpful volumes of notes of the Scriptures, after all considerations, allows that they still exist, supposed by many to be Jews, but, when challenged, claiming to be Arabs, still holding their descent from RECHAB and keeping the commandments of JONADAB their father. They dwell in tents all parts of the year they can do so, and they drink no wine. From the first century in connection with the martyrdom of JAMES the Just to the last half of our present century there are reliable references to this people. They are now said to be 60,000 in number around Mecca where they must have lived many centuries.

They are thus a fulfillment of prophecy and an illustration of the truth that wine is not necessary to health and prosperity. They are a standing rebuke to our modern travellers and the continental wine-bibbers, whom they imitate, in saying that travellers in Southern Europe and the East must use wine. This last has been disproven over and over again. We simply reassert in this connection the personal proof made by men of authority that it is not necessary or well to use wine in those countries. Bishop COLEMAN told me that once in Switzerland in the same hotel with a duke of Southern Europe, he took a walk before breakfast every morning which the genial duke proposed to share. The bishop took a drink from a clear spring by the road-side, saying this is my morning draught and the object of my morning walk. The duke was surprised that the bishop did not drink wine, did not find it necessary, and when from a first trial the duke drank water instead of wine he afterwards said he had often passed, but never had seen the spring, as he thought water was unhealthy.

HERE AND THERE.

OUR READERS HAVE IN OUR PRESENT issue a continuation of the interesting history of Union Theological Seminary by Prof. W. W. MOORE. We also tender them to-day an article on Church Life in Germany by Count A. BERNSTOFF, of Berlin. These articles will be found on our second page.

NOW HERE COMES REV. DR. LAMPMANN—the name has a German look—who stirred Newark Presbytery into unwonted liveliness last week by a resolution or two denouncing the Northern Assembly for its action in the recent BRIGGS case, and even going back to the days of ALBERT BARNES in the workings of his wrath. It does not appear that the Presbytery agreed with him and it is rumored that he will leave the Presbyterian Church.

So every now and then some one feels it incumbent upon him to rise and protest and this gives him the notoriety which seems indispensable to a first-class send off, or rather go off.

THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS ARE UNABLE to accommodate all of the children of Roman Catholic parents in Pittsburg, Pa., and so a number of nuns have applied for examination looking to appointment as teachers in the public schools. The State superintendent of schools has directed that there is no bar to the employment of these nuns if they apply in their family names and not as "sisters" belonging to any particular church organization. Of course they cannot be excluded from the privilege of teaching simply because they are Roman Catholics, but there is always a suspicion, certainly not ill founded, that Roman Catholic devotees such as "sisters" will employ their talents and their opportunities in proselytism, and indeed are expected by their superiors and directors of the hierarchy to do so.

IN NOTHING PERHAPS HAS GREATER progress been made within the past few years than in the science of hygiene and the practical work of sanitation, and the debt of gratitude the public owe to those, mainly physicians, of course, who interest themselves to the extent of great personal sacrifice of time and talent and means can never be adequately repaid. North Carolina especially is very largely indebted to her noble sons of the medical fraternity for their disinterested and enlightened zeal in the direction indicated.

IN THE POPULOUS CITIES OF OUR LAND especially in the marts of trade and in the provision markets, the Boards of Health looking after the adulteration of food are doing a wondrous amount of good and the laws to make efficient their efforts are specially wise and beneficent. A new principle or method of adulteration has of late been in vogue; the adulteration of molasses, the pure product of the cane, with poisonous chemicals to give it a brighter and more attractive look. It seems that diabolism has no limits to its exercise when impelled by the greed of gain. It is gratifying to know that the Board of Health of New Orleans will spare no pains to bring to grief those who in utter recklessness of human health, or even human life, engage in the vicious practice indicated above.

The man who does not find heaven in this world will stand a poor chance of ever finding it in any other.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE NEGRO—CO-OPERATION WITH THE NORTHERN CHURCH.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

"Our Southern Church," says a late issue of N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, "has not shown any great interest in the work of Negro Evangelization, and those having it in immediate charge seem to despair of ever bringing them up to the full measure of duty."

We offer two suggestions which, it may be, will help to account for this want of interest in Negro Evangelization.

1. The multiplicity of causes which appeal to the sympathy and aid of our Church, and which tend to overshadow and exclude work in behalf of the colored race.

2. The religious isolation of the negro.

By a law of nature we feel most interest in those who are most nearly related to us, and are one with us. The different evangelical churches work, each in its own sphere, and feel not that interest in the members, enterprises and aims of another denomination that is felt for the members, enterprises and objects which are peculiarly their own. This feeling extends even to the work which the several churches do among the heathen abroad.

There is just as truly a line of separation between Presbyterians and the negro churches as there is between Presbyterians and Methodists, Baptists and other evangelical churches, and socially even more so. Accepting this state of isolation of the negro as a fact which we cannot reverse, nor control, is there a remedy for the apathy or want of interest in his evangelization?

If there is, it does not strike us that it is in co-operation with the Northern Church; nor in turning over, as has been suggested, "the management of the Colored Evangelistic work entirely to the Northern Church." Were this suggestion adopted and executed, the natural result would be a decreased and decreasing interest in the work, and it would be hard for the General Assembly to compel contributions to a work which to us would be practically dead.

If, on the other hand, we agree to cooperate with the Northern Church, on the basis which has been proposed, we do not see that anything will be gained. Because, while we should retain a joint control of the work, it will be as if we had none, by virtue of the overwhelming majority in the Board. Our people would not contentedly submit to this arrangement, or, at least, ought not to, unless they became so completely indifferent to the work as not to care whether it survived or perished. The natural result of the proposed co-operation would be sooner or later, the death of the work, in so far as we are concerned. How many contributions and how much would our people give to the work, if assured that their money would be disbursed at the sovereign will and pleasure of the majority? If little is given now, less would be given then.

Has the Southern Presbyterian Church a divinely appointed mission to evangelize the negro race? If so, and they insist on their present attitude of isolation and independency of our Church, with their own churches and ministers, schools and teachers, then, so far as appears to us, we must evangelize them through the medium of ministers and teachers, trained and equipped by means of our providing.

This then brings us right to the door of the Tuscaloosa Institute, or similar institutions, as the means which we must utilize: and, therefore, the support, or abandonment of these means signifies the life or death of Negro Evangelization by the Southern Church. If the work is to prosper, our ministers and people must put their shoulders to the wheel, and by united effort sustain and encourage those who, amid so much that is adverse, are struggling for the good of the negro race in our Southern land.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by
Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Nuggets From Many Mines.

To know the facts of modern missions is the necessary condition of intelligent interest.

Knowledge does not always kindle zeal, but zeal is according to knowledge, and will not exist without it.

A fire may be fanned with wind, but it must be fed with fuel; and facts are the fuel of this sacred flame.

The chief end for which the Church ought to exist, for which individual members ought to live, is the evangelization of the world.

An evangelistic or missionary church is a spiritually flourishing church. A church which drops the evangelistic or missionary character speedily lapses into superannuation and decay.

That plea, "There are heathen enough at home; let us convert them before we go to China," sounds more cheap and shameful every day. It makes the imperfections of unchristianity, at home, an excuse for not doing our work abroad. It is a plea for exemption and indulgence on the ground of our own neglect and sin. It is like the murderer of his father asking the judge have pity on his orphanhood. Even those who make such a plea must feel how unheroic it is.

India has fifty millions of Mohamedans—a larger number than are found in the Turkish Empire, and far more free to embrace Christianity. Who will go to work for them?

The women of India must be evangelized by women. Ten times the present number of such workers could not overtake the task.

Ministers should be students of missions, authorities on missions and leaders in missions. Christianity is missionary, progressive, world embracing. If it ceased to be missionary it would cease to exist.

Reducing missionary contributions is drawing missionary blood.

The Church sends to-day the blessing of an enlarged heart, a tenderer consciousness of her duty to the unenlightened and perishing, a more unselfish devotion to the Master's service, a more winsome sympathy with those who suffer, a more self-denying readiness to help others to a better life.

"I am a convert to missions through seeing missions and the need for them. Some years ago I took no interest whatever, in the condition of the heathen. I had heard much ridicule cast upon Christian missions, and perhaps had imbibed some of the unhallowed spirit; but the missionaries by their lives and character, and by the work they are doing, wherever I have seen them, have produced in my mind such a change and such an enthusiasm, in favor of Christian missions, that I cannot go anywhere without speaking of them and trying to influence, in their favor, others who may be as indifferent as I was before I went among heathen countries."

This is the personal testimony of Isabella Bird Bishop, who has done so much already, and is still devoting her wealth, her time and her brilliant literary gifts to this work, in all its branches.

Yet she is one of "the prisoners of Christ"—having been all her life a suffering feeble woman. Her will has triumphed over all difficulties until she has become not only a brilliant writer, but one of the most renowned travellers!

The Missionary Review for February gives the following facts: Shanghai, the chief port of China, has the largest Sunday-schools in that country and the largest mission press of the world. In the latter are seven hand-pressess and two machine-presses. The demand for type made a type foundry necessary. There are fonts for English, Greek, Korean, Japanese, the literary, Mandarin, and Mongolian dialects, and five local dialects. Electrotyping and stereotyping are done, and over 25,000,000 pages are issued annually.

SPIN CHEERFULLY.

Spin cheerfully,
Not tearfully,
Though wearily you plod;
Spin carefully,
Spin prayerfully,
But leave the thread with God.

The shuttles of His purpose move
To carry out His own design.
Seek not too soon to disapprove
His work, nor yet assign
Dark motives, when with silent dread
You view each sombre fold;
For lo, within each darker thread
There twines a thread of gold.

Spin cheerfully,
Not tearfully,
He knows the way you plod;
Spin carefully,
Spin prayerfully,
But leave the thread with God.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

IV. A DECADE OF ALTERNATING PROGRESS AND DECLINE, 1851–1861.

Dr. Graham died in 1851 and Dr. Sampson in 1854. In 1853 the Rev. Robert L. Dabney, D. D., was elected Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity, and in 1854 the Rev. Benjamin M. Smith, D. D., was elected Professor of Oriental Literature. The increase in the number of students which had set in during 1852 continued still 1854–'55, when there were twenty-eight; then for several years it fell off, until 1858'–59, when there were only eighteen. But in the next year it went up with a bound to twice that number, and in 1860–'61 there were thirty-nine, about the same number that had been enrolled in the last year of Dr. Rice's life, thirty years before. But at no time before the war, so far as records show, were there as many as forty students in attendance during a single year. That is to say, the largest attendance in any year before the war was but little more than half as large as the present annual average attendance. Of the one thousand candidates who have been trained in this Seminary only about one third were enrolled during the first half of the seventy years which we celebrate, the remaining two-thirds having been enrolled since 1860.

In 1856, the Board, having completed the endowment of a fourth professorship, that of Biblical Literature and the Interpretation of the New Testament, elected to this chair the Rev. Wm. J. Hoge, pastor of the Westminster Church, Baltimore. Dr. Hoge occupied this position for three years, from 1856 to 1859, when he resigned it to accept a co-pastorate with Dr. Spring in New York City, leaving behind him a memory like the fragrance of costly oil.

In 1860 the Rev. Thomas E. Peck, pastor of the Central church, Baltimore, was elected Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity, Dr. Dabney having been made Adjunct Professor of Systematic Theology.

The endowment at this time amounted to about $100,000, and the Library contained about 5,000 volumes. In 1856 the institution had acquired the Marshall property—(Since known variously as the "Thornton House," the "Mess Hall," and "Westminster Hall," its present name)—at a cost of $5,500; and in 1858 the residence in the West End, recently occupied by the late Dr. Peck, was erected, with its outhouses, at a cost of $6,650.

V. DURING THE WAR, 1861–1865.

The prosperity of the institution was rudely checked by the great conflict into which the country was plunged in 1861. In the autumn of that year the number of students fell to 22, and in the following Spring the Faculty's report states "Of the students enrolled, the Board will find present at this time only the following, viz.: Messrs. Wharey, Barnett, Flournoy, and T. M. McCorkle, all of whom were in the service of their country, were made prisoners at Rich Mountain last summer, were released on parole, and have not been exchanged. The remainder left the Seminary in February and March under the urgent call of the government for more troops, and are all, or nearly all, now in the army."

At the same meeting, May 12th, 1862, it was "Resolved, that under the circumstances of deep solemnity now surrounding our country, the Board of Directors will engage in special prayer to Almighty God, that it may please Him to spread over our cause His sheltering wing, that He may have under His holy keeping the beloved professor and brethren who have gone from the Seminary to the army, and, in His own good time and way, vindicate our righteous cause and bless us with an enduring peace." And the Board then proceeded to observe a season of prayer.

But the days grew darker instead of brighter. On the 30th of Augut, 1862, Hugh A. White, one of the most promising students in the institution, was killed in battle at the head of his company. In 1863 only three members of the Board attended the annual meeting. On the 21st of July, during the discussion of a resolution to transfer the Seminary to the General Assembly, "the Board on motion took a recess of half an hour to unite with the Christians of the neighborhood in their daily prayer meeting for our country." There was no meeting of the Board in the Spring of 1864. In December of that year, however, the Board held a special meeting for the purpose of making some provision for the sustentation of the professors and "taking some steps to preserve the buildings of the Seminary from the injury inevitably resulting from their continuing vacant, and with a view to do all in the power of the Board to relieve the wants of those made houseless by the war." The records of this meeting contain various indications of the distress of the time. For example, "It was resolved that for the purpose of making comfortable provision for the support of Rev. Dr. Wilson, and also of Mrs. Dr. Rice, our Agent, Rev. S. J. Price, is hereby instructed to make special and immediate application to such persons as he may deem advisable, for donations of money and provisions; and that Messrs. C. C. Read, C. C. Locket, and F. N. Watkins, of Farmville, be a committee to receive and make distribution of these donations, to such extent as may be deemed necessary to their proper maintenance."

"It was resolved that until farther ordered, the professors shall be left to their own discretion as to any engagements for labour elsewhere, which they may deem it expedient to make, provided they make such arrangements as they may agree upon among themselves, for the instruction of any students who may come to the institution."

"It was resolved that the Agent, Rev. S. J. Price be allowed a salary of three thousand dollars($3,000) per annum, and that he be allowed to collect the same if he desires it, in provisions." It is hardly necessary to remind the reader of the fact that this salary was not so munificent as those figures would at first suggest, as not long after men were known to pay $500 for a pair of boots.

In 1864–'65 only one student attended, Mr. Wm. L. Bailey, now Stated Supply of Oxford church, Lexington Presbytery.

General Lee surrendered at Appomattox on the 9th of April, 1865. Dr. Peck, in his report that year as Intendant, informs the Board that the United States soldiers visited the premises on the 7th and 11th of April, but did no damage to the property of the institution.

On Monday, May 8th, 1865, "at the hour appointed by the constitution, divine service was celebrated in the Chapel of Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward. The sermon was preached by the Rev. William Henry Foote, D. D., First Vice-President of the Board of Directors [and the only member present] from Isaiah 35:10: "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Then the exercises of the Seminary were adjourned to recommence on the second Thursday in September, 1865. [Dr. Foote died in November 1869, after a service of more than thirty years as a Director.]

CHURCH LIFE AND WORK IN GERMANY.

BY COUNT A. BERNSTORFF, OF BERLIN.

Germany does not generally enjoy the reputation of a religious country, but though there is, alas, some truth in this judgment, there is undoubtedly more religious life than comes superficially to the notice of the traveler, or than might be inferred from the life of the emigrants who when leaving their homes too often wish to throw off all religious restraint. Germany is after all the birthland of the reformation, and this fact has impressed a stamp on our country which is still felt now after three and one-half centuries. The Luther jubilee in 1883 and the reopening of the newly restored church at Wittenberg on the 31st of October, 1892, were received with general popular enthusiasm, and show how deep a root Luther's Reformation has in our country. What we value in the German reformation is its purely spontaneous and spiritual character. For Luther it was just simply the struggle of conscience convinced of sin and not finding peace in the acts prescribed by the Church of Rome. The doctrines of the Reformation soon spread through Germany, but a hard contest had to be fought against Pope and Emperor, which only terminated in 1648 with the peace of Westphalia, when a thirty years' war had devastated our country and impoverished it for centuries. This threw the Church of the Reformation into the hands of those German princes who had espoused the cause of the new faith, and gave it the character of a State-church up to the present day. This is undeniably a source of weakness for our churches, it brought a foreign—a political—element into a movement which originally was purely religious. If the heathen Germans were forced into baptism by the sword of Charlemagne, the Christian Germans of the 16th and 17th centuries were at least accustomed to be led by their sovereigns in religious matters. Therefore the voluntary principle has not made its way so quickly as in England and the United States. Another danger was that the Lutheran clergy were always rather inclined to watch over "pure doctrine," and therefore to polemise severely on dogmatical questions. This was especially the case in the 17th century, and we cannot wonder that under these circumstances the infidel movement of the 18th century swept away much of the old religious traditions. Nevertheless a deep religious feeling remained in the people, and the "pietist" movement found many adherents. August Hermann Freeke with his practical faith, and Spener with his small gatherings (conventicles) for the deepening of religious life, are too well known to need further mention here. They are only quoted as representatives of a movement which has impressed a character on religious life in Germany. They were for Germany what John Wesley was for England, with the one exception, that the German movement was less aggressive. The common features were that all stress was laid on life, and not on doctrine. Orthodox divines are apt to look down on the pietist movement; they say that the want of a clear doctrinal position made it unable to resist the attack of rationalism. It is true that toward the end of the last century the cold blast of rationalism blew all over Germany and invaded the pulpits. It was the time when nothing but dry moral sermons were preached. But it is decidedly due to the pietist movement that a great amount of true religious life remained in the people even during the time when no real spiritual food was offered from the pulpits. During the wars of liberty, when Germany rose up to throw of the yoke of Napoleon I., the religious revival began, which has continued up to the present day. Though the State-church system is an element of weakness, it cannot be denied that it has also some advantages. It gives the church a voice in public life, it enables the Church to throw a net over the whole population, it makes it possible to generalize religious instructions; where all this is done without spiritual life, as a mere form, it has little or no value, but when life comes into these institutions it turns the whole country into a mission field, subject to religious influence. There is no house in a town and no hamlet in the country which does not belong to a parish and can claim the help of the pastor. All over the country the Church spires point to heaven and are a mute but eloquent testimony that man lives not upon bread alone. It must also be recognized that the State has paid great attention to the scientific education of the clergy. As our pastors have to pass through our higher schools and then to attend a university, they stand on an intellectual level with the best educated classes. But is our Church living? Can we speak of Church life? Life very truly comes before work; where there is no life, work itself is dead. Yes, thank God, we have a living Church within the Church.

In the following observations I shall limit myself to the Protestant national churches. Almost one-third of Germany is Catholic, and this disruption of the nation is a national calamity, but spiritually the emulation between the two rival churches also contributes to increase religious life. The Catholic Church is perhaps nowhere so flourishing as in Germany, and the Protestant Church asserts itself most in those parts of our country where it is a minority among a Catholic majority. The dissenting bodies are not numerous in Germany, and their influence on the life of the nation is very small. The national or State churches are divided into a number of churches, and according to the political frontiers in Germany, and even where these frontiers were pulled down in 1866, the church barriers have not been taken away. The Church in Hanover is for instance very much afraid of her neighbor in the old Prussian provinces, because there the Lutherans and the Calvinists have been molded into one united "Evangelical" Church, a procedure which our Hanoverian friends don't wish to see repeated in their province. But notwithstanding these barriers and petty differences the same spirit prevails very nearly in all the Protestant churches of Germany. The type is decidedly Lutheran, though more or less strong. For more than three centuries the work of these Churches has almost exclusively consisted in preaching. The laity took little or not part, they were nothing more than the congregations, to which the sermons were addressed. If this preaching came from men filled with the Holy Ghost, if Christ was truly preached, then of course blessings followed and souls were brought to God. Where this was not the case it was no more than doing mechanically the daily round of church business, and dead congregations were the necessary consequence. Fortunately we have at the present moment a large number of clergymen who have experienced the grace of God in their hearts and who give the message they have received from God. Certainly all pastors are not so, but where has that ever been the case? We have also infidel preachers, and such as are orthodox but spiritually dead—but the true preachers of Christ are not wanting. The moral and intellectual standard of the clergy is a high one. The students of theology receive their education at the universities, though the latter are purely State institutions, and our churches have no influence whatever in the training of their future ministers; it is after all at these universities that the great religious problems, as far as theory is concerned, are fought out. In theological science our nation has always been ahead of others, and though often our professors teach things which are not a good preparation for the future ministry, nobody would really curtail the liberty of science. The students have to wind themselves through the labyrinth of different theological views, and those who are spiritually alive have generally received their impression in practical life. The old feud between orthodox and liberal theology goes on—and the contest is even very hot at present—it is even often carried into the congregations, for instance by raising objections against the use of the Apostles Creed in divine service. The greatest fame at present accompanies the Rietschel theology, which proves very attractive to young men, and enrols many of our young ministers. It is not only difficult to understand this school, it is still more difficult to describe it in a few words. It is superior to the old rationalism, and is defended by many able men, but it cannot claim to stand on the Bible. The supernatural birth of Christ and His eternal pre-existence are not admitted, His resurrection is considered indifferent—the atonement finds no room. Many people think this new theology will bring another era of rationalism over Germany, but for that the real life in our churches is already too strong.

The practical mission work done in our churches is not officially the work of the Church. Foreign and Home Missions are all in the hands of free agencies. All efforts to bring them into organic connection with the churches have hitherto failed—we must say fortunately. Liberty is essential in these things. Nevertheless these works can truly be called works of the Church, because they are in the hands of the living members of the churches, who though anxious to maintain their liberty from interference of State-appointed consistories, yet mean to work for their Church. A number of foreign missionary societies are spreading the Gospel in China, India, South and East Africa, etc., and although the annual contributions toward Foreign Mission work are not so large as in the United States and in England, yet an increasing interest is felt, and the new colonial policy of Germany will help a little in this line. The Home Mission work is very various. Men like Fleidner and Wichern need hardly be mentioned, they are sufficiently known all over the world. The former enabled young women to dedicate themselves entirely to the service of the Lord in hospitals, infant classes, parish work. The existing number of deaconesses. institutions is not sufficient to supply the demand. The latter reminded Christians of their duty to reclaim the lost members of the churches and of society.

He gave the impulse to train single men, generally out of the working classes, into a brotherhood, which provides workers for the reformatories, wanderers homes, city missions, and similar institutions. The very fact that these men are taken out of the people, makes them welcome in the houses of the poor. The characteristic features of these first efforts of Home Missions were that they chiefly aimed at regaining the morally lost and at training a number of men and women to do this work. But one element was missing which we have at present. The general duty of every Christian to work for the Master is now being more recognized, and also the necessity of bringing the Gospel to the nominally Christian, but in truth quite indifferent masses. The Sunday-schools, brought here in 1863 by the indefatigable W. A. Woodruff from Brooklyn, and which are now spreading rapidly, gave the first impulse in that line. The Young Men's Christian Associations, started afresh recently on the American principle, have assisted in the same direction. The general secretaries are laymen, and the work done in the Association is practically mission work—conversiou of the young men to Christ, the avowed aim. Direct evangelistic work is also done now. At the impulse given by the late Professor Christlieb at Bonn, a training school for evangelists has been started, and a number of young men this Johanneum at Barmen every year to enter into fruitful work. The introduction of a synodal constitution in our churches has also done something to take from our churches the character they have had too long of being pastors-churches. But the chief help came from the fact that a number of devoted laymen are now boldly taking up the work for Christ. Our churches have many difficulties to contend with—the increasing materialism and atheism in the masses, the indifference in the middle classes, the want of sufficient independence from the State. Yet there is no reason to look with alarm into the future. The Lord has his faithful servants, every clergyman in Germany; vital and true religion increases, and the unavoidable struggle will only help to develop the spiritual power of the churches.

WALTER CLARK

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.

ATLANTIC ELECTROPOISE COMPANY,
728 Eleventh Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Raleigh. N. C., January 26th, 1894.

Dear Sir :—We have found the Electropoise very valuable—especially for children. I got one last May and I am sure I have saved three times its cost already in doctor's and drug store bills. From my experience with it, and observation, I can safely recommend it.

Yours truly,

WALTER CLARK.

OVER AGAINST BETHANY.

Droop the weary eyelids down,
Quails the flesh when clouds are high?
Let us climb yon mountain's crown
Over against Bethany.

Should we plead as once before—
If perchance the Lord will tell—
Wilt Thou at this time restore
The kingdom unto Israel?

Toil thy sowers, night and day,
Satan tempts, and men deride;
Foes unseen frequent our way—
Help us, O Thou crucified!

Hush! His answer cleaves the cloud—
Not for you to know the hour.
But—and love the gift allowed—
Ye shall prove the Spirit's power.

Weary not, but send my name
To the world's remotest bound;
Prove the baptism of flame—
As the Christ by faith is found.

Gather sheaves, while high and clear,
Manhood's sun is in your sky;
Comes thy hour of sun-down near—
Night shall find a Bethany.

Oft the soul in clouds of praise,
Soars in bliss to fields of light;
Heaven-given peace the heart can raise
Far from dreams of earthly night.

Comes the day when grief shall end;
Joyous soul from earth bonds free,
Death hath lent thee wings—ascend!
Thou hast found thy Bethany.

"LIVING LINKS."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

One of the most striking chapters in Dr. Pierson's great book "The Crisis of Missions," is headed: "Living Links," and, lest there should be any one so unfortunate as not to have read it, we will briefly state that his idea is that a great lack in our churches is the lack of what he calls "living links" between them and the foreign field—that is any direct communication and contact with a definite field. This contact he believes necessary to the increase both of knowledge and zeal.

He says it is well to be so disinterested as to pour liberally into the mission treasury without tracing these streams to their terminus. It is well to be disinterested, but the danger just now is of being uninterested, and he goes on to say: "We are deeply persuaded that such living links between the home churches and the mission fields are means of grace."

To this chapter, and these suggestive words of Dr. Pierson, one missionary society, at least, is indebted for a plan which it has taken as a part of this year's program of work, and with the earnest prayer that God may make it indeed a means of grace to the members.

The plan is this: That a committee of correspondence be formed to be called "The Living Links" whose duty it shall be to correspond with some one at each of our mission stations. And by skillful arrangements—selecting several correspondents where there are a large number of missionaries, as in China, Japan, and South America, and by remembering to write ahead of time, and expressly to state the object of the letters, to be able to read a letter from each mission, as the month comes round for the study of that part of the field.

In this way they hope, not only to show their living personal interest in their brave sisters who are toiling in the far-off portions of God's vineyard, but to become better informed as to the work, and so to be able to pray and to give more intelligently.

The committee must necessarily be large, not only because we have now so many mission stations, but because, the larger the corresponding committee, the more links will there be in that golden chain of prayerful interest which is to bind us together in Christ.

The object of this article is simply to carry out the apostle's injunction, "to consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works."

Of course it remains to be seen how successfully the plan may be carried out, but one cannot doubt that it will touch a responsive chord in the hearts of those, who, while thousands of miles away, will be cheered by the knowledge that they are being thought of and prayed for as missionaries in the missionary meetings at home.

With God's blessing they will be "living links" indeed.

SUGGESTIONS TO SYNODICAL AND PRESBYTERIAL CHAIRMEN OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

A wide-awake Synodical Agent of Foreign Missions makes the following suggestions, which seem to us to be eminently practical and which we commend to the careful consideration of all our Synodical and Presbyterial Chairmen. Writing to the Secretary he says:

"I am going to urge our Presbyterial Chairmen of Foreign Missions to do two things:

1st. "To have an elder appointed in each session as Chairman of the Sessional Committee of Foreign Missions, through whom the Chairman of the Presbyterial Committee can get into immediate contact with the congregation; and to get him, if the congregation be large, to appoint sub-chairmen in the several wards or neighborhoods. In this way the desires of the Central Committee at Nashville can be impressed on the thousand integers that make up the Church."

2nd. "To tabulate a number of statistics, (1.) Of the Synods and their relative contributions on the average per member basis. (2.) The same as to the several Presbyteries in the Synods. (3.) The same as to the respective churches in their own Presbyteries."

The statistics are to be sent to the Chairman of each Sessional Committee of Foreign Missions, the general result of them being stated as follows: "Synod of———stands fifth in the matter of average contributions per member; your Presbytery ranks third in the Synod: your church ranks fourth in the Presbytery, having given only so much per member to Foreign Missions last year. Let us all pull up and do better."

By this array of figures each church will see how all are doing and itself in particular. "It will require labor on the part of the Presbyterial Chairman; but labor well directed and in the noblest of causes."

If the chairmen will adopt this scheme, or some similar one, and work it up thoroughly in all the Synods and Presbyteries between now and the first of May they will help us thereby to solve some problems that now confront us.

S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

Should Sermons be Short?

Yes. Certainly. All sermons ought to be short. But the question arises, what is meant by shortness as applied to a sermon? We once heard a sermon that was exactly ten minutes long, and the first criticism that sprang to our lips was that it was exactly ten minutes too long. The sermon was not worth calling a sermon at all, and it would have been much better both for preachers and hearer if it had never been put in manuscript and never been delivered in public. On the other hand, we once heard from a great preacher a sermon that was within five minutes of two hours in length, and it appeared all too short. It was a splendid outpouring of a human spirit on one of the grandest themes of Scripture, and the whole time was well occupied. The fact is that the questions of the length of a sermon is one that cannot possibly be settled by the hands of a clock. So it is with every part of the service of public worship. Take the praise portion. There is a sort of singing that is tender and artistic and you cannot get too much of it. A congregation will gladly have at least four items of such praise in one diet of worship, and each of the four prolonged and occupying a good deal of time. On the other hand, there is singing that is neither tender nor artistic, and by the consent of all the less we have of it the better. Two or three verses of a psalm rendered in the latter style appear to suffice. Again, the hands of a clock do not truly give a solution of the question of length. The same remark applies to prayers in public worship. Five minutes, we are told, is about the maximum time that should be allotted to prayer. Quite too long for some prayers, we affirm; but also quite too short for others. Dr. Dykes, of London, often occupied twenty minutes in one of his sanctuary prayers; but no worshipper of God ever thought that there was one sentence too much, or that the grand act of devotion should have been curtailed one second. The same remarks apply to reading. Some men read in such a way that the longest chapter looks short; others in such a way that the very shortest looks long. Sermons belong to the very same category. A good sermon is never too long; a bad sermon is never too short. Before we can speak of quantity we must look to quality.

But the popular cry nowadays is—"Give us short sermons!" There is in this cry an element of force and sincerity. There is also in it an element of foolishness. It is worth while to disentangle the sincerity from the folly. Take the folly first. There are in all our congregations a certain proportion of people who do not care for the Gospel at all. Why they come to church is just one of those secrets of human nature which we will not attempt to probe. They clamour for ritual. The music must be up to date. The prayers must be brief, varied, and more or less liturgical. The Scirptures must be read elocutionally, and the sermons must be neat, crisp, elegant, and, above all things, they must not exceed twenty-five minutes in delivery. The people cry out for short sermons. Now, if any unfortunate minister yields to this clamour he will pay for it dearly. First of all, he will cool off all the devout people of his congregation; and then, secondly, when the art-folk get their way, their next cry will be for more ritual and still shorter sermons. The Gospel will soon be rooted out altogether, and the pulpit will shrivel into one attenuated lean and intolerable impertinence, which will exist only on sufferance, and be retained only as a weekly tribute to respectability. That is the element of folly which we find in the popular cry for short sermons. But there is also an element of sincerity. The fact is that in our current life everything must now be done swiftly, rapidly, and with haste. All the week round it is so. The whole work of the world is now done on the principle—"Short, sharp, decisive." When we go into the sanctuary we expect something at least of the same spirit. Audiences are far more on the alert than they used to be. So are preachers, or so they ought to be. The whole service now lasts at the very most an hour and a half, instead of two hours and a half as it used to do. An earnest minister can hardly hold out beyond thirty-minutes at white heat. An earnest congregation can hardly listen longer. It is a swift business, and if the congregation and preacher go into it with their might, both will be quite exhausted in that time. In more leisurely times all parties moved more slowly. But now the feeling is that the King's business requireth haste. The widespread desire amongst good people for short sermons is natural and inevitable. All ministers who are not asleep during the week will respond to it and are responding to it. They diligently prepare for it. They prune down words and ideas; they take just as much doctrine as can be clearly presented in that brief compass of time, and edge their exhortations in such a way that they are able to reach heart and conscience in direct methods, and perhaps quite as much of Gospel instruction finds its way into the hearts of the hearers in the short as in a past generation found its way in a long sermon. This is the element of sincerity which enters into the general cry for short sermons.

It is often quite overlooked that the sermon is quite as much the work of the congregation as of the minister. The true preacher prepares for the pulpit every idea that he intends to utter. But when he goes into the pulpit it is his audience that kindles everything into a fire. Given a dull, dead, drowsy audience, and there can be no first-rate preaching. A great preacher will throw fire upon his audience, and arouse them first. But inferior preachers succumb, and they are compelled to go through the sermon without the fire at all. Given, on the other hand, an eager, spiritual audience, and already the sermon is half preached. Like a piece of coal thrown into a fiery furnace, it is turned into flame in an instant, and the preacher becomes eloquent in spite of himself. It is in this white heat that sermons are never too long. It is not the hands of the clock that declare the length, it is the living spirit of preacher and congregation. We believe that as a general rule both preachers and people should aim at brevity. Both ought to prepare themselves for it before they go to the sanctuary. The one should seek the tongue of fire, which is as the pen of a ready writer; and the other should seek the ear that is swift to hear. The result will be a mutual delight and satisfaction.—Belfast Witness.

This Life Not All.

Never mind how hard it may be to climb. The slope of the valley of trouble is ever upward. Never mind how dark the shadow of death which stretches athwart it. If there were no sun there would be no shadow; presently the sun will be right overhead, and there will be no shadow then. Never mind how black it may look ahead, or how frowning the rock. From between their narrowest gorge you may see, if you will, the guide whom God has sent you, and that Angel of Hope will light up all the darkness, and will only fade away when she is lost in the seven-fold brightness of that upper land, whereof our "God himself is Sun and Moon"—the true Canaan, to whose everlasting mountains the steep way of life has climbed at last through valleys of trouble, and of weeping, and of the shadow of death.—Alexander Maclaren, D. D.

"Slow to Speak."

Scarcely do you hear the ungracious word before your more ungracious answer rushes to your lips. And does it pause there? Do the faithful lips keep the door shut and prevent its egress? Probably not. You must "answer again." And your answer provokes a rejoinder. Every word on either side is a fresh fagot for the flames. And presently, where there were only a few embers, not enough to light a candle, there is now a conflagration. Peradventure it may die down as suddenly as it sprang up; but it is more likely to last, and as it burns on it may spread into a huge prairie fire. And all this because you would not heed the caution—be "slow to speak." This is one of the various rules the Scriptures give us for avoiding anger and strife, none of which can be of any radical and permanent efficacy unless the grand motor, the heart, be brought under the power of Divine love.—H. Boardman.

What One Wants to Hear.

When I go to the house of God I do not want amusement. I want the doctrine which is according to godliness. I want to hear of the remedy against the harassing of my guilt and the disorders of my affections. I want to be led from weariness and disappointment to that goodness that filleth the hungry soul. I want to have a light on the mystery of providence, to be taught how the judgments of the Lord are right; how I may pass the time of my sojourning here in fear, and close it in peace. Tell me of that Lord Jesus, "who his own self bears our sins in his own body on the tree." Tell me of his intercession for the transgressors as their "Advocate with the Father." Tell me of his chastenings, their necessity, their use. Tell me of his presence, and sympathy, and love. Tell me of the virtues as growing out of his cross, and nurtured by his grace. Tell me the glory reflected on his name by the obedience of faith. Tell me of vanquished death, of the purified grave, of a blessed resurrection, of life everlasting, and my bosom warms. This is Gospel; these are glad tidings to me as a sufferer. because glad to me as a sinner.—Dr. Mason.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Interesting Services in the Presbyterian Church, Greenwood :—More than one year ago South Carolina Presbytery took our pastor from us, and put him inlo the evangelistic field. It was only a few months ago that the congregation came together on a man suitable for the place. Rev. J. E. Fogartie was elected the pastor and the installation service was appointed for the first Sabbath in February. A commission had been appointed to conduct the services. Rev. J. L. Wilson was to preach the sermon, Rev. J. O. Lindsay to charge the pastor, and Rev. W. T. Matthews to charge the people.

It was found on Sabbath morning that Mr. Matthews was the only member of the commission present. While we regretted at the outset that the commission was not complete, yet the services were unique ; all we could wish them to be. The sermon and the charge to the pastor were of a high order, appropriate and impressive. But the charge to the people was extremely striking and original, so much so that efforts have been made to secure its publication.

Every pastor and every congregation of every denomination ought to read it. It was a striking coincidence that the former pastor who had found it so hard to yield to the wishes of his Presbytery, to give up his church and undertake the evangelistic work, should be called upon to induct his successor into the pastorate of a congregation, many of whom had entertained the hope that the way might be opened up for his return as their pastor. Both he and his former people were touched by the scene. One criticism was made on the services, instead of making for his successor the wish that his ministry might be more greatly blessed than his own had been, it was said "he should have said, as greatly blessed. This is our wish and prayer for our new pastor, for we know of no man who is more worthy to wear the mantle of the Rev. W. T. Matthews.

W. J. Corbett, a Roman Catholic priest, sued his Bishop Thomas Bonacum in the Nebraska court for libel in suspending the priest and giving publicity to the act. The charge was dismissed on the following grounds: First—That there is no evidence to prove that the alleged libel was ever published in Lancaster county. Second—There is no evidence to prove that the word "suspended" is libelous. Third—That the ecclesiastic law introduced by the State shows that the Bishop had authority to suspend Father Corbett. That the said article and its publication was privileged. The prosecutor is now in trouble.

In St. Paul's church, Brooklyn, the oldest Roman Catholic church in Brooklyn last week the pastor was attacked by the priest, an Irishman who was to assist him in celebrating the mass. The attacking priest was a stalwart man and knocked the other about fearfully. For awhile the spectators were dazed, but at last they rushed in to the rescue. The trouble was entirely unsuspected by the pastor. His assailiant was probably out of his mind from some cause ; possibly insane from brooding over what at least he conceived to be a conspiracy between the pastor and the bishop, of which he was to be the victim.

Market Square Presbyterian church, Harrisburg, Pa., on 11th inst,, elebrated its centennial anniversary. Exercises continue all this week. The pastor has several preachers of eminence assisting him.

It is proposed to subdivide the existing Episcopal dioceses of the State of New York so as to make one, two or even more of them. The late Federal Council as reported by a correspondent of the Baltimore Sun agreed to Bishop Potter's proposition "that a committee be appointed, consisting of the bishops of the State, five presbyters and five laymen, to consider the expediency and practicability or such a redistribution of the territory of the State of New York into six or more dioceses as shall effectually promote the work of the Church and the continued usefulness and efficiency of its episcopate."

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, WILMINGTON, N. C.

It is a little over a year since the congregation of this church decided to remove the old lecture room, and replace it with a more commodious structure. They had in hand a fund provided by the will of the late George Chadbourn, an elder of the church for over thirty years, to be used in the erection of a Hall for the social use of the young people, as a memorial of his wife, Mrs. Abbie E. Chadbourn. The congregation resolved to combine with this Hall a new Sunday-school building to occupy the lower story, and raised a subscription for this purpose. A description of the building is found in our Sunday-school column. In addition to the points mentioned there, it may be added that on the lower floor the pastor has a delightful office, while up-stairs over the Bible-class rooms are a kitchen and sewing room for the ladies. The building has water throughout and is lighted with gas. The Primary room has four beautiful memorial windows of children, a fine piano was given to the Sunday-school in memory of one of our beloved members, and the pastor's office was furnished in memory of another.

On Friday evening last the

ABBIE E. CHADBOURN MEMORIAL HALL

was formally opened with appropriate exercises. After some opening music, Mr. James H. Chadbourn, Jr., Chairman of the Building Committee and Executor of his father, the donor, in a brief speech presented the key to Col. John D. Taylor, paying a cordial tribute to all who had contributed to the success of the enterprise. Col. Taylor in response alluded feelingly to Mr. and Mrs. Chadbourn, and then presented the key to the pastor to use the building for the ends for which it was designed. The pastor, Dr. Hoge, then responded, narrating the inception of the idea in Mr. Chadbourn's mind, and setting forth the ends for which the Hall was designed : to provide wholesome recreation for the young people of the Church, to promote sociability in the congregation, and to form a centre of Christian work and activity. He then committed the building to the care of Almighty God, and invoked His blessing upon it. The rest of the evening was spent in social enjoyment, with music and recitations, while refreshments were served in the parlor by the ladies.

On Sunday morning the

was dedicated to the worship of God.

The class rooms were all thrown into the main room, and seats were placed in the whole available space. The central block of seats were reserved for the Sunday-school, while the sides and rear and adjoining rooms were occupied by the congregation, the Immanuel chapel school occupying the primary room. At 11 o'clock the Sunday-school, headed by the choir and church officers, and led by the pastor and Rev. W. E. Boies, the son of the first pastor of the church, marched in from the church, where they had assembled, singing the processional hymn, and having made the circuit of the room filed into their seats before the singing was concluded. All remained standing while the Twenty-Fourth Psalm was read responsively by the pastor and school, at the conclusion of which all joined in the Doxology. A few verses from Psalm 122 were then read responsively before the opening prayer which was made by Rev. Mr. Boies, concluding with the Lord's prayer, in which the school joined. This was followed by the hymn,

"Onward, Christian Solders,"

"Hallelujah, Fairest Morning," after which the school repeated the Ten Commandments and the Apostles' Creed. The pastor than read 1 Chron. xxix. 1–13, and announced the subscribers to the building, and the different memorials that had been contributed, and asked for a contribution of $300 for Sunday-school furniture. (The amount was realized.) A blessing was asked upon the offering and the consecration hymn was sung,

"Saviour, blessed Saviour."

The pastor's address which followed was on 2 Timothy iii. 15, "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through the faith which is in Christ Jesus."

The address spoke of the great value set upon education, and how the best minds in the world were engaged in studying the best methods of education. True scientific methods must be employed from the very beginning if we would reach the best results. Education must be adapted to the end in view, and the end that concerns character, salvation—that has reference to the spiritual nature and to eternity, can only be reached through education in the Word of God. Only the characters built upon that Word could be called holy, only the nations instructed in that Word could be termed enlightened. We had put up this building because we believed the Bible was the book for the future as well as the past, and that a subject of such transcendent importance should be taught under the best possible conditions and with the best possible facilities. This was to be a Bible school where teachers and scholars had the Word of God in their hands and together searched the Scriptures ; the advanced and primary classes shut off in rooms to themselves, and the intermediate classes grouped in convenient circles, while classes of adults could be formed in the parlors above. Emphasis was laid upon the necessity of instructing the heart as well as the mind, as whatever our intellectual knowledge of the Bible we were not wise unto salvation except through faith in Christ Jesus. Jesus was the key to the spiritual treasures of the Bible.

The building was then solemnly dedicated to the worship of God in prayer by the pastor. A few verses read responsively gathered up the significance of the service, which closed with singing the hymn, followed by the Benediction.

"How sweet is the Bible,"

HEAR THE CALL AND HEED IT.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS :—I have just finished reading in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN of Feb. 1st, Rev. A. T. Graham's urgent "call" in behalf of Rev. J. W. Moore. God grant the necessary means may be speedily forthcoming for the return of this consecrated man of God to his adopted home. When on earth our Saviour told His sorrowing disciples : "Come ye yourselves apart, and rest awhile." Does He not still give this loving invitation to His children? Has Jesus not said to this, our young, afflicted missionary, leave your loved work and come ye (with Me, not go) to the "quiet resting place" of your own home, and there, "pass under the rod?" Yes—

"But, out of the presses of pain,
Cometh the soul's best wine ;
And the eyes that have shed no rain,
Can give but little shine."

Yet, while resting, Mr. Moore has not been idle, but has gone about His Master's business in the home land : been always ready to talk on missions whenever asked. Wish I could tell you of Mr. M.'s three interesting lectures to our people about Japan. Once on Sabbath in C —— church to a large appreciative congregation of old and young, and again the following Monday evening Mr. Moore with Rev Dr. McGilvary, of Siam, held an enthusiastic missionary meeting, chiefly of young persons, at the home of one of the elders of said church. Such a delightful meeting it was! A touching and impressive scene. The faithful veteran missionary—with snowy locks, telling his audience, after thirty-five years of mission work, that if he had one hundred lives he would live them all as a missionary—and the youthful warrior just putting on his armor to battle against heathendom, anxious to leave home and friends, to again preach to the Godless Japanese. The auditors plied the missionaries, the missionaries plied each other, with questions concerning Siam and Japan.

Mr. Moore met with our "Young People's Missionary Band" at a recent "praise service," donning the native costume, sleeves and all. At this meeting all the members unanimously and enthusiastically voted for their annual contribution of $35 or $40 to be given hereafter for Mr. Moore's support, (when he gets back to Japan) the $20 now on hand to be sent as a small beginning towards the requisite amount for his return expenses. Mr. Graham asks for $1,800 for Mr. Moore and his sister who wants to be a missionary, and tells us the Synod too of North Carolina has only one male missionary in foreign lands! the second, detained here, for want of funds! Christians, ought this to be? Who will come up to the help of the Lord? Will not some one suggest plans by which this money can be raised, over and above the regular donations to missions?

Why might not the pretty little "mite boxes" furnished free by our committee, be used as "self-denial boxes," to gather gifts for this good cause?

A LOVER OF MISSIONS.

CLOVER.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS.—I want to tell you something about what the Little Peoples' Missionary Society of Clover is doing. There are fifty-four members and they contributed $25.32 last year. Our pastor and his beloved wife, Rev. and Mrs. S. H. Hay, take great interest in both the societies, and are good workers and great helpers. At the first regular meeting of each year members are given five cents each for trust money, to be used in making more money for their Master, as is taught in the parable of the talents. Some used it to buy seeds to plant, such as peanuts, onion sets, &c., some in raising chickens, &c. Two returned $1 each, (Carrie Jackson and Starr Stacy), others 85 cents, 62 cents, 50 cents, &c., or over $12 trust money, and over $25 in all. I think returning ten to twenty fold deserves credit, and it greatly pleased the pastor to be able to make such a response. It is hoped they will do still better this year. I hope you will suggest some similar plans or better ones to every church.

The Associate Reformed Presbyterian church near here gave out one pint of cotton seed to its little missionary workers last winter, and offered a prize for the largest yield from one pint, and one little girl made over two hundred pounds of seed cotton, and a bushel of seed made over six hundred pounds lint for their society.

The Baptists gave out mite boxes covered with printed statistics, about missions, need of money, &c., and got little workers to canvass the town, &c., for money. If you know of better plans I trust you will advise the people of them.

The church here on the last third Sabbath lost two members by removal, (moved to Gastonia) and gained three members—the colporteur, wife and daughter, who moved here recently.

We have forty-nine pupils and are getting on nicely. The Sunday-school here adopted Gospel Hymns No, 5 and 6 last Sabbath. There are about one hundred and twenty-five Sunday-school pupils, and eighty-three were present last Sunday.

Rev. Mr. Kirkpatrick who recently moved from Wadesboro to Blackstock, S. C., was the next to the last Presbyterian minister here, and was greatly beloved.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 7, 1894.

President Cleveland has by a most unexpected act of executive clemency deeply grieved and to a certain extent discouraged that element of our people which is constantly struggling in the cause of moral reform. For thirty years one family has maintained one of the lowest liquor saloons in Washington. In addition to a constant violation of the liquor license laws, members of this family have been guilty of murder—the wife of the man who has just been pardoned killed a policeman who was trying to arrest her—and of burglary. Two years ago a license was refused to this dive, but it continued to do business without one Last spring the place was raided by the police and a case made against its proprietor, He was heavily fined, but he continued his illegal business. Several months later another raid was made and it was only after a most desperate fight, in which the women of the family, including the one who had once killed a policemen, participated, that the police succeeded in arresting the proprietor. Again he was convicted, and sentenced to six months in the work house and to pay a fine of $500. His term expired a few days ago and in order to escape payment of the fine he applied to the President for a pardon, alleging persecution and brutal treament of his wife by the police as reasons why it should be granted. Although the judge, jury and prosecuting attorney in the case opposed the pardon it was recommended by the Pardon Clerk of the Department of Justice and granted by the President, on condition that a fine of $100, be paid. How the people of Washington regard this pardon my be judged from the following extract from a leading editorial in the Evening Star, the most influential and most conservative newspaper we have: "President Cleveland suffers from unsound advisers. His latest error—and so far as Washington is concerned, the most serious one—was the pardoning of John Shea, convicted of selling liquor without a license.

"The offense for which John Shea was sent to prison and fined is one with which no decent citizen has any sympathy, and the police officers who are actively engaged in trying to stamp it out deserve all commendation and support. In New York the police are being investigated and held up to public reprobation because of their connivance with and inactivity against the prototypes of the Sheas in that city. In Washington the Executive 'rebukes' by the exercise of the pardoning power police activity against this class of law-breakers. In championing the Sheas the President slaps in the face the moral sentiment of this city."

A petition is now being signed at the store of a native Armenian, in this city, asking President Cleveland to use his good offices to ameliorate the condition of the Armenians (of whom there are more than 8,000 living in the United States) in their native land, and to secure three reforms. First, a governor who is not a Mohammedan; second, courts in which Christians shall stand on an equal footing with Mohammedans; third, the spending of at least a part of the revenues collected in Armenia in that country.

The Senate to-day passed the bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws. The House of Representatives has been discussing the Hawaiian question since it passed the tariff bill last week. It was intended to have taken a vote yesterday afternoon on the resolution reported by the majority of the committee of Foreign Affairs, condemning the action of ex-Minister Stevens, approving the policy of the present administration, and declaring against annexation, but, owing to the refusal of the minority to vote to help make a quorum and the absence of members on the majority side of the chamber who for reasons of their own do not desire to vote either for or against the resolution, "no quorum" has prevented a vote up to this time.

The Senate Finance Committee, which now has charge of the tariff bill, has decided to grant no hearings on the bill. While this has disappointed those who wished to be heard it will result in getting the bill before the Senate much earlier than would have been possible had hearings been granted.

Messrs. Moody and Sanky arrived in Washington to-day and the first of the series of meetings will be held to-night. The pastors of the evangelical churches have signed a petition to the business men of Washington, asking that, during the four weeks these meetings are to be held, they will close their places of business daily, except Saturday, at 5.30 p. m., in order that they and their employes may be afforded "an opportunity of sharing in the benefits which it is devoutly to be hoped will be secured." It is expected that most of the merchants will accede to this request.

It was announced this week that 25 employes of the U. S. Pension Bureau had been discharged for habitual drunkenness. Still there are misguided people who ask "why agitate the temperance question?" T.

February 25.—Trial of Abraham's Faith.

Gen. xxii. 1-13. Commit vss. 11-13.

Golden Text.—By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac. Heb. xi. 17.

Topic.—Abraham offering Isaac.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. On the connection, note the fulfilment of God's promise in the birth of Isaac (xxi. 1–5); the centering of Abraham's hopes in Isaac by the expulsion of Ishmael (xxi. 9–21); his residence at Beersheba (xxi. 22–34). Locate on the map.

Second Step. Read over the lesson carefully until the points of the story are well fixed in your mind.

Third Step. Write out a summary of the lesson and compare it with the one below:

SUMMARY. While Abraham was residing at Beersheba God tested him by commanding him to offer up his only and well-beloved son Isaac as a burnt offering. He promptly obeyed and persevered in his journey until on the third day he arrived at the mountain of Moriah. Leaving the servants, he proceeded with Isaac and the instruments of sacrifice. To Isaac's question as to the victim, he replied that God would provide it. When all the arrangements were complete, and Isaac was bound and the knife raised, the voice of God arrested his arm, and expressing Himself satisfied with a sacrifice in spirit, God provided a substitute by showing Abraham a ram caught in a thicket, which he offered in Isaac's stead.

Fourth Step. Take up difficult terms and other questions requiring solution or explanation, and get all the light you can from your "helps."

Vs. 1. Did Tempt. R. V. properly renders proved.

Vs. 2. Thy son, thine only son, whom thou lovest, even Isaac. This is the order of the original and gives the true climax.

Moriah. The name is only found elsewhere in the Scriptures in 2 Chron iii. 1. Jewish tradition identifies the two. The distance (three days journey with an ass) is in favour of the identification while the significance of the event is much enhanced thereby. The only things urged against it are (1) that the temple site is not a high mountain, and (2) that it would have been just by Melchizedek's city of Salem, while the account seems to call for a lonely place. With regard to (1), it was sufficiently conspicuous for a threshing-floor, showing that in its natural state it was a prominent point, and with regard to (2) it was not included in the walls of the city even in David's time (compare 1 Chron. xxi. 15–27). Trace journey on map.

Offer him for a burnt offering. Human sacrifices were practiced both by the Canaanites and Babylonians. A father was then considered to have absolute rights over his son, the only government being paternal. Abraham therefore would not have the shock to his moral sense that we would have. At the same time God would not command what was intrinsically wrong, and Abraham recognized that God was the author of life and had a right to set its limit, and his constant communications with God enabled him to know to a certainty that God had spoken. By the sequel God was to show that he took no delight in human sacrifice, but in the surrender of the will to Himself for a life of service.

Vs. 5. The lad. Old enough to carry the wood (vs. 6), and to hold intelligent conversation with his father (vss. 7, 8).

Vs. 8. God will provide. An answer to satisfy Isaac for the time, but at the same time an expression of abiding faith that God would make it all right, with a prophetic reference to the coming deliverer, which the sequel made plainer even to Abraham himself (vss. 13, 14; John viii. 56; i. 29).

Fifth Step. Study the topics suggested by the lesson with all the light thrown on them by God's Word.

1. The testing of Abraham.
   (a) Why?
   For himself, James i. 2–4, 12.
   An example for others. Rom. iv. 23–25; Heb. xi. 17 with xii. 1.
   (b) Requirements.
   Supreme Devotion. xxii. 2, 12; Heb. xi. 26; Acts xxi. 13; Matt. xxvi. 39.
   Supreme confidence. Heb. xi. 17, 18; xi. 27; 2 Tim. i. 12; Matt. xxvii. 43.
   (c) Supporting considerations.
   God's promises. xv. 1; xvii. 7; 19; xxi. 12
   Their miraculous fulfilment. xviii. 13,14; xxi. 1–3; Rom. iv. 17–21; Heb. xi. 19.
   (d) The Test endured.
   By readiness to hear, xxii. 1, compare iii. 8.
   By prompt (vs. 3), patient (vs. 3), thorough (vs. 6), unquestioning (vs. 8) and unflinching (vss. 9, 10) obedience. Compare Luke ii. 49; John iv. 34.
   And (on Isaac's part) by patient submission; vs. 9; Is. liii. 7; Job xiii. 15; John x. 18; xviii. 11.
2. Moriah and Calvary.
   The Father giving His son. xxii. 2; John iii. 16.
   The Son giving Himself, xxii. 9; Ps. xl. 7; John vi. 51.
   A substitute for Isaac. xxii. 8, 13; John i. 29.
   But none for Christ. John xix. 17, 18, 30.

Sixth Step. Lay to heart the practical lessons of the narrative. Note that while Abraham hoped for the deliverance or restoration of Isaac (Heb. xi. 19) his trust was not in this hope but in God. Hope is the fruit of faith, but when particular hopes are disappointed, God still remains our abiding confidence (Heb. xi. 11). "Jehovah Jireh," the Lord will provide. Take also Rom. xii. 1 as the practical fruit of the lesson, and our Lord's solemn words in Mark viii 34, 35.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

In following the different steps give abundant time for the Bible Reading, and impress especially these lessons:

1. When our hearts are right with God we hear His voice gladly and without fear (vs. 1), and obey His commands promptly (vs. 2 etc).
2. When we obey God's commands, God always provides a way out of every difficulty; vs. 14 should be included in the lesson, and Jehovah Jireh should be translated to conform to vs. 8, "Jehovah will provide."
3. God takes no delight in the death of the sinner, but has provided a substitute. Ezek. xxxiii. 11; John i. 29. Shorter Catechism. Qu. 20, 21.

Jas. P. Sutherland, Laurinburg, 19, 20.
Anna Bell, Hillsboro, 19, 20.
Mary M. Darroch, Paolia, 19, 20(a).

(Several answers to No. 21 had to be ruled out for missing the precise point; such as "a covenant-keeping God," "the Fatherhood of God," they worship the same God and believe in the same Saviour." The last is spoiled by the last sentence which is not true, while Mahometans hardly think of God as a Father, and do not lay emphasis upon the "covenant." The answer "Blessing through Abraham" was ruled out because it can hardly be called a "doctrine.")

NEW QUESTIONS.

25. What Israelitish father did sacrifice his child?
21. Why was that sacrifice not an act of "faith"?
27. Give a N. T. verse (not quoted in the "study of the lesson" above) that shows God's love for us as Gen. xxii. 12 shows Abraham's love for God.

Teachers' Exchange.

NEW SUNDAY SCHOOL BUILDING.

A number of our churches in the State, in building new churches, have been mindful in their plans of the Sunday-school and have provided modern and well-arranged rooms for this work. In some we fear that the size of the room has been too much reduced in the effort to make the Sunday-school room combine with the church in one audience room. Still with this drawback, they are an unspeakable advance over the old arrangement by which scholars were taught in pews. The First church, Wilmington, has just completed a Sunday-school hall that we suppose has no superior in our Southern Church except that in Augusta. It is entirely separate from the church, though connected with it by two vestibules. The main room is 42 feet wide by 60 long, and is divided into six terraces each seven inches above the other. The entrances from the church are on the lowest terrace, in the centre of which is the raised platform for the superintendent. The rear, or highest terrace is at present reserved for visitors and on the intermediate four the classes are arranged. Each teacher has a table and the class occupies a circle of chairs around it. It is the work of a moment to shift the chairs so that all can face the superintendent.

To the superintendent's left are a line of four Bible class rooms and the Library; on the other side of the Hall is a Primary Room, (20x30 feet). These are connected with the main room by sliding sashes that let through the light but cut off the view and the sound. The main light of the Hall comes from ten windows in the curved wall at the rear, opening out on the wide lot east of the building. There are parlors up-stairs that can be used for adult Bible classes, and a small room for a teachers' library and study. A large Hall up-stairs the duplicate in size of the main Sunday-school Hall, while not directly connected with the Sunday-school, is chiefly intended for the use of the young people of the church. It was provided by the will of the late George Chadbourn as a Memorial of his wife, both veteran Sunday-school workers and deeply interested in everything that concerned the welfare of the young. The lower hall was built by subscription, and is called "Anniversary Hall" as it grew out of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church, celebrated in December, 1892. An account of the Dedication will be found in another column.

This has no reference to Potassium, Pokeroot, &c., nor to Parson's Pellets. But it means that certain Pocket-books are empty—and that the Greenville church needs Plastering ($60), Pewing ($130), and Painting ($70) before we can enjoy the use of the building. Brethren, is the Lord's cause to languish on the threshold of completion? If there comes help to the amount of $100—I promise that this is my very last appearance in these columns for this needy and worthy place. The town of Greenville alone has given $759, a most noble response to our call. So help given now will be given to those who have helped themselves. Please do quickly what is urgently needed, for I am coming again soon in the interest of Parmele, as soon as we can get pews into the Greenville church.

Entered into rest January 15th, 1894, MARGARET JANE, wife of Elder D. Johnson, aged fifty-two years. Early in life she joined Buffalo church, later she moved her membership to St Andrews church. She was a consistent member, an earnest worker and a devoted Christian. "I know whom I have believed."

About 3 o'clock Sunday morning, January 28th, 1894, the ransomed spirit of Mrs. SUSAN WILSON, passed to its final reward. Mrs. Wilson whose maiden name was Clark, was married in 1859 to Dr. Isaac Wilson to whose children she became a real mother.

In the year 1859 she moved her membership to the Hopewell Presbyterian church, of which she continued to the day of her death a consistent member. While her health permitted, her place in the sanctuary was never vacant. She entered most heartily into all its plans for the promotion of Christ's kingdom. Of the Ladies' Missionary Society she was a zealous member, and contributed liberally of her means to send the gospel to the heathen, a cause that always lay near her heart.

The last years of her life were days of bodily affliction; these she bore without a murmur. Meekness, gentleness and patience were distinguishing traits of her character. The trust that had supported her in the affliction of life did not desert her in the hour of death. To her pastor who asked her a few hours before her death, if she could still trust the Saviour whom she had so long trusted, she answered, "yes."

Mrs. Wilson reached the advanced age of 77 years, 11 months and 15 days, which was exactly the age of her husband when he died. She leaves behind a large family of step children and step-grand children who mourn her loss as if she had been their own mother.

PASTOR.

WHEREAS, God in His mysterious providence has removed from our midst, our dear sister Mrs. M. JOHNSON, a zealous member of this society and one greatly beloved by us all, therefore,

Resolved 1st, That we bow in humble submission to our kind heavenly Father in this bereavement, realizing that our loss is her eternal gain.

2nd. That we cherish the memory of her many virtues and will strive to emulate her sterling Christian character, sweetened by suffering and strengthened by an ever abiding faith in her crucified Redeemer.

3rd. That we extend our sincerest sympathies to the family of our departed sister and pray that He who wept over the grave of Lazarus may comfort them, giving them the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

4th. That a page in our minutes be inscribed to her memory and a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and to the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

MRS. SOUTHERLAND AND MRS. YOUNG.

The Presbyterian church and community at Henderson, N. C., has been called to mourn the loss of two beloved ladies—mother and daughter.

Mrs. S. C. SOUTHERLAND, after a lingering illness passed away January 14th, 1894. When a little orphan girl Sarah Wortham was brought from Tennessee, her native State, and placed in the care of relatives in North Carolina. Here she grew to maturity and was united in marriage to Mr. Solon Southerland of Warren county, N. C. Mrs. Southerland was possessed of many excellent traits of character. With a sound, practical judgment she was remarkably enterprising, energetic and industrious. For years she successfully discharged the duties of housekeeper and matron in a large establishment at her husband's home. In the latter part of her life she removed to Henderson where several years before her death she became a member of the Presbyterian church—and until life closed continued an active and consistent communicant. Her open sincere manners, her cordial and affectionate nature, and her generous hospitality, won for her a large circle of true and devoted friends and when God called her from the earthly to the heavenly service, deep sorrow in her loss filled the hearts of many in different parts of the State where she was known. She fell asleep on a Sabbath morning in sound of the bell which had so often called her to the house of God, and where within the hour her brethren in the Lord had been praying for their suffering sister. Mrs. Southerland left a family of six children. Three sons and three daughters, five of whom were heads of families.

MRS. ANNIE YOUNG.

When the tidings of Mrs. Southerland's rapid decline reached this faithful daughter, they found her, too feeble to go to her mother's bedside. Her frequent former visits often made in great weakness and pain, had finally been forbidden by her physician; she survived her mother, but ten days, and on the 24th of January she too fell asleep in Jesus. Gifted with remarkable attractions of mind and person Annie Southerland in the bloom of her young womanhood gave her hand in marriage to Mr. J. R. Young, of Henderson, and for eighteen years she faithfully strove to make his life happy. Soon after her marriage she became a member of the church which her husband has long served as a most active and useful ruling elder. Mrs. Young's life was shadowed by afflictions mental and physical, of unusual severity. God was steadily polishing the stone for his temple. Years of suffering, and the loss of three dear children were sanctified by her heavenly Father in chastening and developing a character of deep humility and rare spiritual beauty. Her hospitable home, her skilful hands and her generous purse were gratefully placed at the service of the church she loved, and under severe suffering and heavy sorrow she still turned from her own trials to the Master's work. Devoted to her husband, to her five little children, beyond all to her dear Redeemer, she toiled and testified to the end. And when God's righteous will with her, here was served, He advanced her into the ranks of an eternal and perfect service. The heart of our community was stirred to its depths when hundreds came to mourn her sepulture, for she had won many friends. As they revert to her painful sufferings, it is passing sweet to reflect that "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Gold fever is said to be prevalent in Union county. Men are hunting around everywhere for gold—this is the report—and not without success, so that many are living better and have more spare money than ever before.

Goldsboro Argus? From the reports that come to us from sections of the country, we are persuaded that at no time since the war have the farmers been better prepared for a new crop year than they are at present. They are reported to have corn in abundance, and are as a general thing killing enough home fattened meat to do them the entire year, and a great many will have meat to sell. Such is the condition of the farming element, as a whole, in this section.

The Charlotte News is glad to hear, as it does from the Gastonia Gazette, that the work of developing the tin mines at King's Mountain is really in progress. It would be a great thing for this State to have a paying tin mine at King's Mountain.

FOR THE FAMILY.

TWO LITTLE FEET.

Two little feet went pattering by
Years ago!
They wandered off to the sunny sky
Years ago!
Two little socks, well wrinkled and worn,
Move me to tears with their memories born,
Years ago!

Dear little feet that ran here and there
Years ago!
Creeping, climbing about everywhere
Years ago!
Crept never back to the love they left,
Climbed never more to the arms bereft
Years ago!

Again I'll hear those dear little feet
Pattering by!
Their music a thousandfold more sweet
In the sky!
I joy to think of the Father's care
That holds them safe till I meet them there
By and by.

Raphael, the great painter, was born in 1483, in Colbordolo, a little town set among the Apennines mountains. He was left without father or mother when he was only 11 years old, and his uncle, seeing his great talent as an artist, put him to study in the studio of Perugino, a famous painter. When Perugino first saw Raphael's sketches, he said, "Let him be my pupil; he will soon become my master." Raphael painted his first work when he was 17 years old, and the picture which was the "Crucifixion," sold later on for $12,500. He afterwards painted a little picture of the Madonna, that was less than seven inches square, and in 1871 this was sold to the Emperor of Russia for $65,000.

Raphael was very modest in his manner, kind and gentle to every one, and always made the best of things, looking ever on the bright side of life. He was a hard worker.

When he was 25 years old he was called to Rome by the pope, who commissioned him to fresco the walls in the vatican with historical pictures. The first fresco Raphael painted was called "La disputa," and when the pope saw this great painting, he threw himself on his knees before it and said, "I thank thee, great God, that thou hast sent me so great a painter!"

While Raphael was painting this picture he fell in love with a beautiful young girl named Margherita, the daughter of a soda manufacturer. It is said he used her as his model in many of his most famous pictures. It is Margherita's face that one sees in the beautiful Sistine Madonna, the greatest work of his life. He only lived three years after painting this picture. He died on his 37th birthday, and at the time was at work on the "Transfiguration." He was the idol of all Rome and every one was evercome with grief at the news of his death. His body was laid in grand state, on a catafalque, surrounded by lighted tapers, and behind it was the unfinished "Transfiguration," which was also carried in funeral procession.

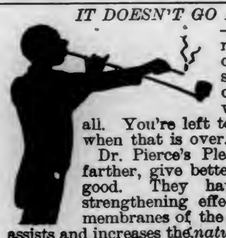
The amount of work that Raphael accomplished during his life was something wonderful. He left 287 pictures and 576 drawings. Some one asked him one day how he managed to do so much work. Raphael answered, "From my earliest childhood, I have made it a principle never to neglect anything."

Japan's Historic Tree.

Garden and Forest has a description of the great pine of Japan, called Dai Matsu, which stands on the shore of Lake Biroa, some three miles from Otsu. The tree is attended by priests, who declare that it is mentioned in the records of their cloister 800 years ago, and that it was planted in the year A. D. 675. It is counted among the eight wonders of Japan, and its singular aspect, as it stretches its long branches out on every side over a scaffolding formed by more than 300 poles, has been pictured in many books of travel. Although it is fully exposed to the wind, and although its trunks and branches bear more than one lightning scar, it is still vigorous, and only a gradual thinning out of its foliage bears witness to its great antiquity. At two feet above the ground the diameter of the trunk is 15 feet 9 inches; its height is 48 feet, and the diameter of its widely-stretched crown is 242 feet. Four houses formerly stood among its branches, but two of them were ruined in a great storm a few years ago. The other two are still largely resorted to by supper parties on summer evenings, and the Japanese take especial delight in listening to the dripping of rain into the water from the boughs as they overhang the sea.

Things Useful.

Mend torn books with white tissue paper.



Remove grease from garments by sponging with one teaspoonful of salt to four of alcohol.

Wash rusty gilt frames with spirits of wine.

Ribbon Cake.—Mix two and a half cups of sugar, one of sweet milk, a teaspoon of cream of tartar, half a teaspoon of soda, four cups of flour and four eggs. Bake two-thirds of this in two loaves. To the other third add a cup of raisins, a quarter of a pound of citron, a cup of currants, two tablespoons of molasses and a teaspoon each of all kinds of spices. Bake in a tin the size of the other loaves, and put all three together with currant jelly. Let the fruit loaf have the middle place. Ice the top and sides.

A Pretty Dessert.—Choose a number of smooth, fair-skinned oranges, and cut a piece the size of a cent from the stem end; with a small wooden mustard spoon extract all the pulp, being very careful not to puncture the skin or make a hole in the opposite end. Throw the skins in water to extract any bitter flavor, while you make several kinds of gelatine, flavoring with pineapple, lemon, orange or banana. Stand the shells on small cups to keep them upright, and fill with jelly, which must be cooled, but not stiff; set away over night. The next day cut them in halves, using a very sharp knife, and arrange on a pretty dish, decorate with orange leaves, smilax or flowers. They make a very handsome center piece.

My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Incouraged by this success, I sent a collection of Seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the Seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business. 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package my Cotton, "King's Improved;" 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all postpaid for $1.00. CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A SHORT SERMON.

Children who read my lay,
This much I have to say:
Each day, and every day
Do what is right!
Right things in great and small;
Than, though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon and stars, and all,
You shall have light.

This further I would say:
Be you tempted as you may,
Each day, and every day,
Speak what is true!
True things in great and small;
Then, though the stars should fall
Sun, moon and stars, and all,
Heaven would show through.

Figs, as you see and know,
Do not of thistles grow;
And though the blossoms blow
White on the tree,
Grapes never, never yet
On the limbs of thorns were set;
So, if you a good would get,
Good you must be.

Life's journey through and through,
Speaking what is just and true,
Doing what is right to do
Unto one and all,
When you work and when you play,
Each day and every day;
Then peace shall gild your way,
Though the sky should fall.

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER 7.

The days that had passed since her husband left home, had been days of mingled anxiety and sadness to Marion Martin—anxiety, on his account, for she was grieved at his state of despondency regarding their circumstances, want of trust in God and submission to his will—sadness, at witnessing the sorrow of her children, and being obliged to listen to their fretful repinings, when they found that their cow had been taken away to be sold. It was their first sorrow—and its violence was great in proportion to the novelty of such a feeling in their young hearts. They could not be brought to understand the necessity for such a thing; nor could they attend to, far less profit by, the lessons which their pious mother tried to enforce on them, about the duty of submission to all that God appoints. It would take long years of experience of even sterner discipline, before they could be expected to learn that. During the day, it is true, while engaged in their childish sports, they in some measure forgot their sorrow; but it returned again when the evening came round, and there was no crummie to milk, attend to, and put to bed—on ordinary occasions, the great event of their day—it was only when they lay down to rest, that they again lost the recollection of their grief in sleep. The next day pasted over much in the same manner; but on the following, their minds were somewhat diverted from the one all-engrossing subject, but by the expectation of their father's return; so that, great was their disappointment, when sunset was succeeded by the short wintry twilight, twilight by darkness, and still he did not appear.

Their mother could not, in some measure, help sharing their uneasiness on account of her husband's non-arrival at the time he had specified—it was so unlike John not to keep his word; and then—she could not think of anything that could have detained him, for the idea of his not being able to find a purchaser for the cow, never once entered into her calculations. Then she thought, that perhaps he might have been induced to wait, by the prospect of joining some other people returning home from the fair, and she told the children, in answer to their anxious questions, that such was her conjecture. But long after their bed time had arrived, and she had with some difficulty succeeded in persuading them to retire for the night, there was still no appearance of her husband, and Marion began to feel somewhat alarmed. True, she could hardly have assigned a reason for her apprehensions; for in that quiet country there was little fear at any rate of his being attacked and robbed on the road; and then—having money to carry upon him—she had sufficient confidence in his prudence, to feel satisfied that he would have never thrown himself so late, unless he had secured company. But still this consideration did not set her mind entirely at rest, and in spite of her efforts to overcome such a feeling, an indefinable dread took possession of it. At length she rose, went to the door, and looked abroad on the night, in hopes of seeing or hearing some indication of her husband's approach. As far as her eye could reach in the uncertain light, over the wide expanse of snow-covered country, no object was visible, and no sound met her ear, save the faint sighing of the night-breeze among the dark old firs in the glen, and the murmur of the waterfall, which had been too much swollen by recent rains to be frozen. Above the lofty mountains, which overshadowed her cottage, the pale crescent moon had arisen, and the thousands of bright and glistering stars shone in the clear, frosty sky. Marion felt her mind cheered and elevated, as she gazed on these wonderful works of God's hand—those "spangled heavens," which "their Great Original proclaim!" It was long since the "daystar" had "arisen in her heart," and would she now lose her faith in that God, who had hitherto been her Guide and Support, who "had done" for her "exceeding abundantly above all she could ask or think?" No, she would still "hold fast her confidence unto the end;" and to encourage and strengthen her in this resolve, a voice, as if stealing down from the heights of heaven seemed to whisper in her ear:—

"Trust in the Lord, for ever trust,
And banish all your fears;
Strength in the Lord Jehovah dwells
Eternal as his years"

Marion re-entered her cottage, and after engaging in her nightly exercise of reading the word and prayer, she retired to rest, and soon enjoyed that "sleep" which "He giveth to his beloved."

The next day, soon after sunset, and before Marion had time to get anxious regarding her husband's return, the children, who had been playing about the door, watching for his expected arrival, entered the house in great excitement, to tell her, that they saw father coming along the road, and crummie with him!

Marion's heart sank within her at the announcement. Was it possible, then, that he had not succeeded in selling the cow; and what was now to be done for the arrears of their rent? Then, she thought it just possible, that in the fading light, the children might have mistaken some one else for their father, and she hastened out to see for herself. But there was no mistake. There, in the distance, their forms clearly defined against the ruddy glow of the western sky, a man and a cow were approaching, and she saw at once that their information had been correct. On hastening forward along with them, however, to meet her husband, one glance at his countenance showed her that all was right, and his first words set her mind entirely at rest.

"Give me joy, dear Marion," he said "I've news for you! I've met with such a piece of good fortune! and while the children, in their happiness at seeing the cow back again, danced round her, patting her neck and sides, he bade them take crummie to the cowhouse, and give her a good supper and a comfortable bed, for she was "their own cow once more."

Nutting in a Garrett.

It was a rainy morning, and Becca and Justin could not play out-of-doors, as they had done every day of the happy week they spent at grandpa's.

Grandma proposed that they should go into the garret, to look for some half-worn clothes for poor John Henry.

The children jumped for joy, and for a merry hour they rummaged chests and boxes, and tried on queer hats and bonnets, till they were tired.

But in almost every box, among the clothes, they found nuts,—hickory nuts, acorns, and a few hazel nuts. "Who did put it there for us?" said little Justin, when grandma told him to put them in his pocket.

"The squirrels," said grandma. "They come in at the window and hide them. here. But they lose them all, for when it comes cold the window is shut, and they cannot come in after them. Poor little squirrels!"

Just then a strong gust of wind came howling down the great chimney, another blow opened the swinging window, and whisked a wolf-skin that hung in the corner over Justin's face.

Becca screamed, "O grandma, there's a hundred Indians howling in the chimney!"

Justin ran as fast as his fat legs could carry him, called out, "The wolf bited me!"

How grandma laughed!

Then she told them what made the noise in the chimney, and about the "wolf," till Justin shouted, bravely, "You can kit, and you can kit, but you can't bite a bit!"

Then the funniest thing happened! Right in at the window leaped a pretty squirrel, ran along the great beam to the overcoat grandma was going to give John Henry, and down into its deep pocket.

A moment after, he came up, with a hickory nut in his paws, whisked his pretty tail, and sat down on the beam to eat it. The children watched him, keeping very still, until he ate his second nut, and leaped from the window to the great oak-tree.

"Well, I never went nutting with squirrels in a garret before!" said grandma. "Never did me," said Justin.—Aunt Sophie, in Our Little Ones and the Nursery.

A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Mrs. P. D. HALL, 217 Genessee St., Lockport, N. Y., says:

"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions. While some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the day, none of them afforded me any relief from that spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was

Nearly in Despair,

and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments, I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

Never lose sight of an honourable enemy; he will make a good friend.

A perfect cure! Mr. Edward E. Broughton, 140 W. 19th St., New York City, N. Y., says this: "I have used several bottles of Dr Bull's Cough Syrup in my family and find it a perfect cure. I cheerfully recommend it."

Each man and woman is born with an aptitude to do something impossible to any other.

IRREGULARITY.

Is that what troubles you? Then its easily and promptly remedied by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate the system perfectly. Take one for a gentle laxative or corrective; three for a cathartic.

If you suffer from Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, Sick or Bilious Headaches, or derangement of the liver, stomach, or bowels, try these little Pellets. They bring a permanent cure Instead of shocking and weakening the system with violence, like the ordinary pills, they act in a perfectly easy and natural way. They're the smallest. the easiest to take—and the cheapest, for they are guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

The cleansing, antiseptic and healing qualities of Dr. Sage's Catarrah Remedy are unequaled.

Corkscrews are not always at hand when wanted. When this is the case use an ordinary large screw, with a string attached to pull out the cork.

Don't waste time, money, and health, trying every new medicine you may see advertised in the papers. If the cause of your trouble is in the blood, liver, stomach, or kidneys, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla at once, and be sure of a cure. Take no other.

CALEB.

When the children of Israel had come to Kadesh, south of the promised land, GOD had them to appoint twelve men, one from each of the tribes except the tribe of LEVI, and counting each of the half tribes of EPHRIAM and MANASSEH as one. These twelve men were to go through the land and bring report of its condition, products, inhabitants and defences. This they did and returned with samples of its fruits. They all agreed that the land had the quality of great fertility and the State of great fruitfulness. It was a good land even as to this day the soil and soil supply and basis show it to be capable as no other land of supporting a large population.

So far the twelve men were agreed. From this point they were divided ten against two. The ten were faithless. They were looking to their own weakness and the untrained people instead of trusting GOD and remembering the power of GOD so lately manifest at the Red Sea and Sinai, and the promise of GOD to give them this good land. They therefore saw and feared the many people and the mighty men, with many giants among them, and did not think it possible for Israel to break through the walls of the cities; and they made the whole people of Israel to fear and murmur against MOSES and against GOD.

Two of the twelve, JOSHUA, the son of NUN and CALEB, the son of JEPHUNNEH, with faith in GOD, persuaded that He was able to do all He had promised, tried to persuade and besought the people to go in and possess the land as, by the power of GOD, they were able to do. It is a stirring scene even in our imagination, when these two stand faithful before a faithless people, not only to offset the evil report of their ten associates, but to stand almost alone before the millions of Israel. Their faith in GOD and faithfulness in His service made them true and earnest. These two and ELEAZAR, the High Priest of the tribe of LEVI, which was not represented, were alone spared of that generation to enter the land and possess it. All the others were turned back to die in the wilderness.

Of these GOD made a special promise and gave a special blessing to CALEB. We suppose JOSHUA was not named with CALEB in this distinction because JOSHUA was to be a public man and his preservation would be notable in leading the people and allotting the land to them, and CALEB was to have no special prominence, but to be an illustration of GOD's care and faithfulness to His servants in the humble seclusion of private life. It is comforting to the multitude of GOD's children in the every-day duties and comparative seclusion of private life that GOD specially marked and honored His servants. CALEB here is not given any title of distinction among his fellow-men. It may and sometimes does include these, but it is higher and holier than any of them. It is given from GOD Himself when He designates him as "CALEB my servant." We do not rightly weigh this when we think that a servant is always a menial. Not so here. For this is a title of nobility from the throne of GOD. When all men-made titles and their charters shall have perished this title will hold and its honors and emoluments will continue. It is a title to cover a real relation. CALEB had taken GOD as his Master, and GOD ratified the choice in the title-deed of true nobility.

It was because the servant had "followed fully," because he had served faithfully, he was given the title. How he followed fully might appear from some study of the opposition and dangers he had to meet, or the difficulties and obstacles of the way, but that would not serve our present purpose to signalize the fact that in his day and in private life, with whatever of temptations and trials he did "follow fully" and GOD gave him a title of honor and ample income and estates to signalize the honor, and the fact that those who follow fully have exceeding great and precious promises that by these they may be partakers of the divine life.

CALEB had "another spirit"—a spirit totally different from that of the ten others who brought back the evil report. Theirs was mean, cowardly and selfish. His was high, courageous and hopeful, with a steadfast faith in GOD. Theirs was the human reasoning balancing the probabilities of victory or defeat between the recent and yet unskilled slaves of Egyptian bondage and the giants and mighty men of Canaan. His was the full persuasion that what GOD had promised He was able to perform. CALEB did seem to be in a hopelesss minority, but we ought to remember that GOD is the real majority and does not need even one man to make Him such. With the examples of JOSEPH and GIDEON and the many workers in building the tabernacle, we feel sure that this expression "another spirit" means the HOLY SPIRIT, and that then as now courage to follow GOD fully is by the SPIRIT of GOD.

Part of the promise associated with this title was the long life and prosperity which CALEB enjoyed to the full. He was preserved in the "gainsaying of Kore" and did not perish in the plagues and punishments that came upon Israel by the way. He was still strong and able to dispossess the giants of the part promised to him and did not fear to do so, forty-five years after this promise, when he was eighty-five years old. It is pleasant to think of him waiting patiently all these years for GOD to fulfill the promise. When it is done he takes quiet possession and twenty years the senior of JOSHUA must have been a veritable Nestor among his people. Even then when there was great danger the friends would think of and seek their Achilles not hiding, but hidden from public gaze in the quiet possession and enjoyment of his promised portion. He was to have the very place on which he stood as the faithful servant. So shall it be for every one who will "follow fully." Here are the promises on which to stand and He who gave the promises will see to their fulfillment:

> "Even down to old age,
> "All my people shall prove,
> "My sovereign eternal
> "Unchangeable love."

Our recent study of the Rechabites brought out the faithfulness of GOD to a people who have kept a vow imposed by their ancestor. Here we have His faithfulness to one of His servants who had another spirit and followed fully. The example is in private life that we who live without titles, distinctions or honors from our fellow-men may know that we are not forgotten, or overlooked. After all this is the ideal life. Office and publicity among men bring responsibilities and cares and oftentimes become snares even to well-meaning men; but they who are servants of GOD and guided by the HOLY SPIRIT in the humble walks of like, exempt from the evils of public life, can have the testimony of GOD in the life of CALEB that if they follow the LORD fully He will follow them faithfully.

REV. DR. GREIG, OF PARIS, NOW IN charge of the McALL mission is at present in this country. Quite recently he was in Baltimore and addressed the Baltimore Auxiliary of the American McALL Association. The Sun says of him:

Rev. Dr. Greig is a Scotchman. He was educated in Edinburgh and is an ordained clergyman of the Free Church of Scotland Fifteen years ago he commenced work in the McAll Mission in Paris, and since the death of the founder of the mission he has been at the head of the work. Dr. Greig came to the United States about a month ago and has since been making addresses in the principal cities of this country. He visited America twelve years ago, but this is his first visit to Baltimore. Rev. Dr. Jere Witherspoon, pastor of First Presbyterian church introduced the speaker. Rev. Dr. W. U. Murkland was also in the pulpit.

HERE AND THERE.

ON OUR SECOND PAGE WE ARE GLAD to give our readers the reasons why the Committee of Conference on Colored Evangelization prepared the report which they have had published in the Church papers. It presents the reasons for in an admirable way—calmly, clearly, attractively. The reasons against are for others to present and they are coming forth quite freely.

IT SEEMS A PITY THE REASONS WHICH induced the Committee to adopt the report on Co-operation had not accompanied the published report. It seems particularly unfortunate too, if Judge LAPSLEY's wish (that it be borne in mind "that the subject before us is the evangelization of the negroes, and not organic union" or any other matter,) is to be regarded, that the conference had not borne the same thing in mind, and so avoided combining the two matters in a way that renders dissociation almost if not altogether impracticable.

WE ARE ESPECIALLY ANXIOUS THAT the discussion of this matter shall be conducted in the spirit and manner of which the "Reasons" is so fair an example. It is certainly our wish that the result may be to the glory of GOD through the advancement of His kingdom on earth, and this will guard us from saying some things to which otherwise we certainly would feel prompted.

WE AGREE WITH JUDGE LAPSLEY and those whom he represents in desiring that the discussion of the report shall not be turned from to consider issues that are incidental, or even consequential—that is we should regret to see entire diversion, but surely possible consequences of any action are legitimate subject of discussion along with that action, and in the case before us the possible consequences are of such serious character that they must, at least they should, receive very full and earnest consideration. Consideration of the possible consequences to the independence—autonomy, perhaps is the correct word—of our Southern Church is rendered imperative by the expressed personal predilections and sympathies of those who prepared the report, and by the expressions of hope from the exponents of public opinion in our sister Church.

WE WERE NOT PREPARED FOR THE assurance that "our own work is in gratifying condition, both in the field and at the Institute." We are heartily glad to hear it, for we had thought that prospective failure had inspired the demand for the Conference. This work is as certainly distinctively ours, it seems to us, as any other in which we engage, and we verily believe that nothing less than certainty of failure to be able to prosecute it effectively, should induce us to action which will almost inevitably crush out the interest with which the Southern Church, now regards it. In a mild way we have given expressions to our own opinions on this matter before us. Elsewhere we let our readers see how it strikes others.

A REPORT FROM PERSIA THROUGH A private letter published in the Lynchburg, Va., News, is that Rev. E. W. St. PIERRE, a missionary residing in Oroumiah, Persia, was set upon by bandits near that place who beat him cruelly leaving him for dead. Word speedily came to U. S. Minister McDONALD, who promptly laid the facts before the Persian prime minister urgently demanding the capture and punishment of the criminals. The Persian official telegraphed the authorities of the departments and word soon came that the attacking parties had been caught and beheaded.

[The news given above is reported as confirmed by advices received at the State Department in Washington.]

WE CLIP THE FOLLOWING TID-BIT FROM the New York correspondence of the Baltimore Sun:

A story, not quite new, but worthy of being retold, is given in a Paris paper. Some time ago at a fashionable saloon the Baron d'Aimerie was one of a group to whom he was imparting an account of his pedigree, which he claimed was derived from the Pharaohs of Egypt. Just then Baron de Rothschild approached the group and one of its members called out: "Baron, come and let me make you acquainted with the Baron d'Aimerie. He comes of Pharaonic stock and you ought to know each other." "Yes," said the Baron, bowing gravely and addressing d'Aimerie, "I believe our families had some transactions in time past." "Yes," rejoined d'Aimerie, "we have a record that your people when leaving the country borrowed a considerable amount of jewelry of my people, for which I should now like to be repaid with interest." "I remember the transaction," said Rothschild, "but the account was settled at due date. Your fathers received a check on the Banks of the Red Sea."

A GOOD DEAL IS WRITTEN ABOUT THE British House of Lords now-a-days that betrays much ignorance of the subject. In the first place it is called not unfrequently the "English" House of Lords—just as we hear of the "English" Parliament, "English" army, &c., &c. There is no such thing as an English House of Lords. The British House of Lords is that part of the law-making power which has specially in charge the arresting, hasty and injudicious legislation. The present House has had to exercise its functions on the Irish "Home Rule" bill, which had never been before the British people in detail, and which, none better than those who forced it through the Commons understand, would be turned down if submitted to the people, along with those who are the special friends and promoters of it.

THE PRESENT GOVERNMENT OF THE British nation soon will have to face the people. They dare not make their return to office depend upon the Home Rule bill, for on that defeat is assured; their cause may be strengthened by adding some ad-captandum issues, but at best hope is slim, very slim, unless haply they array class against class, the classes lowest in intelligence and wealth against the rich and titled, the prosperous, intelligent and thrifty. It may be "good politics" to do this—it certainly is not the best principle.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS IS A BODY mainly of strong men intellectually as well as otherwise. Distinction in the Lower House is a great force toward elevation to the House of Lords, and it may well be doubted whether the enthusiasm of the government party itself would be sustained were the issue distinctly made. In any event the Lords will hold on and faithfully perform the duties incumbent upon them until the British people decree their abolition; then they, many of them, will go into the House of Commons where their abilities will be recognized in the higher places of that body. Few of us, however, will live to see the abolition of the House of Lords, of Great Britain.

A WEEK OR TWO AGO REV. DR. D. B. GREIGG, pastor of the Twelfth Presbyterian church, of Baltimore, was tried by his Presbytery for usurping authority not conferred upon pastors by the constitution and for overriding his church session. He was acquitted, by his Presbytery, with the injunction, however, not to do so again—or something equivalent to that. We note that, the elders preferring charges, who, virtually, were rebuked by the Presbytery, having retired from church membership along with some sixty-five others, the rotary system of election was adopted and officers chosen to fill the vacated places. Changes were also made in the methods of worship. Hereafter the Apostle's Creed will be repeated by the congregation and the LORD's Prayer chanted by the choir. The church evidently will be run at high pressure hereafter with the pastor at the throttle, and if the elders do not approve they will be rotated.

But for some trouble and sorrow, we should never know half the good there is about us.—Dickens.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by
Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C.,
Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

The Living Links.

"The Crisis of Missions" has a chapter, on this subject, which ought to be printed, in leaflet form and distributed among our churches. A few paragraphs will be all we need for our present purpose, however.

"A great lack in our churches is the lack of living links between them and the foreign field. When one of their number goes abroad and is supported by the Church at home when; contributions to the support of teachers, schools or pupils abroad, bring back letters of a personal character; where, in any way, direct communication and contact are established, by correspondence, with a definite field, it is helpful, in the increase both of knowledge and zeal. The highest ideal of beneficence is that in which our gifts are guided by that sublimely unselfish spirit that embraces the whole world, and is content to pour liberally into the missionary treasury without tracing the streams to their terminus.

But we are all weak saints. It is well to be dis-interested; but the danger, just now, is of being un-interested. The Church has been classified into "Mission, Anti-mission and Omission" Christians, and nothing, practically, reduces the latter two classes more than direct relations with some known and loved missionary. The church that sends out laborers, from its own number, and through them becomes acquainted with the field, its people, wants, discouragements and developments, will grow in intelligence, sympathy, offerings and prayers, for the whole work. Man deeply persuaded that such living links, between the home churches and the mission field, are means of grace. What is desirable is that the churches, at home, and the mission fields and mission workers abroad, should get into contact and communication; so that the bond of sympathy, conscious fellowship, and intelligent interest might grow and become more vital; so that the same influences, which now reach so powerfully the hearts of our devoted secretaries, might thrill and vitalize the dead body of our church membership. Where is the church that supports a missionary in a foreign field, and gets soul-stirring letters, from such a missionary, that does not feel more interest in all the fields and all the workers?" These well worded thoughts are almost irresistible in their force and they have had and are still having great influence. For some years a few of our churches have been working on this plan with manifest advantage.

In 1892, the General Assembly adopted the following, as a part of the report of its Standing Committee: "We cordially recommend the plan, now in use in many of our congregations, of undertaking the support of one or more of the missionaries in the foreign field. This is the plan of carrying on the work, long maintained in that banner Foreign Missionary Church, of the Presbyterian Family, the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, a body about the same size as our own, which gave last year the sum of $400,000 to Foreign Missions."

In a recent communication to the church papers, our esteemed acting secretary informs us, that nearly half of our present force is "supported, in whole or in part, as special objects, by separate churches, groups of churches, missionary societies or individuals." He adds: "Our experience is, that this plan of work always increases the churches' interest in missions, and as a rule, contributions are increased, sometimes a smuch as two or three fold."

It may not be improper to state that the ad interim committee on Foreign Missions has adopted a recommendation "urging and encouraging" this same idea.

It is gratifying to be able to state that North Carolina has an honorable position in this matter; but we will be obliged to return to the subject in order to give particulars.

Some are doing well, but there are many who could and should do better. Why cannot some individuals—some churches or a group of churches rise now to the occasion and provide for more of these living links?

ONE AT A TIME.

One at a time the numerous raindrops patter
On drowsy pools with an incessant chime,
Till lo! an ocean ere the cloudlets scatter—
One at a time.

One at a time the golden sunbeams wander
Adown to earth from yonder cloudless clime,
Till lowliest mountain-tops are smit with splendor—
One at a time.

One at a time upreara the master builder
Stone upon stone with horny hands agrime,
Till shoot aloft the turrets that bewilder—
One at a time.

One at a time the shuttle swiftly flying
Flings thread on thread in throes like throbbing rhyme,
Till glows the tapestry with hues undying—
One at a time.

One at a time each patient, mute endeavor
Is forging character august, sublime,
In souls whose influence shall last forever—
One at a time.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

VI. FIRST DECADE AFTER THE WAR—GROWTH, 1865–1875.

During the War the Board had invesed $46,000 of the funds of the Seminary, in Confederate State bonds. These were of course a total loss, as were also the investments in bank stock. The State securities held by the institution (Virginia and North Carolina bonds) it was thought, would be ultimately productive (as they were), but in that first year of stunning collapse they yielded nothing. The Seminary had not a cent of income. At the end of the year the Intendant reported that the usual tax of $5 on each student for the Contingent Fund had not been collected "for a reason too obvious to need to be mentioned," and that the rooms had been robbed of a good deal of furniture since the War, adding however that the kindness of friends had supplied the deficiency in part, the largest donation being twelve pairs of army blankets from a friend in Baltimore. But this is anticipating. Let us mention the facts in their proper order. In June 1865 a kind Christian lady of Baltimore had visited Hampden-Sidney, bringing with her various substantial evidences of the generosity of her noble people and their interest in our stricken community. She proposed moreover that one of the professors should accompany her home on her return, assuring the faculty that by a personal explanation of the condition of the Seminary, important aid could be secured towards keeping the institution open. Dr. B. M. Smith accordingly returned with her to Baltimore, and there and in New York prosecuted an agency extending over two or three months and resulting in the contribution of nearly $8,000 for the temporary relief of the seminary; and this sum, together with $1,500 collected in Virginia, did tide the institution over that perilous year. Twenty-four students were enrolled in 1865–'66, five of whom had been in the army.

At the meeting of the Board in 1866 the Directors issued an address to the Christian public, stating that it was desirable to raise $100,000 for the seminary as soon as possible. "To effect this, it is proposed to appeal to the benevolent, both North and South. The institution welcomes to its advantages all who seek instruction in the Word of God as interpreted and set forth in the time-honored standards of the Presbyterian Church. * * * * All ultraisms in doctrine and all subjects connected with political government and questions that engender strife, are carefully discarded from the topics of discussion and instruction in the seminary." It would not be well perhaps to inquire too closely whether we have always been able to effect this ideal exclusion of politics from the class room. Seminary professors, like other people, sometimes fail to realize fully their ideals.

During this first decade after the War it became more and more evident that Dr. Smith had come to the kingdom for such a time as this. In 1866 he entered upon that remarkable financial agency which by 1876 resulted in the addition of over $90,000 to the funds. Of this amount $30,000 were given in 1865 by Mr. Cyrus H. McCormick, of Chicago, for the endowment of the professorship of Oriental Literature, and $30,000 by Mr. Henry Young, of New York, in 1871 for the endowment of the professorship of the New Testament Exegesis.

In August, 1866, Mrs. George Brown, of Baltimore, gave $10,000 towards the erection of a building for the Library. This sum was invested, and by 1880 amounted to $16,000, which was then used for the purpose designated, thus securing to the institution a handsome structure of pressed brick, admirably adapted to the preservation and use of our choice collection of books. In the meantime, through the liberality of various friends in New England, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Virginia, this collection had received many valuable additions, and in 1880 the whole number of volumes was about 11,000. Before the erection of this elegant and commodious building, with ample room for 30,000 volumes or more, those already gathered were crowded into bursting shelves in the galleries of the seminary chapel.

Dr. Wilson died August 1st, 1869, having been twenty-eight years professor of Systematic Theology. On the 1st of January, 1870, the Rev. Henry C. Alexander, D. D., entered upon his duties as Professor of Biblical Literature and the Interpretation of the New Testament.

During the latter half of this decade the increase in the number of students was very notable, running up from thirty-five in 1869–'70 to seventy-seven in 1874–'75.

REASONS FOR CO-OPERATION.

MESSRS EDITORS:—The report of the Committee of Conference on Colored Evangelization was intentionally published at once, that it might receive now the comments and criticisms which were expected, in view of the importance of the subject and its essential difficulty and delicacy. If any new departure is to be made it seemed essential that the matter be carefully and critically considered by all the church, and that nothing be done that does not commend itself to the mature, deliberate judgment of both churches. Hence the attention it is receiving North and South is only what is proper, and it is hoped that its consideration may continue in a spirit of dispassionate endeavor to learn and do what is best, until the mind of the Church is fully and properly made up. I think it would be best to also keep in mind that the subject before us is the evangelization of the negroes and our co-operation therein, and not organic union or any other of the many interesting topics suggested by the past or present relations of the two churches. With a view to this as the main question, the committee first sought to determine whether or not it was desirable and practicable to have any kind of co-operation; and before talking of plans and methods our earnest attention was given to two questions:

(1.) Would our association with the Freedman's Board drive off the support now received by our committee from the South?

(2.) Would our sharing in a united control seriously cripple the great work done by the Northern Church?

Answers to these questions were not at once confident or enthusiastic, nor ultimately unanimous. But using our best judgment and taking fairly into account, so far as we could, all the known conditions and circumstances, we concluded that co-operation was desirable, and might be made practicable. We were warned by one of our most honored members, of the opposition to be expected from the South; and were told by the committee-man from the North best informed on the subject, that a considerable part of the $175,000 per annum expended by their Board, comes from those who represent the old Abolition element in their Church; and they might not willingly trust their great endowments, now aggregating half a million dollars in value, to men with whom they had life-long relations of mutual distrust. But a fair view of the whole field could show us no real ground for the opposition on the one hand or the distrust on the other. Looking fairly at it, we saw people at the North who, for the love of God, are spending great sums and working faithfully, trying to make good men and women of our negroes, and see them every day. And this fact that the great work done by them does not always commend itself to the confidence of all our people, seemed a stronger reason why we should desire to help to shape it. If there are mistakes in management, intelligent men here on the ground can show and help correct them. If we are misjudging the management, Southern men on the Board might help to rectify our prejudices. And thus, in time, we might hope that both mistakes and prejudices, if any, could be corrected. So there seemed good ground for our wanting a larger part in directing the education and Christian culture of our negroes, now so largely in other hands. To willingly stand aside and let people a thousand miles away direct, and sometimes through honest ignorance, misdirect it, does not seem the part of the wise man or the patriot. To let our negroes go on as the mass of them now are going, in vice and ignorance to ruin, without helping them to a better life, seems a sin against God and our own best interests; for whether we will or not, our fate is indissolubly linked to theirs. Some may consider that we are the head and they the feet. But if thorough corruption takes hold of the humblest part of the man, the rottenness unchecked will destroy the whole body.

These are the matters that first engaged the attention of the committee, and these are now the questions to be answered by our churches: (1.) Do we of the South desire to have a larger part than at present in the Christian education and uplifting of this people, who are in our houses, at our doors, touching us at every possible point, or do we desire it to remain in the hands of others far away from us? (2.) Are our brethren of the North willing to frankly trust us with a share in their great work? These are the questions, I may say, the only questions, worth considering. The rest is mere detail. Settle these questions affirmatively, and a wiser committee may frame a better plan, throwing ours if you will into the waste basket.

Again, I have heard from the North that there are good people there, who have prejudice against the Pittsburg Board, for the same reasons that are in the minds of some among us, and hence refuse to support it, but would support a management in which we have a part. We have also heard that aid is refused ot our Southern Committee because it seemed able to do so little. A united work under a common control would answer both these objections and might well claim the united and hearty support of all who truly desire to see our negroes helped to become better and more enlightened members of the commonwealth.

One other consideration may be mentioned. From Virginia, Arkansas and Texas, and possibly elsewhere, there have come suggestions that we surrender our work to the Northern Board; and more recently in one of our church papers it is gravely advised "that we turn the entire work over to our richer Northern brethren," rather than adopt the plan of the Conference Committee. Now it seems self evident that if we may surrender all to them a fortiori we may trust them with a part, may share it with them. And, as was frankly stated in the committee room to our friends from the North, we expect our share of influence must ultimately preponderate, whether we have on the new committee six men or sixteen. The seat of a Southern man on that Freedman's Board will not be sought as a place of popularity. None will sit there but good men of assured position at home and abroad, who have our confidence and who will readily engage the confidence of those with whom they act. Being constantly in touch with the work, thoroughly informed, vitally interested, and manifestly and heartily in in earnest, their voices will be heard and their wise counsels followed; simply because they are wise and good, and because (as we must believe) our Northern brethren only desire what is good, and will take right counsel when we get close enough to them to make them see it. The main trouble is we all live too far apart.

One word as to surrendering and refusing to have part in the work. It was not our fault that first the Freedman's Bureau, and after them the Northern churches and societies got between us and our negroes. It will be our fault and our lasting misfortune if now we refuse to regain and hold a position in their confidence which our genuine regard for their real interests for time and eternity entitle us to hold, and which this opportunity may afford us.

It is well also to say in view of the many inferences and supposed results to follow from the report if adopted, that the words of the paper itself contain all that was agreed on—that much and no more. As to the church relations of our colored churches nothing was said; and nothing in the report bears directly or indirectly thereon, inasmuch as the newly constituted Board may not, any more than our present committee, control the action of any Church Court.

This is written and sent to our church papers, with the approval of such of our committee as can be advised with, with a hope that attention may be concentrated on the really important questions and not diverted in the direction of the possible consequences of our working together. We have no zeal for any plan, but simply wish to know and do what the Church deems best. At the same time I fully believe that our plan if cordially approved by the churches is not only practicable, but is the best available under existing conditions. In this opinion I am confirmed by the following sentences which I quote from one better informed on this subject and of larger experience than myself (not of either committee), who writes; "I heartily rejoice in the conference and its results. * * * Each church needs the other in this unspeakably important yet difficult work, and we could greatly multiply results by co-operation. * * * If we will lay aside mutual jealousies and suspicions, and with manly, Christian, brotherly confidence in each other, enter on the waiting work, our churches can do for these perishing millions' that which will make all our hearts glad and will glorify Him whose servants we are."

I may add that our own work is in gratifying condition, both in the field and at the Institute, and more inquiries are made for admission to the Institute than we have means to provide for. Notwithstanding the general depression we will doubtless close the year as usual, free from debt; following the wise and careful policy always observed in this work. And we hope and pray that whatever results follow our conference, the interest in this work may be quickened and deepened in both churches, and that fruit may be seen to God's glory and the good of all of both races in every part of this good land of ours. And however we may think or feel, let us never forget that God's providence has bound us all together for weal or woe.

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

BY J. T. CRUMRINE, SHORTSVILLE, N. Y.

"Where is the blessedness I knew,
When first I saw the Lord,
The soul refreshing view,
Of Jesus and His Word."

"What peaceful hour's I once enjoyed
How sweet their memory still,
But they have left an aching void,
The world can never fill."

If the world can never fill it, does God fill it? If it is filled why is it aching? How many aching voids the world can bear testimony to.

But the question arises, can there be any void where God is? The expressed desire of Christ was that the joy of His disciples should be full. And where God is there is fullness of joy, joy unspeakable and full of glory.

You sing of the joys you knew when first you saw the Lord; why were you happy then? Perhaps you answer thoughtlessly, or from force of habit, "because of the sense of sins forgiven." If that is all, you may well question whether an evil spirit could not have given you that. Was it not a foretaste of heaven—communion with God? The kingdom of God is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Rom. 14: 17. This is the greatest blessing that can come to man on earth. No man can receive it and not know it. No man can lose it and not suffer great loss. It leaves an aching void the world can never fill. The loss of worldly property is not to be compared with it. None realize the loss except those who have enjoyed this sweet communion with God. It is as if a man had been in heaven and had been thrust out—indeed he has been on the threshold of heaven.

"Tongue can never express the sweet comfort and peace of a soul that is filled with His love."

But if we would retain this foretaste of heaven we must make an honest effort to live as if we were in heaven.

The Spirit of God is very easily grieved, and will not compromise with sin by abiding with those who knowingly and willingly commit it, or refuse to repent of it. To repent involves the honest intention of quitting sin. I mention this because there are many who have lost this sweet communion and do not know the reason why. They have been so long without it, and find so many others without it that they have come to view this aching void as a normal condition of Christians, and have learned to look upon those who enjoy continual communion with God with suspicion.

There are many who would return to God and have the aching void filled if they only understood this; if they knew the difficulty. I know this for it has been my pleasure to see a goodly number turn when the matter was explained to them, and sing,

"Blessed assurance, what comfort it gives,
To know that my Redeemer lives."

One in particular, a Prof. Clark, revered and beloved by all, in heaven now, said to me after I had been here a few months I never knew how to return to God till I heard you preach. I knew I had lost something, but I did not know how to get it back. But now I am happy in Jesus, the old time blessedness has returned. I thank God that you ever came here.

It is very common to hear men tell of the joy they once had, but very few say much about present joy. This ought to be just the reverse. We ought to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Not intellectually merely, but experimentally. The chief end of man is to glorify God and to enjoy Him; not hereafter only but now.

How shall we secure this blessing? Just a few words will tell the story, better than many perhaps.

There is scarcely an hour that does not bring us to the junction of two ways; one leads to God, the other away from Him. Sometimes you are in doubt as to the course you may take, but you will hardly see a time when you are not sure that one of the ways would not be wrong, you may safely take it; the other way is always dangerous, and generally wrong for you.

Well as to how to secure the blessedness. Just this. Make up your mind now that you will always take the right hand, toward God. Make up your mind now, I say, not to-morrow. Not when you reach the junction. There are plenty of people who are willing to serve God to-morrow, who will not serve Him to-day. But to-morrow never comes. Now is God's time. No man can resolve to begin to serve God now without receiving an immediate blessing. And as long as you keep your mind firmly fixed in the purpose to serve God at every turn He will continue with you, and bless you more and more. "The path of the just is as a shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

WARMING UP.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

There are several symptoms of a cold church. One of the most unmistakable symptoms is a frigid prayer-meeting. The church-thermometer hangs in that room and when it gets down to zero it makes a Greenland atmosphere. But few attend the service; for a chilly place is never attractive to outsiders. The prayers offered are apt to be languid, formal, without pith or point, and the exhortations are of a stereotyped style that have grown wearisome by long reiteration. The chill of that refrigerator is felt all through the church even to the Sabbath-services; the sermons are turned to icicles and left lying on the floor. It is no wonder if the pastor's heart grows heavy and his spirit faints. Such prayer-meetings are both a cause and an effect of a spiritual declension in any church.

Now a church is simply a collection of individuals. A declension in spiritual life is an individual's sin, and the only place for repentance and recovery is in the heart of the individual backslider. A church-member will often say "my church is cold," when he would hit the nail on the head by confessing honestly "my own heart is cold, and my own spiritual life is becoming barren. It is I that needs a revival." What is the cause of that brother's low spiritual temperature? Precisely the same reason that the weather is cold on this January morning. Yonder sun is as hot a furnace to-day as it is in the middle of July. But our globe lies at a different angle towards the sun from what it does in midsummer. The change is not in the sun, but in our position towards the sun.

God never changes. The Holy Spirit is promised to-day to those who seek aright as abundantly as He was promised to the apostolic Church. The reason why a Christian is cold or why a church gets frozen up is that they have swung away from Jesus Christ, and have put themselves in the same postion towards Him that our globe has towards yonder solar furnace. When a church-member becomes worldly and indifferent to his spiritual duties he throws himself out of the life-giving warmth and out of the sunlight of Christ's countenance. His winter is of his own making; his sins have sent him down below zero. While in that condition he has no "joy in the Holy Spirit," no power in his prayers and no influence in drawing sinners to Christ. In fact he needs to be re-converted himself before he can do anything to convert others.

The first duty of a cold Christian or a cold church is to confess backsliding sincerely and penitently and to get back to Christ. Let him re-open his closet-door and go down before his Saviour with Peter's penitential spirit. Let him lay hold of neglected duties. The Master is saying to him "I have somewhat against thee, because thon hast left thy first love; repent therefore and do thy first works." As soon as any cold church member puts himself into a sincerely humble and penitent attitude towards Christ and says "now Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" the blessing will descend upon him. A fresh inflow of Christ's promised spirit will rekindle his love, awaken sympathy for perishing souls, inspire his zeal, and bring him up to that steady enthusiasm which is the normal condition of every healthy working Christian. He has been all along quenching the Holy Spirit; and now he is ready to co-operate with the Holy Spirit.

It is a well attested fact that revivals commonly begin in a few hearts—sometimes in a single heart. Dr. Spencer, in his admirable "Pastor's Sketches" tells us that an excellent old lady in his church once stopped him and said to him "a revival is coming!" On being questioned as to the reason for the prediction, she replied that every day she overheard the fervent prayers of a lame old deacon who lived just behind her garden. "If he can't leave his house and work" said she, "he can pray, and his prayers will be answered." Dr. Spencer records that a revival did come, and more than a hundred persons in his congregation were "born of the Spirit." The first revival I ever had in my first charge began with the faithful conversation of a young girl with a young man. The godly mother of the youth came to me with her heart full, and I proposed a special prayer-service that very evening in her house. She and I went out, and invited our people, and it was the most wonderful meeting I had ever attended. The Holy Spirit descended upon us, not in drops, but in a deluge. A few hearts on fire with the love of Christ will kindle a whole church.

Sometimes a pastor's heart gets into such a holy flame that he changes—by God's blessing—the atmosphere of his church. When Dr. Thomas H. Skinner was pastor of the Arch Street church, Philadelphia, he got his elders together and they sought a baptism of fire from heaven. It came: and it spread through the whole congregation. Charles G. Finney used to get into a glow himself and then "the fire burned." I am now reading the lately published "Diary and Letters" of my beloved friend the late Dr. Andrew A. Bonar of Glasgow—the biographer of M'cCheyne. The book shows that he kept up an anthracite heat in his ministry by perpetual prayer. He had an immense power of the knees. On a certain Saturday he writes in his diary, "desire appeared to me all day to be prayer smoking as incense in my heart." It was the same way with McCheyne. The walls of his study were witnesses of his prayers; and he lived before his flock just as he prayed before his God.

Much depends on the kind of fire that is used, if a church is to be warmed up. A lucifer-match of mere human effort may start a bonfire of pine shavings; but, as in the case of Elijah at Mount Horeb, "the Lord is not in the fire." Don't send first for any man; send for the Holy Spirit. Reliance on the best man or measure is fatal. Religious machinery ends in empty clatter unless the "living Spirit is in the wheels." Jesus Christ promises to His faithful followers the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire. The humblest private Christian may have that as truly as the most eloquent pastor or evangelist. God answers honest prayer and hard work. Whenever the Spirit kindles a spark, co-operate with Him, and fan it into a flame. Genuine revivals often have small beginnings. Have you a seed of heavenly fire in your soul? Then go out and warm others!

God Knows.

"I know thy works and where thou dwellest." It ought to cheer the Christian heart to remember that nothing is hidden from God. Our best friends may never suspect how loyal we are to God, but he knows. We live in the midst of strangers. We think we know certain people, but we do not. Others think they know us, but they are mistaken. The eyes with which we behold only see through a glass darkly. We stand in a low valley, and can only see to the foot hills. If we could only get higher up what visions we should have. If we could only look deeper into the hearts of people it wouldn't be so hard to love some of them as it is. We should behold marching armies and great battle-fields, deadly conflicts and grand victories where now we see nothing but inactivity and apparent indifference. Our neighbors never see us in battle. They know nothing of the long marches we make, nor of the forces we fight, but God sees, and God knows. He knows our hearts, and he knows our works. He knows just how much of love and loyalty there has been in every act of our lives, and some day he will reward us according to our deeds.

Trouble and Prayer.

BY C. H. WETHERBEE.

They frequently go together. The first earnest prayer of many a man had its instrumental prompting in some form of blistering trouble. Trouble has been God's angel of mercy, whose hand, though seemingly rough and harsh, has been tender and gracious in its purpose to awaken a dormant soul and bring it into penitent communion with its God. Very significantly does Isaiah say, respecting the Israelites: "Lord, in trouble have they visited thee; they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them." When trouble visited them, then they visited God.

God first visited them, rapping at the door of their hearts with a troublesome knock, and then they visited the throne of his grace, confessing their sins and praying for pardon. This has been the history of thousands. Alarming sickness has visited their homes, laying harsh hands on dear parent or loved child, threatening him with death. Then prayer has been thought of. Perhaps the whole family had been prayerless. But now the wife prays God to spare her husband, or it may be that the wife is ill, and her husband prays God to restore her to health. And the ill one also prays for himself, promising that, if restored, the whole heart shall be the Lord's forever. Oh, how many sick-beds have become altars of prayer! The illness of the body has been the means of health to the soul. Pains have led to prayers.

But it does not necessarily follow that because trouble occasions prayer, the praying one will continue a life of prayer. There have been many sad instances which have shown that, as soon as one has been fully released from his pressing trouble, he has ceased praying. This is true of those who were never truly converted to God. They were like Pharaoh who, when the great plagues were upon him, asked Moses to pray for him, but as soon as the plagues were taken off then he became still harder in heart. Alas for such men: But blessed is he who, when some trouble has driven him to the throne of grace, continues to pray, having accepted Christ as his Saviour and Lord, and henceforth blesses God for the ministry of trouble.—Southern Presbyterian.

Companionship of Christ.

The life journey never can be dreary or lonesome if we but realize His companionship. "Did not our hearts burn within us while He talked with us by the way?" said the two disciples when they reached Emmaus. The road may have seemed long and tiresome to them before, but how fast the furlongs were measured off on that Easter afternoon! It was a charming walk from the charm of such society. We may have the same blessed companionship if we keep a clear conscience and a praying heart. Begin each morning with a cordial invitation to the Master to come and walk with you all the day. Think of Him as close beside you at every step. The busy bustle of the counting room did not hinder the fellowship with Christ of such Christian merchants as Samuel Morley and William E. Dodge and Samuel Schieffelin. One of these men was so absorbed once in recounting his happy labor in a revival of religion among some Pennsylvania coal miners that he said to me: "Let those people outside of my counting room wait. They come to talk money, and I am telling you about Christ's work for souls."

Many a farmer has communed with Jesus as he followed his plow, until the acres that he trod had the smell of a field the Lord had blessed. Many a pious housewife has whiled away the hours of domestic toil as she sang:

"He leadeth me! O blessed thought!
O words with heavenly comfort fraught!
Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
Still 'tis His hand that leadeth me."

This realized presence of Christ ought to shame us from sin and be a constant stimulus to duty. Does an irritating vexation prompt an angry retort? One look from our all-forgiving Master ought to cool our heated temper. Are we ever tempted to do a sharp transaction, on the ground that "others do the same thing?" The Master's voice is, "Provide things honest in the sight of all men." And so the sin-hating eye of our Saviour is on us every hour. "Ye are my witnesses." "Be ye holy as I am holy." A glorious honor and a blessed privilege is it for us to represent our divine Master here in this world and to have His daily fellowship. If we thus keep step with Him all through our life journey, He will at last open to us the door of our heavenly home and say to us: "Where I am, ye shall be also forevermore."—Theodore L. Cuyler.

5. It places weapons in the hands of all to defend the truth.

6. It affords a channel of communication between brethren.

7. It throws light upon obscure questions of practical interest.

8. It cultivates a taste for reading among parents and children.

9. It awakens interest for the salvation of souls.

10. It gives the more important current news of general interest.

Trouble.

In time of trouble there is something to do more than merely to express sympathy. Nearly always some real help is possible, and to discover what that is and to extend it simply and generously is the task of every one who wishes to be a friend in time of need. But this takes not only love and compassion and good wishes, but also judgment, discrimination, thought and patience. It is largely because these qualities are so seldom brought into exercise at such times that sympathy so often seems powerless for any efficient help. Each case must be studied by itself, its past causes fathomed, its present grief appreciated, its probable future effects weighed, the possible means of relief considered, before true help can be extended. The habit of thoughtfulness is easy enough when we are contemplating an enterprise of our own; why then should it be put aside when we approach so difficult and so delicate a task as that of giving real succor and comfort to others in time of need?—The Christian at Work.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in the Mission Rooms on Monday, February 12th, at 11 a. m., and continued in session until 12 m., on Tuesday.

Miss Mary B. Torrance, of Charlotte, N. C., was appointed as a missionary to China, with the view of her going to assist Mrs. Stuart in the school at Hangchow.

Miss Lizzie Moore, of Henderson, N. C., was appointed as a missionary to Japan, to go with her brother, Rev. John W. Moore, when the way is open for him to return.

Miss Lucy J. Gantt, of Birmingham, Ala., was appointed as a missionary to Africa. She expects to go about the first of May as the wife of Rev. W. H. Sheppard.

Rev. H. P. Hawkins, now a student at Tuscaloosa Institute, was also appointed to go with Mr. Sheppard when he returns.

The committee had long and interesting conferences both with Mr. Sheppard, and with Mr. Rowbotham, who has just returned from Africa, concerning the present condition and outlook of our mission at Luebo.

There are now about seventy native connected with our station at Luebo, who are under the care and training of our missionaries. The expectation is, that in the course of time, we will find among these natives persons who will be prepared to go out as native preachers, and establish stations in the surrounding country and villages.

Mr. Rowbotham states that there are the most friendly relations between our missionaries and all the people in this region of the country; and that when the natives once come to our station, either as gifts from native chiefs, or by ransom of those who are put up for sale, they show no disposition to leave. Sometimes they go off and pay visits to neighboring points, but invariably they come back.

The probability is that when Mr. Sheppard returns he will open a new station at the capital of the celebrated Lukenga, the place which was the scene of some of those marvelously interesting incidents which he relates in his addresses as occurring during his first visit to that point.

Reports were received from the station at Kochi, Japan, and from the Rev. W. M. Thompson, who is working at Maranhao, Brazil.

Mr. McIlwaine reports that during the year, in work connected with the Kochi station, one hundred and forty-nine adults and twenty-six children have been baptized. Very few Presbyterian churches in our Assembly have received so large an addition as this.

A letter from the Rev. R. B. Grinnan was read, stating that he would leave Yokohama March 16th, on his return to this country.

Work in the Macon Field :—Rev. J. T. Wade writes : I assisted Bro. Johnston, a Methodist minister last week at Snow Hill, preaching morning and evening, and although the mud, rain, and dark nights were against us, a large congregation was built up. Christians that had grown very cold, were revived, warmed and strengthened, and sinners were convicted, one being happily converted. The meeting is still in progress. Bro. Lentz, the former pastor of the Franklin church rendered us good service in the meeting. He and his faithful wife have built up a large and flourishing school near Snow Hill. We should love to see many more such schools in this mountain country.

Our work in the Macon field was, at first, rather discouraging, but is now quite promising. It will take time, patience, and persistent labor to build up Presbyterianism here numerically, from the simple fact that the country to a great extent is in the hands of other denomination, but it is sufficiently popular to make every honest lick count mightily for God.

The Methodist here especially are a noble people, intelligent and liberal, and we work together to the glory of God. Would that we could find everywhere and among all denominations such a spirit of liberality, self-sacrifice, and love for Christ as is now manifested by many Methodist throughout this country. The spirit of John the Baptist, "He must increase, but I must decrease" ought to be the spirit of all Christian workers, and the nearer we approach to it, the better are we fitted to honor God's cause.

Milton :—This church has enjoyed a season of special blessing, beginning with the week of prayer. Services were conducted each night by the pastor, Rev. Wm. S. Campbell, assisted by the ministers of the other denominations of the town. Then Rev. Wm. Black, of Munroe, came and preached twice a day for ten days. His sermons were clear and powerful presentations of the simple gospel of God's love for sinners. When other engagements called him away the interest was so great that it was not deemed wise to close the meeting. For five days the pastor continued them and then Rev. L. B. Johnston, of South Boston, Va., came to his assistance. His sermons were able and pointed and made a marked impression upon the large congregations, as did Mr. Black's. For four weeks the whole town came together day after day to hear the gospel preached in its purity and simplicity, without the use of any machine methods. There were some features that were very striking in connection with this meeting. The congregations were uniformly very large up to the last. Christian people were more deeply awakened to a sense of their responsibility than ever before, and the various denominations were more closely united than was ever known here, where they have always worked very harmoniously together. Backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners were brought to Christ.

The tangible results have thus far been two backsliders reclaimed and four new members received into the Presbyterian church with more to follow, and one received into the Episcopal church. But a no less visible result is the elevated spiritual life of the church. One beautiful instance of fraternal love and fellowship deserves special mention. During the meeting the church held its regular quarterly communion service. The Methodists closed their church in order that they might unite with the Presbyterians in observing it. The Episcopalians had no appointment for that day. So these three congregations gathered together around the table of their common Lord, the pastor of each taking a part in the service. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

First Church, Greensboro :—Through the active efforts of Rev. E. W. Smith, co-pastor, a Christian Endeavor Society of about forty was formed on the first Sunday of this month, which has proven to be very interesting and profitable already. The same day a Junior Endeavor, of some thirty was also formed and much interest is felt and work is being done, by the various committees, that will tell for good. The choir too of this church which is specially large and good since we entered the new church, was unusually full on these two Sabbaths. There were seventeen or eighteen voices and five instruments were employed. Some of these instruments were in the hands of little girls of the Brockman music school, who now compose part of the choir. S.

Davidson :—The meeting which Bro. Pearson has been and is still conducting has been a gracious one indeed Just what the results are to be, it is hard to tell as yet, but God's Spirit has been working in the hearts of a large number, and I suppose the number converted or reclaimed would go over one hundred in our little community. The services are held this week in the Commencement Hall and, except when the storm prevented, it has been filled every night. May God grant that ere this meeting close not a student or citizen shall be unsaved! Many are the hearts that have already been gladdened by the conversion of dear ones. All the praise shall be God's for nothing but His wondrous grace could enable so many of these dear young men to confess Christ.

Spout Springs :—Is the name of a station on the C. F. & Y. V. Railroad, in Harnett county. There is a large planing-mill there employing a number of hands, and there is no church of any denomination within six miles. Rev. D. D. McBryde has been preaching there in a schoolhouse, once a month, for some time, and a Sunday-school and prayer-meeting has been regularly kept up by a faithful Presbyterian and a good Methodist brother. Mr. McBryde began a meeting there a few weeks ago and one of the neighboring pastors went to his help. It was a precious season of revival and awakening. There were twenty-four confessions of Christ, several who had been members of the various churches re-dedicated themselves to God, and at the close of the meeting a petition was signed, of forty-six names, asking for the organization of a Presbyterian church, the signers all wishing to join. Fayetteville Presbytery has appointed a commission to organize a church there in March. McK.

A Colored Presbyterian Work for Wilkes :—Rev. S. G. Walker writes : On the 10th inst., I met eight colored men in the town of North Wilkesboro for the purpose of considering and devising plans for the establishment of a colored Presbyterian church and school in that town. These men own homes, six of them have farms naturally adapted for great improvement. They are raising and training their children on their farms. Six of these men are heads of families comprising sixty persons, among whom are fifteen Christians and nine of these will join the Presbyterian church whenever the way is clear. Forty five children belong in these families and six of these are professing Christians and will join our church. It was proposed at this meeting to attempt the erection of a building for a church with a basement underneath for school purposes. Fifteen thousand feet of lumber, eight thousand shingles and two thousand bricks are wanted for this work. These men pledged themselves for eight thousand four hundred feet of this lumber. It is believed that the remainder will be given by friends and that the entire amount will be in sight by the first of April. A beautiful and very desirably located lot (an acre of land) for a building site has been given us by the North Wilkesboro Land Improvement Company, with provision for more if needed for our contemplated Industrial School, later to be attached to our present enterprise. This point surpasses any other in Northwestern North Carolina for a school of higher education and training, being the centre of a county, having seven other contiguous counties entirely destitute of any such advantages.

DOMESTIC.

Rev. J. T. Jenkins pastor of Brooklyn Baptist church, Wilmington, N. C., has resigned his charge. He will enter the evangelistic field.

The Lutherans of Wilmington, N. C., have decided to rebuild the Lutheran Hall and Sunday-school room destroyed by fire a few weeks ago.

The Seamen's Friend Society of Wilmington at their late annual meeting re-elected Mr. George Harris, President, and the same officers and standing committees or nearly so. The arrangements for worship were rearranged. Rev. Dr. James Carmichael was re-elected chaplain with Rev. A. D. McClure as assistant chaplain.

The first woman preacher in the Congregational Church was ordained in Boston on Wednesday of last week. She is the wife of Rev. Geo. A. Frost pastor of the Orthodox church. The council reported unanimously on her examination and no objection was made to her ordination. She assisted her husband, then in feeble health, while studying for the ministry, and she took a full course at Andover Seminary. She has from time to time assisted her husband in preaching. She will be associated with her husband as co-pastor.

THE WACO CHURCH

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Is now nearly completed. All that remains to do is to put in the wainscotting, and then lathe and plaster the walls. Painting will have to be postponed for the present and benches will be made by-and-by. We expect, providence permitting, to borrow seats, and hold our next regular monthly services in our own house, the second Sunday in March and Saturday night before. Through the liberality and energy of our brethren, who have given their time and labor freely, we have been enabled to push the work thus far without incurring any considerable debt. We owe less than $10, which is more than covered by local subscriptions.

This church, though small, being only 26x40 feet, is every way creditable to our denomination. It is a model of neatness and symmetry. It has a graceful belfry, rising some 15 feet above the roof; vestibule 8x5 feet, and a pulpit recess. I think I am justified in claiming that it is the neatest church in Cleveland county, outside of Shelby.

But it is important that the building be finished as soon as possible. The brethren of the church and neighborhood have done nearly all they can do in the way of providing material. They will need not less than $150 to prepare the house for dedication.

RECEIPTS.

Since our last acknowledgment through the columns of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, I have received $1 from a young lady of the First church of Concord, and $2 from a gentleman and wife of Jamestown church. May God bless these dear friends. This makes in all $9 received in answer to my "wails". And I hope Brother Campbell has received something more by this time. Brother, let us take Bro. Dalton's advice, and "keep on wailing." Bro. Dalton and wife lead the van in the subscription to the Forest City and Cherryville churches—their subscriptions being the first actually paid in for the churches at those two points. Lots have been selected at both points, and we hope in a few weeks to have the deeds in our possession. And then—I shall proceed to do some more "wailing." If Bro. McLaurin will give the space, I shall "cry aloud and spare not" till my churches are built and paid for.

And now are there not some others of the Lord's steward's who can and will spare us something out of their tithes for these much needed churches ?

"There is that scattereth and yet increaseth : and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." Will not some who read this put God to the proof by sending their contributions to the Waco church ?

NASHVILLE.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

Evangelist W. R. Gales, began a meeting in Tulip Street Methodist church, Nashville, Tenn., on the 21st of January. The Woodland street Presbyterian, Cumberland Presbyterian and Baptist churches united in the meeting. The services were held in the Methodist church because it furnished the largest auditorium. From the first Mr. Gales made a most favorable impression, and the preaching soon took strong hold on the hearts of the people. He is intensely earnest in his manner, thoroughly sound in doctrine, fearless and uncompromising in statement. He does not cover a wide area in his preaching. Over and over he traverses the same territory. He fires his shot at the same spot until he batters the barrier down. Sin and salvation are his constant theme; sin to be absolutely, unconditionally abandoned, salvation to be had by a loving trust in Christ. No one could be more insistent that a vital union with Christ is the only escape from hell. Never a service passed that he did not demand that every one present should publicly declare whether he loved and trusted Christ. He iterated and reiterated the admonition that in the Church did not mean in Christ. He virtually identified the assurance of faith with saving faith. No one must stand up and proclaim himself a Christian unless he could confidently say, "I love and trust Christ and am trying to live for him." Such preaching stirred many a careless Christian to prayerful heart-searching, and the number who confessed themselves backsliders and renewed their vows was one of the conspicuous features of the meeting. The pastors were surprised to see some of their most trustworthy members coming forward to signify that their hearts had been quickened into painful apprehension as to their status before God.

Up to date one hundred and fifty members have been added on confession of faith to the four co-operating churches. Many more will yet join, probably running the number up to two hundred. This is a grand showing, and something to be thankful for, but the general remark is that the blessing which came to those in the church was greater cause for thankfulness than the blessing which came to those on the outside. Without approving this sentiment, it is certainly cause for gratitude that careless Christians have been inspired with new earnestness, and the churches stirred to fresh activity. No evangelist has made a more favorable impression on the people who have attended this meeting than Bro. Gales. He will ever live in their grateful memories.

One thing of merely curious interest. Is it not strange that the Episcopal Church will suffer one of its laymen to join with Christian pastors of other churches in the work of saving sinners, and sternly forbid its preachers from such co-operation? Does it not greatly restrict one's liberties to take orders in that church ? It has long been proverbial for its laxity of discipline over its private members, and this is a striking instance of it, actually permitting one of them to preach in a Methodist church and to join with Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist preachers in an effort to bring sinners to Christ! No apostolic succession in the way. No ecclesiastical dignity to maintain. No mediaeval, superstitions, non-sensical, mythological traditionalism to hamper. If the good Lord would only deliver the preachers from the thraldom of patristic darkness into the light and liberty of the children of God, so that they like this devoted layman could draw near and shake hands with God's other children there would be some prospect of the much-talked of union. But the idea of seeking union with those with whom they cannot even affiliate is preposterous beyond the limits of language to express. While Bro. Gales was doing his noble work, the preachers of his church were writing over to the Bishop of North Carolina, to make inquiries into his strange conduct, and to question his right to invade their parish. But I have wandered from the subject. We have had a grand meeting, and we still have Bro. Gales in our city. He began a meeting yesterday in South Nashville. CLARK.

WHAT OTHERS SAY ABOUT CO-OPERATION.

MY DEAR SIR :—I cannot resist the inclination to thank you for the prompt and distinct position you have taken, in your issue of the 8th, in disapproval of the action of our Assembly's Committee of Conference on the Colored Evangelistic work, and I trust, from all our church papers, there will go forth no "uncertain sound" of any kind—but unqualified disapprobation. Our committee has not only surrendered the established policy of our Church in this great work, but have virtually introduced, or permitted to be introduced again, this strife-breeding question of organic union.

You well say, the tendency of their action will be to "utterly palsy the word they have in hand."

I am indignant at any effort, from any source, to introduce into the peaceful and harmonious confines of our beloved Church this fruitful cause of strife and variance. Let there be such unqualified dissent be expressed all over our Church that the decision of the Nashville Assembly shall be a "foregone conclusion." Let us be done with these committees of conference and all other efforts to get others to do our own work.

Colored Evangelization is a duty laid upon us. Let us meet it in a manly, hopeful spirit, and to the extent of our ability, in humble reliance upon Divine guidance and support—for our responsibility goes no farther. Again thanking you for you, prompt and timely words, I remain

Yours truly,
J. M. ROGERS.

COLORED CO-OPERATION.—Well, as proposed by the committees of the two Assemblies, I am opposed to it. Why the Northern Church should say, give us fourteen committee men and the South seven, I can't see, especially as the work to be done, is located in the South mainly. For this reason it should have more than seven to direct in its affairs. I would, that some better arrangement could be made than the Southern Church is able to do, so as to reach the masses of colored people with the Gospel, but if there is not to be a more nearly equal representation and say, in what the South can do, then we had better let well enough alone until better terms can be made. When I first heard of it I was struck favorably with the idea, but as it now looks I cannot see harmony or good to result. ELDER.

"THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH AND SCHOOL HOUSE FUND."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

We are gratified to report that we have received in response to our circular letter some $250 for the church and school building fund at Valdese. But few of the churches of the Synod have responded. This amount has been forwarded to us chiefly by individual contributors. We hope that the pastors will not fail to read the circular letter to their congregations at an early day, and give the people an opportunity to contribute to the worthy object. Brethren, don't wait to make a strong appeal or to secure a large contribution. An ordinary Sunday collection from each church in the Synod will raise a sum more than sufficient.

March 4th.—Selling the Birthright.

Gen. xxv. 27-34. Commit vss. 31-34.

Golden Text.—The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. Luke xii. 23.

Topic.—Esau sells his birthright.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. Read the account of Sarah's death and burial (ch. xxiii). Note the care as to the title to the burying ground, showing Abraham's faith as to his descendant,s possessing the land. Read the wooing of Rebekah (chap. xxiv). The death of Abraham (xxv. 7-10). The birth of Esau and Jacob (xxv. 21-26.)

Second Step. Master the points of the story, noting the favoritism of the parents, the infirmity of Isaac's increasing age showing itself in sensuality as compared with the spirituality of earlier years (compare xxiv. 63, 67, and his part on Mt. Moriah), and estimate carefully the characters of the two sons.

*Third Step. Study special terms requiring explanation:

vs. 27. A plain man: The original is the ordinary word for perfect. It does not allude to his moral character, but to his habits of life, as indicated by the following expression "dwelling in tents." He did not lead a a wild, adventurous life, but had a settled habitation and attended regularly and systematically to his business affairs. A correct man probably gives about the right idea. It was this that gave him so much the advantage of Esau.

vs. 29. Sod pottage: that is, was making a broth of red beans.

vs. 30. That same red pottage: literally, "that red, that red"—a childish petulance that is too much toned down in our version. The The name Red (Edom) stuck to him and to his descendants ever afterwards.

vs. 32. I am at the point to die; the exaggeration natural to one used to yield to impulse and dominated by bodily appetite.

vs. 33. What profit: he had no idea of the spiritual blessings of the birthright, which would be of equal value in life or death.

vs. 34. Despised; evidently the writer had no such picture in his mind as is sometimes drawn of Esau actually about to die, and Jacob denying him what would save life until he had driven a hard bargain. Jacob's conduct was mean enough, but it was the meanness of a cool, calculating nature taking advantage not of his brother's extremity, but of his moral weakness. The redeeming feature in Jacob was that he valued what Esau depised.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the narrative and compare it with the one below:

SUMMARY. As Esau and Jacob grew up the difference in their appearance was manifested in their character and pursuits; Esau led the rough life of a hunter, Jacob the regular life of a man of quiet habits. Esau was the favorite of Isaac because of the venison that he relished while Jacob was the favorite and companion of Rebekah. One day when Jacob was making a pottage of red lentiles, Esau came in faint, and his appetite being stimulated by the sight and smell, he cried out for it. Jacob first bargained with him for his birthright in exchange. Esau says it will do him no good if he dies of hunger, and when Jacob makes him swear, does so He then ate and drank and went away, valuing a little satisfaction to his appetite, more than the blessing of the inheritance of the promise.

Fifth Step. Take up the topics of the lesson and study them in the light of other passages.

1. The Birthright.
   (a) Naturally (as the word indicates) the right of the firstborn, Gen. xliii. 33; xlviii. 17, 18.
   (b) But alienated for various causes: xxi. 12; xxv. 23; xlviii. 14, 19; xlix. 3-10—where Reuben, Simeon, and Levi are passed by for sin, and the leadership belonging to the birthright devolved on Judah, while the "double portion" was given to Joseph, xlviii. 5, 22; 1 Chron. v. 1, 2.
   (c) Privileges involved in general—
   Headship of his brethren, xxvii. 29, 37; xlix. 8; Num. i. 4.
   Double inheritance, xlviii. 22; Deut. xxi. 17.
   Special blessing and love, xxvii. 1-4, 19; xlviii. 18-20; Ex. iv. 22, 23; Zech. xii. 10.
   (d) Specific privileges in this case—
   Inheritance of the promise and covenant priveleges of Abraham, xvii. 7, 8; xxviii. 13, 14; Heb. xi. 9.
   (e) Christ the final heir, Col. i. 18; Eph. i. 20-23.
   (f) And we with Him, Rom. viii. 17.
2. The Birthright lost and won.
   Esau lost by despising—.
   (a) In indulgence of the flesh, xxv. 32, 34; Heb. xii. 16.
   (b) In leaving the land of promise, xxxvi. 6-8.(Compare xiii. 11-13.)
   Jacob won
   Not by scheming, which brought him only exile (xxvii. 43, 44); bondage (xxxi. 39-41); fear (xxxii. 7, 11); humiliation before his brother xxxiii. 3); recognition of him as his lord (xxxiii. 5, 10, 13, 14).
   But
   (a) In fulfilment of God's promise, xxv 23; xxviii. 13, 14; xxxi. 42.
   (b) By Jacob's choice of God, xxviii. 20-22.
   (c) And self surrender to God, xxxii. 9, 10; 24-28.

Sixth Step. To make the lesson practical note how each one of the heirs of the promise was led to make a surrender of self and to rely wholly upon God before his inheritance was confirmed—Abraham in leaving his country and trusting God for his heir and entrusting his heir to God, Isaac in his voluntary surrender upon the altar, and now Jacob. It was a spiritual inheritance and each of the heirs must experience the spiritual birth that is evidenced by self-surrender and renunciation of the world by faith. John iii. 5, 6; Mark viii. 34-38; 1 John v. 4. Note also that there is a period of probation within which the choice must be made. Heb. xii. 17.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

When all books are closed, the connection, Topic and Golden Text recited, and the story of the lesson drawn out from the scholars, then open Bibles and explain the points of difficulty. After that take up the Bible Reading, adapting it to the age of your class, but let all classes have a taste of it. Be careful to bring out clearly and impressively the greatly overlooked point that Esau did not lose the birthright by Jacob's cunning but by his own indifference and self-indulgence, and that Jacob never really gained it until he gave up scheming and surrendered his will to God. A good text to leave in their minds is Matt. vi 33.

*Those who have been following this course will note a transposition in the order of the third and fourth steps. There were some reasons for the other order, but we are satisfied this is the more logical and natural.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF FEB. 8.

22. Entertaining angels unawares, Heb. xiii. 2.
23. Our Lord speaks of Sodom and Gomorrah—
   (a) In connection with the cities that refused his messengers, Matt. x. 15.
   (b) In connection with those who had seen his works, Matt. xi. 23, 24.
   (c) In connection with His own Second Coming, Luke xvii. 28, 29.
24. Remember Lot's wife, Luke xvii. 32.

(There is considerable confusion in some of the answers about parallel passages in the different gospels, thus Mark vi. 11 is given as "another reference" in answer to Q. 24, when it is the same as Matt. x. 15. So Luke x. 12 is the same as Matt. xi. 24. Luke xvii. 28 is a part of the reference to Sodom in vs. 29, and should not be given as a distinct allusion in answer to Q. 24. If our correspondents would write a distinct answer as we have requested instead of simply giving the reference, this confusion could be easily avoided. When we ask for references by "our Lord" we always refer to what Jesus said on earth, and references in the O. T., and Epistles are necessarily excluded.)

NEW PRIZE.

Dr. Frank Robinson, of Lowell, N. C., offers in accordance with our suggestion a second prize to be given to the Sunday-school scholar from Mecklenburg answering the greatest number of Prize Questions. The count will begin from March 1st, so that new candidates may enter, and will be awarded January 1st. The prize will be a Teacher's Bible similar to the one offered by the paper for the whole Synod. Of course if the Synodical prize is won in Mecklenburg, Dr. Robinson's prize will be given to the second highest in the Presbytery. We hope the same will be done for other Presbyteries.

"THE MOORE FUND."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Please acknowledge the receipts of the following gifts to the fund for sending Rev. J. W. Moore and sister to Japan:

Feb. 9th, Mrs. John Reed, $5.00; Miss Martha Brown, $5; Miss Etta Brown, $5. Feb. 10th, ——— Fayetteville, $1. Feb 11th, Robt. W. George, $100. Feb. 12th, Through Mrs John Reed, $10 Amount previously acknowledged, $62. Total, $188.

Is it not possible for the ladies missionary societies of the Synod to undertake to raise $10 each for this fund? If not this much yet at least something additional to their usual fund.

Again, I ask are there not some churches or some individuals who can pledge $100 or $50 or $25 to be paid quarterly in advance for Mr. Moore's salary and for that of his sister?

Brethren, act promptly in this matter—that these missionaries may go at once. If they do not go before the middle of March they will be obliged for prudential reasons to delay until after mid-summer. "The King's business requireth haste."

Your fellow servant in the gospel,

ALFRED T. GRAHAM.

Davidson, Feb. 15th.

The following were the responses of Ashpole and Iona churches to the request of Rev. Joseph Evans for them to unite with him in asking the Presbytery to dissolve the pastoral tie that existed between him and them:

WHEREAS, Rev. Joseph Evans for more than nine years the beloved pastor of Ashpole is called to labor in another part of the Lord's vineyard, and

WHEREAS, He feels it his duty to accept this call and enter upon the new work to which God in His providence directs him, and has asked for a severance of the tie that binds him to this church. Therefore,

Resolved 1st. That we as a church, acting from sincere convictions of duty do accept his resignation and unite with him in his request to Presbytery, though in so doing we are conscious of the great loss we shall sustain, and though our hearts are deeply pained at the thought of separation.

2d. That we bear our testimony to his faithfulness in our midst as an expounder of God's word, as a most zealous worker in the Sabbath-school, as a kind, sympathizing pastor and as a tireless and consecrated laborer in the great cause of missions. And we feel that the good he has accomplished here eternity alone can reveal. We pray that God's richest blessing may ever attend him and his family in the field to which they are called.

The above was unanimously adopted in a congregational meeting held in Ashpole church. DUNCAN SINCLAIR, M.D., Chairman.

Feb. 11th, 1894.

At a meeting of Iona church, held Feb. 11th, 1894, called to consider the resignation of Rev. Joseph Evans as their pastor, the following was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, We have unbounded confidence in the desire of our pastor to serve God in that way and location that he can accomplish most. And convinced that by earnest prayer he seeks divine guidance in all things. And that however pleasantly situated, he will follow what he believes to be the will of God. Therefore,

Resolved 1st. That we accept his resignation feeling that in doing so that we are submitting to the will of an All-wise Providence.

2d. That during the ten years in which he has labored among us that our intercourse with him, in public and private life has been exceedingly pleasant—that we have always had reason to rely upon him with the fullest confidence and that it is with great reluctance and many misgivings for the future that we now release him. And further we commend him to those among whom he goes to labor, as a most able preacher, a faithful and considerate pastor, an untiring worker and a Christian who will always dare to do right.

In Atlanta, Ga., Saturday, 10th inst., Col. JOSEPH A. McLEAN, of Gastonia, N. C., in the 64th year of his age. He had been unwell for sometime, but while enroute to Decatur, Ga., to visit a son went to the Grady Hospital for a day or two of rest. Early Saturday afternoon there came a decided change for the worse and he died suddenly about 5 o'clock.

In Cameron, N. C., Feb. 3d, Mrs. ANN FERGUSON, relict of late Norman Ferguson, in the 89th year of her age.

In early life she joined the Presbyterian church, and lived an exemplary member thereof until the summons came calling her from the Church militant to the Church triumphant.

She was kind and thoughtful as to the comfort of others, and full of tender sympathy for the poor and needy; and none such went away from her house hungry or empty; especially if regarded as real objects of charity. She filled with fidelity, the delicate, responsible and oftentimes very difficult, position of mother and step-mother. She leaves behind four step-sons with children, and children's children, who revere her memory. Of her own children, (five in number,) only two survive her, and they with their's "rise up and called her blessed." For her death had no terrors, it was an event that she patiently waited for, and she was willing to go at the Master's call. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

FOR THE FAMILY.

AT EVENING.

Upon the hills the wind is sharp and cold,
The sweet young grasses' wither on the world,
And we, O Lord, have wandered from Thy fold,
But evening brings us home.

Among the mists we stumbled, and the rocks
Where the brown lichen whitens, and the fox
Watches the straggler from the scattered flocks,
But evening brings us home.

The sharp thorns prick us, and our tender feet
Are cut and bleeding and the lambs repeat
Their pitiful complaints—oh, rest is sweet,
When evening brings us home.

The darkness gathers. Through the gloom no star
Rises to guide us. We have wandered far.
Without Thy lamp we know not where we are.
At evening bring us home.

The clouds are round us and the snow drifts thicken,
O, thou, dear Shepherd, leave us not to sicken
In the waste night—our tardy footsteps quicken:
At evening bring us home.

Items for Lady Readers.

Leonardo da Vinci was another great Italian artist of whom it was said that he was "endowed by the hand of God himself." He was born over twenty years before Michael Angelo, in 1452, in a little Italian village near Florence. His father was a lawyer and quite well off. Among the twelve children in the family Leonardo was the pet, because he was so clever and good-looking. He was one of the brightest boys in school, too, and learned everything very quickly. He loved his books and he loved the trees and flowers also, and was devoted to music. When very young he made a lot of drawings on the margins of his books. and his father thought them so good that he took them to Andrea Verrochio, a famous artist to see. Verrochio advised him, by all means, to make his son a painter, and so da Vinci put Leonardo to study in Verrychio's studio. Verrochio was painting a picture of Christ being baptized, and he asked Leonardo to paint an angel in the left hand corner. When it was finished Verrochio saw it was so much better than his own work and it so discouraged him that a young boy should do more than himself that he declared he would never touch the brush again, and he never did.

Leonardo always carried his sketch-book hung to his girdle and he went about the streets of Florence looking for beautiful faces to paint. He was a very tender-hearted man and often when he passed places where birds sold he would buy them and then take them from their cages and set them free. He was very strong and could take a horseshoe in his hands and bend it in half. He studied hard and faithfully, and some idea of his perseverance may be had from the fact that he spent ten years making the clay model of a statue. Perhaps his greatest work is "The Last Supper," painted on the wall of a church in Florence. Sometimes he would work on this picture all day long without eating or drinking a morsel. He used to say that his hand trembled whenever he tried to paint the head of Christ. Leonardo finished this work in about three years.

Leonardo lived until he was 67 years old. The church in which he was buried was destroyed during a war and all trace of Leonardo's grave was gone.

In 1873 a large and beautiful statue of the great painter was raised in Milan. On the four corners are statues of his principal scholars. Leonardo was talented in so many ways that he was called "the all-knowing Leonardo." He was a great civil engineer, and besides being a writer and composer he invented a number of things.

The Letters J. and W.

It is a fact not so well known but that it may be said to be curious that the letters j and w are modern additions to our alphabet. The use of the j may be said to have become general during the time of the Commonwealth, say between 1649 and 1658. From 1630 to 1646 its use is exceedingly rare, and I have never as yet seen a book printed prior to 1630 in which it appeared. In the century immediately preceding the seventeenth it became the fashion to tail the last i when Roman numerals were used, as in this example, viij for 8 or xij in place of 12. This fashion still lingers, but only in physicians' prescriptions, I believe. Where the French use j it has the power of s, as we use it in the word "vision." What nation was the first to use it as a new letter is an interesting but perhaps unanswerable query.

In a like manner the printers and language-makers in the latter part of the sixteenth century began to recognize the fact that there was a sound in spoken English which was without a representative in the shape of an alphabetical sign or character, as the first sound in the word "wet." Prior to that time it had always been spelled as "vet," the v having the long sound of u or of two us together. In order to convey an idea of the new sound they began to spell such words as "wet," "weather," "web," etc., with two us, and as the u of that date was a typical v the three words mentioned above looked like this: "vvet," "vveather," "vveb." After awhile the type founders recognized the fact that the double u had come to stay, so they joined the two vs together and made the character so well known as w. I have one book in which three forms of the w are given. The first is the old double v (vv,) the next is one in which the last stroke of the first v crosses the first stroke of the second, and the third is the common w as used to-day.—Cincinnati Times.

Things Useful.

In poaching eggs add a tablespoonful of vinegar to the water. It sets the white and keeps it from spreading.

Tar soap is the best cure for falling hair. The hair should be washed with it, and at night well lathered with it and left to dry in the scalp and washed out next morning.

A delicious salad dressing is made of four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a little mixed mustard, pepper and salt and about two spoonfuls of breakfast bacon gravy or else a slice of bacon. Put all in a saucepan and cook on the stove until the bacon is done. When it is somewhat cool add a hard-boiled egg chopped fine and pour all over the lettuce.

To make soft custard have one quart of milk, half a cup of white sugar, the yolks of six eggs, the whites of two and any preferred flavoring. Mix the yolks and the sugar together and then add one cup of the milk. Scald the rest of the milk and when it is hot pour it gradually on to the mixture and then set all in a double boiler on the stove to cook. It must be stirred all the time until it thickens. When it thickens add a good pinch of salt. Set away to cool and when cold add the flavoring. A meringue of whipped white of egg and sugar can be put on the top as you are about to serve it. The two whites of egg that are put in the custard must be beaten only very slightly. The custard should be served in glasses.

TO PUT ON needed flesh, no matter how you've lost it, take Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It works wonders. By restoring the normal action of the deranged organs and functions, it builds the flesh up to a safe and healthy standard—promptly, pleasantly, and naturally. The weak, emaciated, thin, pale and puny are made strong, plump, round, rosy, and robust. Nothing so effective as a strength-restorer and flesh-maker is known to medical science. Filthy Cod Liver Oil and all its disguised compounds can't compare with it.

They build up fat, not healthy flesh.

Practically, you can get the "Discovery" on trial. In everything that's claimed for it—in purifying the blood, and building up the flesh and strength—if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

On these terms, is any substitute that may pay a dealer better to urge and sell, likely to be "just as good" for you to buy?

Nothing else, at any price, is really as cheap. You pay only for the good you get.

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

DUTY.

Our blue eyed daughter with locks of gold,
Rosy and dimpled and eight years old,
Went to Sunday-school one fine day,
When grass was springing in balmy May;
The questions swiftly went round the class,
And soon came the turn of our little lass
"Your duty to neighbors?" the teacher said,
Promptly replied our golden head,
"I don't know that kind of duty, you see,
But I know plain duty as well as can be."
His hand on her curls the teacher laid;
"Well, what is 'plain duty,' my little maid?'
"Why, duty's the thing"—with a moment's thought—
"That you don't want to do, but you know you ought?"

The Sale of Crummie, or the Diamond Brooch.

CHAPTER 8.

(CONCLUDED.)

Marion looked inquiringly at her husband, for she was quite at a loss to understand the meaning of all this. He did not keep her long in suspense; but as they entered the cottage, and seated themselves by the fireside, he proceeded to relate to her all the particulars of his story, with most of which the reader is already acquainted. Then he told what a kind reception he had got from Mrs. Montgomery, who was so delighted at seeing her brooch again, that she seemed hardly to know how best to show her gratitude to the finder. After warmly commending his honesty, and hearing his story, she added the price of the cow to the 50*l.* of reward, and desired him to go and buy it back again, and then to return and remain at her house all night, as it would be too late for him to proceed on his journey home that day, after his business should be over. After leaving a large balance of the 50*l*, to his credit in the bank, he had brought with him a bill for the amount due for the arrears of his rent, and he concluded by telling Marion that Mrs. Montgomery had promised to send up a supply of warm clothing for herself and the children on the following week, adding, "She is the kindest and best lady I ever saw, and it was a lucky chance indeed, that brought us acquainted with her."

"Say rather, it was the kind providence of God, who has mercifully thought upon us in our time of need, and sent us help from above. To him we owe all our blessings!" replied Marion, who had listened with devout thankfulness to her husband's narrative of what she justly considered this wonderful interposition of Divine providence in their behalf.

"You are right, Marion," replied John; "but it is for your sake alone, that he has shown us such kindness, for what am I but a poor, ungrateful creature, always repining at his will, and never trusting him as I should do?"

"You will be so no longer, I am sure, dear John;" said Marion gently. "And remember, that I am equally unworthy with yourself, it is to his mercy in Christ Jesus alone, that we are indebted for all we receive at his hand. And now," she added, "I wish I had something better than our usual fare to refresh you with after your long journey this cold day; though the good news you've brought should be enough to cheer us for many a day to come, without anything else!"

"Oh, I had forgot," replied John, "here is something else the kind lady gave me; and she would have insisted on my taking more, if I only could have carried it." And he laid upon the table two parcels containing tea and sugar.

Seldom was a more cheerful meal than that to which the family sat down, after Marion had prepared tea, milked the cow, and summoned the delighted children in from their attendance on their recovered favorite. Surely, never did the costliest gems give such happiness to their possessors, as did this diamond brooch produce in the family of its finder. And to the soul of John Martin it was the means of bringing a treasure far more precious than all the riches of Golconda's mines, for it taught him a life-long lesson of trust in God.

At a later hour that night, the incense of thanksgiving, praise and prayer, arose from humble and devout hearts and lips within that home; and the "Angel of the Lord," who "encamps" around the "dwellings of the righteous," doubtless heard the holy sounds, and presented them at the throne of the Eternal, to whom such offerings are far more precious than sacrifices of "thousands of rams, or of ten thousand rivers of oil," (Micah, vi. 7).

From that time forth, everything prospered with John Martin. The frost soon broke up, and he obtained regular work in the fields. For many a succeeding year his crops were abundant; and he was soon enabled to rent a few additional acres. So that, though he never recovered the money he had lost at the fair all went so well with him, that he never felt the want of it. Then his family grew up industrious, steady, and pious; and to her children's children Marion used often to delight in relating, with devout gratitude, the wonderful story of God's providence, in the finding of the diamond brooch.

One word before we conclude. We do not wish to convey to the reader of this narrative the impression that we mean to infer that all who put their trust in God will receive the reward of their faith in this world, as Marion Martin did. Reason and experience are alike contrary to such a belief. For we know, that often the experience of God's most faithful servants, throughout the greater portion of their earthly pilgrimage, is one of successive trials and sorrows. But it is a blessed thought, that for all those who truly put their trust in him, there is a bright and glorious world in reversion, where their "light affliction," which will then appear as "but for a moment," worketh out "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." (2 Cor. iv. 17.) For what was the answer of the elder to the beloved apostle, when he beheld in mystic vision that "great multitude which no man could number," standing "before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands," and appealed to his knowledge for information regarding them? "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." (Rev. vii. 14–17.)

Bertie and His Playmates.

This is the real name of a little boy whose home is away off in Africa. He may never see this, for he is on his way home, in a great ship, with nothing but water all around him.

Missionaries get tired and sick, and have to come home to America to rest. Bertie has crossed the Atlantic ocean four times. He is a brave little sailor, and thinks it rather disgusting when people are sea-sick.

Do you think you would like Africa better than America? Bertie does, although everything seems new and nice. The shops are beautiful, and the electric cars are wonderful; yet he is homesick for Africa and his ten little playmates.

Can you guess what they are? Bertie has no little brothers and sisters and no little children to play with; so he plays with monkeys. They are so cunning and sharp, and chatter just as if they were scolding; but they never say anything naughty. Bertie claps his hands, and they all run up the trees and hang down by their tails. When he claps his hands again, they jump down and get in a line and play tag. It is strange that Bertie wants to get back to such funny friends?

When Bertie went to Washington and shook hands with the President, he thought he would like to be President himself when he grew up.

"But then, mamma, you see I couldn't be a missionary like papa, and I think it would be very much better to be a missionary, and that is what I will be."—Aunt Marie, in Our Little Ones.

Little Seedlet.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

Trembling and swaying on her tiny wings (for this little seed has wings, just like a little bird), waving and gleaming in the bright shine of the sun, there floated the little butterfly of seedlings—this way and that she poised herself, for all the world like a baby bird; full of innocent pride in her shining wings, yet with a pitiful thought for the poor little seeds who could only move so slowly, creeping close to the earth. Across the wide meadow of lush green grass, with daisies, like little starlets peeping out; over the brook's happy murmur; on, a winged seed, she flies to find a safe resting place. At last she poises herself, on the outstretched root of a very old grandfather of an oak. To her horror she feels herself shaking down, down—right through the ground, until, with a gasp, she sees close above her head, the dark, damp earth! Poor little seedlet! Buried!

No more sunshine to glimmer on gauzy wing; no more tinkle of lily bell as flying swiftly past she jostles the tall green stem. Alas, alas! Her little heart began to beat and throb.

"Oh," she cried, "I shall die—my heart will break—I feel it bursting!"

Even as she spoke, her breast heaving with sobs, lo! right out of the swelling heart, there came a tiny stem, so green, so soft—glistening even in the dark, like a piece of dew-wet grass; upward it sprang, up out of the beating, bursting heart, the little aching heart, until it pierces the dark earth, and bursts right out into the glorious glowing sunshine, in company with swaying lily-bud and beauteous rose of the wild wood—and all, growing, rejoicing, living things.

And this is what came of little seedlets broken heart.—N. O. Picayune.

J. O. WILSON, Contractor and Builder, Sulphur Springs, Texas, thus speaks of Ayer's Pills:

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be devised. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employes for more than twenty years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and by the use of Ayer's Pills alone: Third day chills, dumb ague, bilious fever, sick headache, rheumatism, flux, dyspepsia, constipation, and hard colds. I know that a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, continued for a few days or weeks, as the nature of the complaint required, would be found an absolute cure for the disorders I have named above."

Permanently Cured

"I have been selling medicine for eight years, and I can safely say that Ayer's Pills give better satisfaction than any other Pill I ever sold."—J. J. Perry, Spottsylvania C. H., Va.

FIRST CHURCH, CONCORD.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The members of the Woman's Missionary Society, First Presbyterian church, Concord, had the pleasure, at a recent meeting, of hearing a letter read which had been received by Rev. C. M. Payne, pastor of the church, from Rev. D. C. Rankin, editor of The Missionary. In this letter a very great honor is accorded the Concord church and its pastor as the following extract will show: "I thank you for your faithful work and interest in the cause and am glad to tell you that I think you have the model church in our Assembly. It is an all-round church, that, I means comes up to the mark more equally in all departments of the Church work than any other. The ladies have done nobly for us in their work for the Calendar."

These are words of high commendation and are well deserved; there are no vacancies opposite the Concord church in the columns of the statistical reports and its advance, in all departments for the past few years, is phenomenal.

Ten years years ago, this church reported a membership of 175; no missionary society, and an average contribution of only $70 per year to Foreign Missions,

It has now, four missionary societies, in active organization, and one for general religious work and a larger Sunday-school than ever before.

The N.C. PRESBYTERIAN and the Christian Observer are largely taken, and The Missionary has a club of thirty subscribers.

Mr. George D. Adamson, missionary, is supported in the Congo Free State. During the pastorate of Dr. Payne, the membership has been heavily depleted by both removals and death, yet, additions have been constantly received, averaging more than thirty per year and there are now 285 resident communicants. A chapel has been built, a Sunday-school organized and a congregation gathered at Forest Hill where the field is becoming each year more important and promising.

From this church, the Orphanage at Barium Springs has constantly received substantial aid; it has furnished a room in the building; the Benevolent Society has its special charge, Robert Morse, one of the inmates; the society for religious work has rendered valuable assistance; boxes of clothing are donated from time to time and the Sunday-school appropriates one collection to this cause each month.

While many churches have a membership far larger and wealthier, this church is a leading one in both Concord Presbytery and the Synod of North Carolina, and, as an all-round, model church is like a city on a "hill" and is the banner-bearer of the Assembly. The above is not boastingly written, nor in a spirit of measurement with others, but as a provoker of good works.

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

GAMBLING.

There is a relation between the three parables of the Prodigal Son, the Unjust Steward and the Rich Man and LAZARUS which will make of them illustrations of the three classes of gamblers. These parables are given to convey important spiritual instruction. The parable of the Prodigal Son is one of three to show the condition of the lost sinner and the work of GOD for his salvation.

The other two parables are placed after this with the link of connection in their secondary reference to the use of worldly goods.

Taking these in the reverse order the third is a fair illustration and type of the successful gambler; and there are some such. They are the dealers in futures and margins, the managers of pool rooms, the book-makers, the owners of gambling dens, the managers of lotteries and occasionally successful drawers of prizes, the experts at cards, the men who have inside information. They are sometimes those who are specially shrewd, oftener unscrupulous and sometimes called honest. Whatever be the kind of gambling by which they win there are certain results that follow. Generally they become, like this rich man of the parable, wholly hardened against the necessities and sufferings of their less fortunate fellows. They will not give crumbs to a starving LAZARUS, worthy object of charity as he is, and will let the dogs be kinder than they in ministering to his sores.

Among the so-called successful men of New York there is said to be one of a late generation who is an illustration of this. Successful gambling tends to harden the heart of humanity no matter in what kind of gambling. These successful ones may and generally do find their match by and through whose success, or by other means, they eventually lose all their gains. At best they, becoming inhumane, lose all esteem, regard and sympathy and must lead a separate life with none to pity if they lose. They build no hospitals, endow no infirmaries and leave no monuments of good deeds done their fellowmen. Those for a time successful are liable to become mentally unbalanced or morally unsound in their business. They will when losing fear the poorhouse or when gaining make daring risks. They will risk what is not their own and often be guilty of stealing and forgery when they get into a close place or get excited in taking risks. They may be clothed in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day and have a magnificent funeral, while living despised and dying unlamented.

Another class is that of the unjust steward who was accused to his master of having wasted his goods. He may have done so by gambling. He is one who is tempted by lotteries and chances and margins or by the card table to take risks, but is always getting fleeced. This is far the largest class. They do not see that all the advantage is on the side of the expert at cards and the manager of the lotteries. They not only risk all they have but take trust money and deposit money of banks and lose it with their own. May be they did not mean to be dishonest but they got a taste of this thing and it grew into infatuation by which they lost morals as well as money. This is the class by which there is so much evil and suffering in the land to-day. It is not so much the low price of cotton or other staples that is doing harm as the loss in gambling, in futures or margins and the consequent demoralization of our young men. It is high time we should choke this iniquitous monster.

Another class is like this young man who had never earned any wages, and did not know the value of money, who as the possible pet and pride had been pampered and indulged until he was of mature age, but of immature judgment and with his inheritance went forth to waste it in riotous living. In our day at least one way of doing this would be in gambling at the card table or other exciting games of hazard and risk. He is simply reckless. He does not care whether he wins or loses, so he has what is called a good time. As those of the second class are sure, sooner or later to be brought to account, these will as surely come to want and long for the food and furnishing of the hired servants at the plain old home, a little while ago despised.

In each case gambling has certain elements. There is first of all the element of uncertainty. It is hope resting on what is unknown and beyond the power of the one who makes the wager. Then there is the hope of getting something for nothing. It is usually the laying a wager on what has no intrinsic value—with the desire to get more than the wager without honest labor or a just equivalent. Furthermore the final control is usually in the hands of some one who has the advantage, and will use it. As to the uncertainty all know that gambling must have this characteristic. As soon as a wager is known to be a certainty it is forfeited. The ignoble craving to live without labor, to get without giving, to be rich without being right, and to have an easy way of getting money takes hold of this uncertainty, this hope of getting what is beyond the power to control and puts itself at the mercy of experts and managers and agents who have all the advantage. It istime for Christians to look closely and determine whether the element of danger here is the money. It may be that element of the uncertain and unknown which has such a fascination. At least the danger lies in that direction and if in our families we guard our young people there we shall diminish to that extent the growing evil of taking risks of every sort for a possible gain. The evil has not only blinded the eyes of some Christians in the raffles at large bazaars for worthy objects, but has crept into our Church entertainments in the way of grab bags and chances on cakes and such like. And the evil is growing. Christians we must bestir ourselves to find something better for pastimes in our homes than these games of chance.

GEORGE WASHINGTON said: "Gambling is the child of avarice, the brother of iniquity, and the father of mischief." We accept the definition with the modification that this evil has a double parentage of fascination for the uncertain and greed for gain. The uncertainty is not generally reckoned by our friends who say they see no harm in a social game of cards. Yet it is as surely one of the parents of gambling as avarice and the one most potent in molding the character of the child. When Christian parents tell us they must have occupations for their children at home and see no harm in these games whose basic principle is uncertainty, we often wonder how much thought is given to find some substitute not only harmless, but helpful.

Gambling is the brother of iniquity. Even in those things which claim to do good like the Louisiana lottery there is always the associate evil, the corrupting power and companionship. See how even the managers of this evil thing, reported to be brave and good men, or cloaked with the names of such, is now actually outraging all decency and honor by making the drawings in Honduras and doing the details of other parts in Florida. The United States mails cannot allow its use, the States have made laws against it and the best and purest have condemned it, yet it holds on and tries to defeat all legislation and all indignation. From this we may learn the nature of all gambling. It is the father of mischief. Here is the source of so many defalcations, lies and heartaches.

We are teaching our children at home and at school, the necessity and duty of honest labor for our daily bread, and in all departments of professional and business life. How much of this is being undone or counteracted by giving the taste for gaming in our social pastimes. It should be at least a warning of danger, if not of sin, when civil courts pronounce progressive euchre gambling. And all games of chance tend that way. Does card playing unduly excite and often provoke to anger and hot words and evil deeds? Does it ever accomplish any real good? Do our Christians who play form our Bible-class teachers and pupils? Do they learn to love GOD and their fellow-men at the game of cards? Not in anger, but in deep concern, we ask these questions. We notice the record that the soldiers were gambling for the seamless coat of JESUS even at the foot of the cross as if to suggest the awful possibility of a blunted, moral sense. Of course, if Christians can get or give any good by card playing then it is our duty to rescue cards from the commonly evil associations. But if not, what?

HERE AND THERE.

In addition to the good news regarding the sending out of Rev. JOHN W. MOORE and Miss LIZZIE MOORE as foreign missionaries—given our readers in the column of Religious Intelligence, we are glad to lay before them the following telegram from Rev. A. T. GRAHAM, Davidson:

"Announce this week Durham church promises five hundred dollars to Mr. MOORE provided balance is raised in March."

IT IS MONDAY MORNING. WE FEEL quite comfortable; and truly we ought to. It was our pleasure yesterday to sit under preaching which both warmed and filled and encouraged. And now we buckle down to work. We take the full mail that comes on Mondays, and here is comfort. Some who have been sadly behind have paid up and the letters generally are kindly in tone. What a relief to have a let-up from being blamed and criticised and found fault with. Here's a letter from a gentleman who writes as to his back dues: "It being a small matter is the cause of its being overlooked. * * *. It will suit my convenience at any time I may be due a balance for you to draw." Now that is refreshingly business-like. Some people look upon a draft as a defiance, or a stigma. It is simply a regular and proper business procedure.

WE CAN NOT COPY THE KIND expressions such as "I cannot do without it." "Much pleased with the improvement in your valuable paper," &c., &c. By the way this last is from a friend in Tennessee, for many years a subscriber when he was in North Carolina. A minister in South Carolina writes: "Doubtless the advanced position of the Synod of North Carolina both as to Home and Foreign Missions is due largely to your efforts." We tender special thanks.

BUT IS THE BROTHER CORRECT IN HIS views? We really think the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN has been very helpful—don't you? Brethren who have gone into other Synods think so and have said so, and the endeavor to establish papers in other Synods is a very practical way of expressing the same opinion. Establishing a paper to forward the work of a Synod means a considerable outlay of time and effort and probably in the end of means. To support and sustain and double the usefulness of an established paper means some time and some effort with a good deal of hearty desire to do that very thing.

NOW HEAR THIS FROM A BROTHER writing of the Sabbath-school convention to be held in his Presbytery: "We hope to have a good convention. I shall take the liberty to call special attention to the merits of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN at our meeting, and emphasize the importance of every Sabbath-school worker having Dr. HOGE'S exposition of the lessons." That certainly will be a good move. The Presbyterians might do a good work on this line. Fayetteville Presbytery has been especially interested in this matter, and we would be glad to hear from her ministers on the subject.

BUT EVEN THAT IS NOT ALL FOR THIS same brother informs us of his intention within the next fortnight or so along with other church matters to go from house to house and present the claims of the PRESBYTERIAN—and he adds: "I hope to send you a good club. Will do my best." If that club does not come it will not be the brother's fault. It cheers us, of course, it does. It is work for the MASTER in the upbuilding of His kingdom. And GOD helping us we will try to do our part.

THE COLLECTION FOR PUBLICATION and Colportage ordered by the General Assembly is one of the most important called for by our Church, though not always so regarded. The appeal of Dr. HAZEN to which we invite special attention will be found on our third page.

IT IS THE CUSTOM OF THE PRESBYTERIES of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland to nominate the moderator of the General Assembly of that church in advance of the meeting of the court. The Presbytery of Cork has nominated Mr. THOMAS SINCLAIR, a ruling elder, and this has brought the eligibility and suitability of a layman for the office. Never probably in the history of the Irish Church has a ruling elder presided as moderator, but the record of the Church of Scotland is not free from what some consider a grievous impropriety. The eminent scholar, GEORGE BUCHANAN, a ruling elder, was elected moderator of the Assembly and it is recorded historically as a proud distinction. This was in 1567 under the Regency of MURRAY.

WE NOTE THAT A JUDGE OF NEW York has lately decided that the publication of a picture of any one by a newspaper without consent of the person directly concerned is actionable. Something may depend of course upon the faithfulness of the likeness and upon the attractiveness of the countenance represented, but taking into account newspaper pictures of persons as they generally appear the decision would seem to be in accord with simple justice.

HERE IS A BIT OF WISDOM FROM CHARLES KINGSLEY: "Begin with small things. You cannot enter the presence of another human being without finding there more to do than you or I, or any soul, will ever learn to do perfectly before we die. Let us be content to do but little, if GOD sets us at little tasks. It is but pride and self-will which says, 'Give me something huge to fight, and I should enjoy that; but why make me sweep the dust?'"

The Living Links Again.

The limits imposed by our column prevented us from saying all that was in our mind, last week, on this subject. We will now endeavor to supplement that article with some information which will be of interest we hope.

Statements received from the Mission Rooms, in Nashville, show that North Carolina has a most honorable position, in the ranks, in the possession of these living links. There are a few more than fifty such missionary links, not including the smaller work, such as the support of Bible women, native helpers, school children, &c., now in the field. Of these thirteen, or one-fourth, are supported by churches, ladies' societies, or individuals, from this State. It is not possible to go fully into this matter, but the churches now known to be pledged, for the current year are: Wilmington First two, St. Andrews one, Laurinburg one, Raleigh one, Charlotte First one, Charlotte Second one, Concord one, Henderson one, Winston one; then two by the Ladies' Foreign Mission Society of Wilmington Presbytery, and one by a single individual.

This list does not contain the names of Gastonia and Maxton, which have done so well, in the past and which it is believed will be still, in this honorable company; but definite information, with regard to them, is simply not in our hands. There are several other names, which will, no doubt, soon be added to this roll. Asheville, Statesville and Fayetteville are now giving nearly enough to support a missionary, and Greensboro and Salisbury, with some debt to carry, have not done so well as they will do, we believe, the ensuing year. This is a most creditable exhibit for the cities and towns of the State in this matter. But many of the country churches, notably in Fayetteville Presbytery, have done most nobly and are carrying objects proportioned to their ability of other kinds. The most important object now, to be aimed at, is to get one or more, of these country churches, especially these grouped already together or lying contiguous, to undertake such definite objects. It will develop the interest and liberality as no other means can.

Fortunately such objects are, just now, ready to their hands. There are three young ladies, of the State, already under appointment, by the committee, for whom provision has not been made. Two of these will not leave, or cannot do so, before the end of the summer, but one, is now ready and waiting! We are glad to be informed that a church in Kentucky has undertaken to support Bro. Moore; but Miss Moore is still unprovided for.

Are there not one or two churches, or societies which will, at once, guarantee her support, so that they may not be detained? For they must go now, or the season will not permit them to go, before the fall. When the support is thus secured, there will remain only $400, of the $1,800 which Bro. Graham called for, to be raised for the necessary travelling expenses—as something is already in hand for this purpose. Only two dollars, from every ladies' society, in the State, will furnish the amount needed. Some must send more, however, as others may send nothing. Cannot all our ladies make this extra effort and send the money at once, to Mr. Graham, so that these dear friends may be able to go, immediately, to their chosen field of labor?

A delay of a few weeks, may now make a difference of several months in the departure of these friends. It seemed a difficult matter, to undertake to raise $1,800, in these hard times; but $400 which is now necessary can be and, we are confident, will be immediately raised. Do make the effort.

Thus two more living links will be added to the claim, which binds our hearts to those for whom our Saviour died, but who are still ignorant of His love.

THE VOICE IN THE STORM.

Not always under calm and sunny skies
The Lord doth meet us, though we seek Him there,
Eager to hear him talk of lilies fair
And utter parables that make men wise;
Nor do we find the one whose word we prize
Always at feasts, though He doth love to share
Our social joys, and when we feasts prepare
'Tis he with better wine our want supplies.
But sometimes on the wings of storm he comes,
In the deep midnight of our black despair,
'Mid raging waves and winds that never cease,
When the helm fails us, and the gold benumbs
Our helpless hands—then as we lift our prayer
He speaks, and lo! our hearts are filled with peace.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

SECOND DECADE AFTER THE WAR—DECLINE IN ATTENDANCE, 1875–1885.

In 1874–'75 the attendance touched high water-mark, the number of students in that year being seventy-seven. For the next seven years there was a steady falling off, the number in 1881–'82 being only forty-five. Nor was there any marked improvement in the remaining three years of this decade. The material interests of the seminary however continued to prosper, this period being specially notable for the endowment of scholarships for aiding young men in their preparation for the ministry. In 1875 Mr. T. M. Nevin, of New York, by the gift of $1,000, founded the scholarship now bearing his name. In the same year Mr. Joseph Blair Willson, of Collierstown, Rockbridge county, Virginia, by the donation of $3,500, began what proved to be a series of large contributions to the scholarship funds; a second gift of $9,000 being made two years later; and a third of $5,600 just two weeks before his death in 1881. Moreover, by his will he bequeathed to the seminary his entire estate of every kind (estimated at about $16,000), all to constitute a fund the proceeds of which should be applied to the same form of Christian benevelence—aiding young men in their preparation for preaching the gospel. The "Willson Scholarship" is much the largest yet established (about $34,000), and has already accomplished incalculable good.

In 1877 several thousand dollars, received under the will of Mrs. Ann Davidson, of Rockingham county, Virginia, were devoted to founding the Ann Davidson Scholarship.

In 1882 an unknown friend contributed $5,000 for the endowment of the "Tabb Street Church Scholarship." It has already been noted that the "Brown Library Hall" was erected in 1880. The writer, who was then a student in the seminary, remembers well the laying of the corner-stone with Masonic ceremonies and an address by Dr. Smith. That was a glad day for all the friends of the seminary, but especially so for the man who had done so much to re-establish the institution after the war, who had watched and promoted the growth of the library with almost parental solicitude, and who had secured the liberal donation by means of which the books were now to be suitably housed and conveniently arranged for future generations of professors and students. Before the erection of this elegant and commodious building, with ample room for 30,000 volumes or more, the 11,000 books already gathered were crowded into bursting shelves in the galleries of the Seminary Chapel.

In 1876 the two cisterns now in use were built. Union Seminary has never had an adequate supply of water. Several wells have been opened on the premises at various times and different places, but the water, after some years' use, always becomes undrinkable. The cisterns have answered the purpose better than the wells, but the supply of water is still of uncertain quantity and sometimes of indifferent quality. Any friend of theological education who will provide the means for introducing water into the seminary buildings will meet a pressing need and will promote the convenience, comfort, and health of generations of theological students. Some system of heating too, less primitive, less expensive, and less dangerous than that now in use, has long been needed; and the same thing is true of lighting. To speak plainly, the seminary has no "modern conveniences" whatever.

In 1883 it was resolved by the Board of Directors that the Faculty be authorized and instructed to make arrangements for assistant instruction in the department of Oriental Literature. "The consideration leading to this step is the propriety of bringing some relief to the Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith, the able, faithful, and honored professor in that department, in view of the weight of advancing years and the disabilities which naturally attend upon them." In compliance with these instructions, the Faculty appointed to this work the Rev. W. W. Moore, pastor of the church at Millersburg, Ky.

In the summer of 1883 Dr. Dabney resigned his position as professor of Systematic Theology; Dr. Peck was elected to succeed him; and the Rev. James F. Latimer, Ph. D., D. D., pastor of the Second Church, Memphis, Tenn., was elected to the chair of Ecclesiastical History and Polity made vacant by the transfer of Dr. Peck. The Presbytery of Memphis refused to release Dr. Latimer from his charge, and the Board elected another gentleman to the position. He also declined, and the chair remained vacant until May, 1884, when Dr. Latimer was again elected. He entered upon his duties in September of the same year.

In 1884 A General Catalogue of the Officers and Alumni of the Seminary was published, by order of the Board of Trustees, under the editorial supervision of Dr. Smith, who had devoted two years of arduous labor to the task of gathering the material. It is a stout pamphlet of ninety-two pages, crammed with facts in regard to the 744 students who had been matriculated from 1823 to 1883, and is therefore a reference book of no small value.

In 1885 a marble tablet was placed in the South wall of the Seminary Chapel, containing, in gilt letters, the following inscription:

In Memory of
REV. JOHN HOLT RICE, D. D.,
Born in Bedford Co., Va., Nov. 18, 1777;
Tutor in Hampden-Sidney College,
1797–1804;
Pastor Cub Creek Church,
1804–1812;
Pastor First Church, Richmond,
1812–1823;
Professor of Theology in UNION SEMINARY,
1822 to his death, Sept. 3, 1831.

Eminent and efficient in every office, this Seminary, founded by his labours is his lasting Monument.

On Tuesday, May 5th, 1885, public services were held in the Chapel, at the unveiling of this mural tablet, in the presence of the Trustees and a large and interested audience. Appropriate addresses were made by the Rev. Prof. B. M. Smith, D. D., and the Rev. Theodorick B. Pryor, D. D. Dr. Pryor had entered the seminary as a student in 1830, and Dr. Smith in 1831. The latter, however, had lived in Dr. Rice's family for a year or two before this. So that both of them spoke of the eminent founder from the basis of personal acquaintance with him.

ZEAL IS ACCORDING TO KNOWLEDGE.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The thought, I wish to emphasize, is, Can we dispense with our home religious periodicals? In so doing, are we not unconsciously sustaining an irreparable loss to our individual Christian development in failing to acquire such information as these periodicals give concerning the progress of Christ's kingdom at home and abroad, and what is needed to the greatest possible advance of the interests of that kingdom?

The Old Testament Scriptures attach great importance to a thorough knowledge of God's works as exhibited for and in behalf of His Church. In Ps. iii: 2 we have these words: "The works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein," and in v. 4, "He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered." And again: "Oh give thanks unto the Lord; call upon His name; make known His deeds among the people." Ps. 105: 1. "Remember His marvellous works that He hath done" v. 5. And again in Ps. 107, these words are three times repeated: "O that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men." It was strictly enjoined upon Jewish fathers, that they should diligently teach these wonderful works of God to their children. The Jews were perfectly familiar with the great events connected with God's dealings with them as a people. After they were established in the land of their possessions, had a stranger visited them from house to house, he would have found the wonderful words" to be the theme in which they took delight. He would scarcely have found a child of twelve years, who could not give an intelligent account of the deliverance from the bondage in Egypt, together with all the judgments upon that land by means of which this deliverance was effected. He would have been an interested listener to the recital of how the destroying angel by night passed through the land, slaying the first born in every Egyptian household, and passing over the houses in which Israel dwelt, upon whose door posts the blood was seen sprinkled. He would have heard of the final rescue of this people from the Egyptians by the opening of a passage through the waters of the Red Sea, by which means they passed over as on dry land, while the pursuing enemy were overwhelmed by the waters and perished. He would have heard how they were miraculously sustained during their forty years sojourn in the wilderness, God raining bread from heaven, giving them flesh to eat, and bring forth water from the rock in the desert, while neither their clothes nor their shoes waxed old upon them. For these and a great multitude of other marvellous deeds he would have heard them sing: "Who is like unto Thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like Thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?" Ex. 15: 11, "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." Ps. 107: 8.

Now if Jehovah himself enjoined upon his chosen people this diligent study of those works which entered into the history of his Church in that day, does not reason teach us that he expects his chosen of the present age to take a like interest in the history of the same Church as it is now being planted and established among all the nations of the earth?

If ignorance concerning God's dealings with his Church then was culpable, is not voluntary ignorance of His workings now far more culpable and inexcusable?

It is a well known fact, that in many of our churches a large portion of our members know very little of what is being done for the cause of Christ in our midst, and still less concerning the work at large. Many would be surprised to learn that while less than thirty years ago there were only ninety-seven missionaries of all Christian denominations in China, and these were stationed in the seaport cities, the vast inland provinces with from one hundred to one hundred and fifty million inhabitants being wholly unoccupied, that in this then unoccupied territory, one missionary agency alone (the China Inland Mission, not to speak of the great number of other agencies) has five hundred and ninety-four missionaries and three hundred and twenty-four native helpers. The same persons would be surprised to learn that in Eastern Equatorial Africa there can be found a vast assembly somestimes numbering five thousands souls, who only a few years ago were sunk into the grossest paganism, now reverently worshipping God in a building erected by their own hands. These are only the first drops of a copious shower yet to descend.

On the other hand the mission work is yet in its infancy. Those best informed can scarcely form a conception of the work yet to be done. In the beginning of the present century, the doors of every heathen nation were closed to missionary effort. Now India, China, Africa, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, Korea and the Islands of the sea are calling for missionaries. The present opportunities are immense, limited only by the number of missionaries offering themselves and the means to send them forth. What a vast responsibility rests upon the Church! There can be no doubt that the number of missionaries could be vastly increased and that the means could be raised to support them if the Church was sufficiently aroused to the importance of the work. This fact can be established beyond doubt by statistics showing the number of communing members in the Protestant churches, and the amount of wealth in their possession. This apathy is chiefly owing to the lack of information. How few take and carefully read the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, the only periodical from which they can glean the history of Church work in our own State! How few take and carefully read the Missionary, which is so full of interest touching missionary work!

The necessary consequence of this lack of knowledge is a lack of interest. We cannot feel any lively interest in that about which we know nothing. We may have a kind of pride in having our particular church give the amounts that Presbytery asks us to raise for each enterprise. We will be very apt to fall short of this; but if we come up to this standard we are perfectly satisfied. No matter how urgent or loud the call from the perishing, we have not heard that call and of course will not heed it. Even if, as far as money is concerned, we are contributing all that God requires of us, which is very improbable, we are doing blindly, are not cultivating the grace of systematic and intelligent giving, and are thus losing the benefits to our own spiritual growth, which would be the result of such giving. Instead of being a portion of the precious material of which the temple of God is composed we may be only the scaffolding by means of which that temple is erected.

I now close with some quotations which contain the pith of what has been written, only adding that, if I had the gift of speech, I would gladly go forth, using them as a text, and ringing the thought which they contain in the ear of every Christian in the land:

"To know the facts of modern missions is the necessary condition of intelligent interest."

"Knowledge does not always kindle zeal, but zeal is according to knowledge, and will not exist without it."

"A fire may be fanned with wind, but it must be fed with fuel, and facts are the fuel of this sacred flame."

TWENTY NEW MISSIONARIES NEEDED FOR CHINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

At the last meeting of the China Mission it was unanimously resolved, in view of the overwhelming needs of the China field, to ask that during 1894 twenty new missionaries be sent to China, of whom five should be medical missionaries,

The China Mission, in obedience to the Lord's command to "go forward" are now attempting to open for our Church four new stations along the Grand Canal; Kashing, Changchow, Whaian and Sohtsien. In none of these cities are there resident missionaries of any evangelical denomination. The population of these cities exceeds that of Louisville, Richmond, Atlanta and Nashville combined. Add the swarming multitudes within a radius of twenty miles of these cities and there will be a population nearly as large as that of the Synods of Virginia, Kentucky, Texas and Missouri. Think of these four great Synods without a single minister of any Evangelical Church to break the bread of life to their people! Such is the need of these regions within our own bounds; (we make no mention of the vast outlying provinces as yet untouched) for which, in the name of the Lord Jesus, this appeal in made. Can any member of our Church contemplate such need and not be moved with pity akin to that which our Lord felt when He wept over Jerusalem?

Some may think that in the present financial stringency it will be impossible for our Church to raise the money to send out so many missionaries. The times are hard, money is scarce. True, but what of that, when million of precious souls, and the glory of the Redeemer are at stake? What the Church needs is not more money, but more consecration, more willingness to give back to God what He has intrusted to her. It will be possible to send out these missionaries if our Church is only baptized anew with the Spirit of God, and is constrained more and more by the love of Christ to a perishing world. Let us fix our minds on the Cross of Christ, on that God who "shall supply all your need according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

God has given us encouragement to hope for great blessings. He has answered our prayers in the past far beyond the expectations of our feeble faith. Last year He gave twenty missionaries to China in answer to prayer. During the past autumn He has given a pledge of future blessing in the increased contributions of His people. With confident hope in God and with renewed activity let our Church press forward and the end of 1894 may see the twenty new missionaries on their way to China, as well as the needs of the other fields at home and abroad supplied. Let us pray and work then for twenty new missionaries for China during 1894. Will not our people lay the appeal before Christian doctors and before our young ministers and suitable lay workers?

May our Father bless our beloved Church at home and in foreign lands during this year as never before, and "unto Him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us, unto Him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end amen."

On behalf of the China Mission,
Respectfully submitted,
HENRY M. WOODS,
HAMPDEN C. DUBOSE.

Disappointment.

Perhaps the hardest among small things to bear with patience is disappointment. We have decided on going to visit a dear friend or relative on a given day; every preparation is made, our satchel is packed, our best gown laid out, the tickets are bought, and we have all the bright flutter and anticipation of a delightful break. And then the day dawns, and we find a creeping chill, precursor of a fever, or sore throat, or some other bodily ailment to keep us at home; or else a child is ill, or a great storm comes, or something interposes to prevent the carrying out of our intentions. We are disappointed, and the day we had meant to have kept as a festival, with banners flying and trumpets blowing, turns out a common affair, only less interesting than an ordinary day.

If we are prevented by illness or cold, or any such thing, from the fulfillment of a cherished plan, we can but be patient and cease to fret. Think how much more comfortable it is to be ill at home than ill at a friend's house, or in a hotel, or in the cars. One's own bed, one's own people to wait on one, these are most appreciated by contrast when pain and sickness must be met and battled with away from home.

But, apart from philosophy, try faith at such a moment. God meant this, and it must be best, is a pillow of comfort for an aching head. Try it.

If a storm or any other providential hindrance is the occasion of disappointment, let me urge you to address yourself to some difficult and absorbing bit of work. Never mind what it is, so long as it is real work. Attack it with energy, and it will repay you in taking out of yourself, and the disappointment will prove a veritable "God's appointment."—Christian Intelligencer.

BETTER THAN

—FOR—

FIFTEEN YEARS.

WESTERN CAROLINA ADVOCATE,
Rev. P. L. Groome, Editor.

Asheville, N. C., Dec. 27th, 1893.

Mr. Jas. H. Webb, Secretary,
Atlantic Electropoise Company,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir :—The Electropoise purchased from you by Mrs. Groome, in 1891, has been of incalcuable worth to her. I feel safe in saying that her general health has been far better for the past two years, than for any corresponding period during our married life of fifteen years. We consider ourselves fortunate in having the instrument in our home.

Very truly yours, P. L. GROOME.

ARE THE CHILDREN AT HOME.

Each day when the glow of the sunset fades in the western sky,
And the wee ones, tired of playing, go tripping lightly by,
I steal away from my husband as he sits in the easy chair,
And watch from the open doorway their faces fresh and fair.
Alone in the dear old homestead, that once was full of life,
Ringing with girlish laughter, echoing boyish strife,
We too are waiting together, and oft as the shadows come
With tremulous voice he calls me: "It is night, are the children home?"

"Yes, love," I answer him gently: "They're all home long ago,"
And I sing in my quivering tremble a song so soft and low,
Till the old man drops to slumber with his head upon his hand,
And I tell to myself the number home in the better land—
Home where never sorrow shall dim their eyes with tears,
Where the smile of God is on them through all the summer years.
I know—yet my arms are empty that fondly folded seven,
And the mother heart within me is almost starved for heaven.

A breath, and the vision is lifted away on the wings of light.
And again we two are together, all alone in the night.
They tell me his mind is failing, but I smile at idle fears—
He is only back with the children, in the dear and peaceful years.
And still, as the summer sunset fades away in the west,
And the wee ones, tired of playing, go trooping home to rest,
My husband calls from his corner" "Say, love have the children come?"
And I answer, with eyes uplifted: "Yes, dear, they are at home."

MAGAZINES.

The D. Lothrop Co., Magazines: The Pansy, Our Little Men and Women and Babyland are eagerly sought for by the children. Parents are interested in Pansy and always find the very best material for older children, while the other two help wonderfully with the little folks.

The Photographic Panorama of the World's Fair, published by Mast, Crowell, and Kirkpatrick, Springfield, Ohio, is now of the best collections of views we have seen. The pictures are not only excellent work, but are views not generally seen.

BOOKS.

Preaching in Sinim; or the Gospel to the Gentiles with Hints and Helps for Addressing a Heathen Audience: Is the title of a work laid on our table by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. Price bound in cloth $1.00; in paper 60 cents.

The author is Rev. Dr. Hampden C. Du Bose, author of "The Dragon, Image and Demon—or The Three Religions in China"—also of some works in the Chinese Language.

The design of the work in the author's own words is "to be of service to newly-arrived missionaries, and aid them in preaching to the heathen who know not God." It is also hoped "that some laborers in other lands may read these pages and mutatis matandis adopt a few of the suggestions to the special wants of their fields."

The style of expression is delightfully easy and natural and the suggestions are distinguished by commonsenseism and practicality. Mere professionalism is at a discount here; the plan advocated is to find out what will fix attention, insure consideration and produce conviction and these things to employ or practice. This book gives to its readers the results of what the author has gathered from service of over a score of years; years in which knowledge, otherwise hardly obtainable, has been acquired and wisdom learned, from grievous failures and heart-cheering successes. It will be, of course, specially useful and most highly interesting to those who may have occasion to put in practice the advice and suggestions given, but the general reader, even, who is interested in the cause of missions, especially in China, will find set forth many incidents illustrating the peculiar habits and modes of thought of the people—incidents that would hardly appear in any work not of this distinctive character. We give the titles of some of the chapters; The Grandeur of of the Pulpit; Sinim's Call; Itineration and Woman's Work; Literary Preparation; The Style of Preaching; Preaching Christ; Jesus the Model Preacher to the Heathen; The Reaper and His Rewards.

Staunton, Va., $1; "A Friend," Petersburg, Va., $5; Mr H Stulting, Academy, W. Va., $1; Mr C Stulting, Academy, W. Va., $1; Mr Sidney Payne, Academy W. Va., $1; Mr Edwin L Beard, Academy, W. Va., $2. Total $58.25

Now this is encouraging. I thank you all and I feel that many more want to gladden my heart, by sending something to this work. You are helping on the Lord's work. If one person can feel so much interest as to build a Roman Catholic church at the Hot Springs, alone, will not five hundred and eighteen Protestants help us to raise $800 more to build a Protestant church? Remember there is no church there of any denomination yet.

In my former appeal I asked for $800, and have received $58.25, leaving $741.75. I asked 546 persons to aid me, twenty-eight have replied, leaving 518 still to be heard from.

Will you be one of the 518? If so, just send whatever amount you can at your earleest convenience, please, to Rev. Wm. C. White, pastor, Warm Springs, Virginia.

THE MARCH COLLECTION FOR PUBLICATION AND COLPORTAGE.

Office of the Executive Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va.,
February 15th, 1894.

To the Pastors, Sessions and Members of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:

DEAR BRETHREN:—The collection appointed by the General Assembly for the month of March has for its object the wide distribution of a Christian and Presbyterian literature among our people, and to this purpose all the proceeds of this collection will be applied.

Under the plans adopted by the General Assembly this distribution is effected in three ways:

First, By grants of books and Sabbath-school supplies to such needy churches, Sabbath-schools and missionary fields as may, by Presbyterial authority, be certified to the Executive Comittee as worthy of such aid. For many years past every application of this character has been promptly responded to.

Second, By grants of tracts to our ministers and evangelists for gratuitous distribution in their fields of labor, thus supplementing the ministry of the living voice with the ministry of the printed page. This method of distribution has also been profitably and successfully employed.

Third, By a systematic colportage work, having in view a thorough canvass of our wide field, giving all our people the opportunity of supplying themselves with the literature of the Church. This part of our work has fallen far short of the needs of our field, and of the measure of our duty as a Church, from lack of the necessary funds for its thorough prosecution. Enough, however, has been done in the six years past to demonstrate the great value of the work, and the great need of more vigorous effort; but this need cannot be met without an increase in the annual collection for this cause.

Speaking in the name, and acting by the authority of the General Assembly, we now appeal to you for the third time, that there may be such an increase in the collection for this cause as will enable us to prosecute the work as efficiently as its importance demands. Not less than $20,000 is needed to thoroughly equip and maintain this agency.

We beg you, in considering this appeal, to remember that this work is no untried experiment, but that its value has been demonstrated again and again in the history of the Church; that our growth as a Church and the maintenance of our standing intellectually and spiritually in the Christian world, must depend largely upon our faithfulness in supplying our people with sound, mental and spiritual food, not only from the pulpit, but from the press; that a large percentage of our people are not likely to be supplied with a gospel literature unless it is carried to their homes; and that such a work in our broad field cannot possibly be self-supporting, but must be prosecuted, if at all, at the cost of the Church.

Weak and limited as our colportage, work has been, nearly 75,000 families have been visited by faithful brethren, and more than $50,000, worth of literature has been distributed since the present plan was inaugurated. Brethren, it rests with you to say whether there shall be such an enlargement of the work as the cause of Christ demands.

By order of the Ex. Committee.

Secretary.

Family Worship.

We hear many a wife and mother say: "Yes, I feel that it is the right thing to do, and I long to have it a regularly established custom in my family; but my husband is so hurried he cannot stop for it." Now, I do not believe that there is one husband and father in our city who, if he really was impressed that it was a matter of vital importance, could not in some way make time for it. But if he is not so impressed, what is the mother's duty in the matter?

I well know as we live our lives to-day there seems little to spare between the hurried breakfast and the train. I really know of no way but to rise a bit earlier and snatch a moment before the breakfast hour. Will the service not be acceptable even if we kneel girded, as were the Israelites the night before their flight?

We have but to decide whether or not we believe family prayers to be of sufficient importance to our children and ourselves to make this sacrifice of our comfort and inclination. What shall we gain from it? Surely, for ourselves an uplift for the day, the starting of our work upon a little higher plane, an added assurance of help wherever we shall find need, and the setting straight of what has already gone awry; for our children and the stranger who may be within our gates the proof, if proof be needed, that our religion is first and foremost in our hearts, a thing of which we have no cause to be ashamed, no desire to keep in the background, that we rely upon our God for help in all we are to do and meet throughout the day. If, then, into the little service we put what is best in ourselves, will not the children, even though they receive no immediate benefit, recall the hour and circumstances after they have gone away from us—possibly some word or prayer or verse, and because of it be kept or helped in ways we dream not of? Many have testified that the influence of their father's or mother's prayers heard at such a time has gone with them all their lives; the memory of some petition has come to them in hours of temptation, and has been just the restraining power most needed at the moment. The thought, too, that every day in the home the family prayer is offered for them has often been a comfort and encouragement to them while fighting their battles with the world elsewhere. Of course there is the danger of its becoming a mere form, and so in time growing distasteful and irksome, but that lies in our proper power, it seems to me, to prevent.

All that has been said of family prayers may be as well said of the custom of saying grace at meals. "Among Telugus no heathen family sits down to a meal until each one has put his offering into his idol's dish, which always has its place by the fireside. This is done at every meal by old and young." Surely it seems as if we might say at least a word of acknowledment for God's daily blessings.

With both these customs it is so much easier if we commence them with the starting of the home. I so well remember the first meal in my own home. We had been boarding, and the change to a quiet, cosy table laid for two brought such a sense of happiness that I said, involuntarily, "What do you feel like doing?" Without a moment's hesitation came the reply, "Giving thanks!" And from that moment was the practice kept up.—Congregationalist.

Borrowing Trouble.

Once upon a time there was a man and a woman who planned to go and spend the day at a house of a friend some miles away from their own! So, one pleasant morning, they started out to make the visit; but before they had gone far the woman remembered a very old bridge they had to cross, which was said to be not very safe, and she immediately began to worry about it.

"What shall we do about that bridge?" said she to her husband. "I shall never dare to go over it, and we can't get across the river in any other way."

"Oh," said the man, "I forgot that bridge; it is a bad place. Suppose it should break through, and we should fall into the water and be drowned?"

"Or even," said the wife, "suppose you should step on a rotten plank and break your leg; what would become of me and the baby?"

"I don't know," replied the man, "what would become of us; I couldn't work and we should all starve to death."

So they went on worrying and worrying till they got to the bridge, when, lo and behold! they saw that since they had been there last a new bridge had been built, and they crossed over it in safety, and found that they might have spared themselves all their anxiety.

Now, that is just what the proverb means—"Never cross a bridge till you come to it." Never waste your worrying on what you think may possibly be going to happen.

Reverence for God's House.

That is what we need more than anything else when we come of a Sunday morning into the Sabbath-school room and into the place where we are wont to worship Him. Sabbath-school teachers need it, and the children need it. Too little thought is given as to whose house we are entering, over whose threshold we are stepping, and into whose presence we are coming. The children hurry into their places in the schoolroom and soon the chatter of their voices is heard over the whole length of the room, as they discuss their day-school affairs, their dress, or that of their neighbor, and it may be many other matters not in keeping with the day and its duties. Scarcely subdued at all, the noise is often so great that the bell is tapped more than once for order to prevail where nothing else should have been.

Teachers should insist upon order being kept in the classes. By being reverent themselves, their example will go far to promote the spirit in their classes. Parents should be reverent, for after all the child will copy most from the parent, and it is the home teaching that will go the farthest to help the child to a true understanding of what is meant by reverence in the house of God.

If there were more children attending the service in the church-room, each time the pastor is teaching the older people how to serve God best, there would be more reverent children and better men and women, with a grown up reverence afterward, than there now are. Pastors, superintendents, and Sabbath-school teachers can do little without the help of the parents. It is six days' teaching against the seventh. Let order and reverence prevail within the walls of the house where God is.—Christian at Work.

If You Want to be Loved.

Don't find fault.

Don't contradict people even if you're sure you are right.

Don't be inquisitive about the affairs of even your most intimate friend.

Don't underrate anything because you don't possess it.

Don't believe that everybody else in the world is happier than you.

Don't conclude that you have never had any opportunities in life.

Don't believe all the evil you hear.

Don't repeat gossip, even if it does interest a crowd.

Don't go untidy on the plea that everybody knows you.

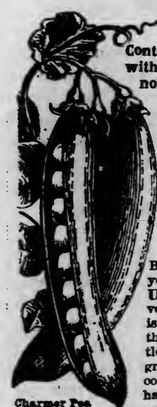
Don't be rude to your inferiors in social position.

Don't over or under dress.

Don't express a positive opinion unless you perfectly understand what you are talking about.

Don't get in the habit of vulgarizing life by making light of the sentiment of it.

Don't jeer at anybody's religious belief.



Don't try to be anything else but a gentlewoman—and that means a woman who has consideration for the whole world and whose life is governed by the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would be done by."

What You Can Do.

You cannot set the world aright, or the times, but you can do something for the truth; and all you can do will certainly tell if the work you do is for the Master, who gives you your share, and so the burden of responsibility is lifted off. This assurance makes peace, satisfaction and repose possible even in the partial work done upon earth. Go to a man who is carving a stone for a building; ask him where is that stone going, to what part of the temple, and how is he going to get it into place; and what does he do? He points to the builder's plans. This is only one stone of many. So when men shall ask where and how is your little achievements going into God's plans, point them to your Master, who keeps the plans, and then go on doing your little service as faithfully as if the whole temple was yours to build.—Phillips Brooks.

Red Springs:—The commission appointed by Fayetteville Presbytery to ordain Rev. S. M. Rankin and install him pastor of the church here, met on Thursday night, 22d inst., and performed the duties according to appointment. All of the members of the commission were present. Dr. Hill preached the sermon and presided. Rev. W. F. Thom charged the pastor, and Rev. P. R. Law the people. A large congregation was present. The services were so interesting and pleasant, everything so nicely done, that members of other denominations of which a goodly number were present including two Baptist and one Methodist minister seemed to appreciate and enjoy the whole service. The new pastor is a young man full of zeal and possessed of much firmness of spirit and character. Occasionally a member here and there may be found in this large field who would just now prefer an older pastor. But doubtless when the young pastor "lets in" on his work in dead earnest, all this preference will disappear, our pastor and our preacher will be the best pastor and the best preacher to be found anywhere. He is able and willing. All that he needs is the earnest prayers and hearty co-operation of all his people. Then the Lord will abundantly bless.

Columbus:—The N. C. Evangelist, Wm. P. Fife, closed on the 15th inst., a meeting of unusual interest and profit in the city of Columbus. It is thought by those familiar with similiar efforts in the past, that on no occasion has there been clearer evidence of the presence of the Holy Spirit in the several churches of that city. It is recognized as a true revival of religion, bringing scores of church members back to duty and to the joy of salvation. Many were led to Christ, and the churches will be blessed with valuable accessions.

Sikeston:—On Feb. 19th, 1894, at the close of a meeting in Sikeston, conducted by Rev. Franc Mitchell, evangelist of the Synod of Missouri, a Presbyterian church was organized, consisting of eleven members. Messrs. B. L. Barnes and Thomas R. Brown were ordained and installed ruling elders.

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock:—The St. Louis Presbyterian says: The Second church, Little Rock, has lately received six members, one on profession of faith and five by letter.

DOMESTIC.

A lady in New York whose name has been withheld has presented to the American University in Washington City (Methodist,) $100,750 in cash. This is understood to be for endowment of the chair of history in that institution. An Ohio gentleman recently contributed a gift of equal value to the university.

Rev. Jere Witherspoon, late of Nashville, has been received into the Presbytery of Baltimore and arrangements made for his installation, as pastor of the First church of that city. An incident of the reception given him was the presentation of the pastoral staff, which has been in the possession of the church since 1765, and has passed from one pastor to another. The staff, or cane, is of colored rattan, with a gold cap on the top and a gold band near the top. In the gold of the cap and band are the initials of Bev. Dr. Patrick Allison, Dr. James Inglis, Dr. Wm. Nevins, Dr. John C. Backus and Dr. Leftwitch.

Independent: The Union of the Brick church and the Church of the Covenant (Presbyterians) in New York was practically accomplished last Sunday, both congregations uniting for the first time to hear Dr. McIlvaine preach. The legal union has not yet been completed. The law requires both corporations to be dissolved and a new one to be formed. As the Brick church is over one hundred years old, there is a general desire to avoid this, and accordingly a special bill has been introduced in the Legislature at Albany. This has not been passed, but probably soon will be.

The Fifth Avenue Church, New York City, has three prosperous missions, two of them manned by pastors of experience in mission work. In this way the church reaches upward of 4,000 people who are regular attendants at the preaching services, the Sabbath-school, the mothers' meetings, or who in some other way come into direct touch with the work of the churches, in addition to the usual number of adherents. For the support of these missions over $13,000 was asked on a recent Sunday by the Rev. Dr. John Hall, the pastor of the home church, and nearly $10,000 was received at the offering taken for this purpose. It is expected that the balance will be secured within a few days. The work of the church through its chapels is widely scattered. The Alexander Chapel is on the West Side, down town, in King street. The Romeyn Chapel is in Fourteenth street, near Avenue A, and the third is at Sixty third street and First Ave., where a building to cost $100,000 is in process of erection. A sabbath-school, day nursery, kindergarten and similar work have been carried on at this place for nearly three years. Recently the pastor visited the building and saw the little children in the nursery and in the kindergarten. One tot about two years old has been in the nursery every day except Sunday since she was a few days old. This neighborhood formerly bore the suggestive name of Murderer's Row. The Fifth Avenue Church is doing a splendid work for those directly responsible to it.

FOREIGN.

The great Mosque of Damascus, one of the most noted edifices in the world is said to have been destroyed by fire. The Turkish authorities, it is said, forbade the news from being published in ordinary channels to prevent this token of Allah's displeasure from reaching the "infidels." The interior dimensions of the edifice were 431x125 feet, and underneath was a cave, in which the head of John the Baptist is said to be preserved in a golden casket. The building had three minarets, one of 125 feet high, on which according to tradition, the Lord was to descend at the Day of Judgment. Authorities have thought it highly probable that the Mosque stood on the site of "the house of Rimmon," mentioned in 2 Kings v. 18. It became the seat of the worship o Jupiter in the fourth century, afterwards a Christian church dedicated to John the Baptist, but in the eighth century fell into the hands of the Moslems.

A valuable ancient manuscript has been found among the documents and deeds of the Friars' Street Congregational Chapel, Sudbury. It consists of a translation from the 1st Epistle to the Thessalonians, the 1st Epistle of James, and the 2nd Epistle of John, which appear to have been made by an earlier scholar than Wycliff, who probably, however, was not so well versed in Latin as was the great translator and reformer. The Rev. Cecil Deedes, of Brighton, an authority on antiquarian matters, to whom the manuscript has been submited, says he should take the handwriting to be mid or late 14th century. The manuscript has also been submitted to the Rev. Dr. Newth, a member of the New Testament Revision Company, and the librarian of the British Museum, the latter of whom states that it does not agree with either of the Wycliffite versions, nor with the passages in the Royal MS., and adds that the pity is that there is so little of it. The MS. consists of four pages, eight inches in depth and six inches in breadth, with margins of five-eighths of an inch at the top, one inch at the sides, and nearly two inches at the bottom. The material used is thick vellum. There are indications af the translation being an East-Anglian one.

News has been received that the whole Presbytery of North Laos, Siam has refused to receive Rev. E. B. McGilvary's resignation. As he received his appointment as a foreign missionary from the Board of the Northern Church and they have accepted it he is out of that employment. His reason for resigning because of disagreement with the Assembly in their declaration of the inerrancy of the Word of God.

BAPTISM IN THE CHURCHES OF GREECE.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

MR. JOHN MCLAURIN, DEAR SIR:—Several years ago, when I was residing in Thessalonica, Macedonia, you sent me a clipping, from The Biblical Recorder, which was as follows:

"The people of Greece know nothing about sprinkling and pouring as religious rites. Every church in Greece requires its members to be baptized, buried with Christ. Even the Presbyterians doing mission work in Greece have had to abandon the practice of sprinkling, or pouring for baptism.

An American traveller asked a professor, in the University of Athens, what baptidzo (βαπτιζω) meant and the reply was that the word had but one meaning.

What will our Pedo-Baptist friends do with these Greeks for being faithful to God's Word?"

At your request I wrote an article on this subject, which you then published.

Permit me now to state, that I am frequently asked about this matter—almost every week brings one or two letters in regard to it; and to request that you will have the goodness to reprint that article.

Thus you will oblige some others as well as yours truly,

T. R. SAMPSON.

This is the Mr. Sampson's reply, referred to above:

In answer to your inquiry, I would say that the article is as full of inaccuracies as an egg is of meat. It is truly amazing that so many errors could have been crowded into so little space.

The six sentences contain as many distinct blunders! Three by direct statement of fact, and three by direct implication. It is impossible to set these forth in a few lines—I will try to be as brief as is consistent with clearness.

ERRORS OF FACT.

No. 1. "The people of Greece know nothing about sprinkling and pouring as religious rites!

Observation: The people are not more familiar with any religious rite than that of sprinkling, for purification—a baptismos (βαπτισμός) of houses and men, the first of each month, called popularly photismos (φωτισμός) or hagiasmos (ἁγιασμός) enlightening or sanctifying, the two words used most frequently, in the Liturgy as synonymous with baptisma (βάπτισμα).

Pouring, for purification, is practiced by bishops and priests, in every communion service, accompanied by the words from Fs. xxvi: 6: "I will wash my hands in in nocency so will I compass Thine altar O Lord!"

It might be added that it is the custom, in many sections, after a burial, for those who return to the residence, to have water poured over their hands.

No. 2. "Every church in Greece requires its members to be baptized, buried with Christ!" i. e., immersed!

Observation: Theoretically, the Greek Church does profess trine immersion; but this is not the case practically. I never saw any one immersed, i. e., submerged at all—if buried it is with the head left out! The body, to the shoulders, is submerged; but the head is made wet, three times, by throwing the water, quickly, over it. It is not considered to vitiate the act, to leave the head unburied. To put a baby, forty days old, under water three times, would be cruel if not dangerous. Adults are rarely baptized, only when some one is proselytized. I never witnessed the ceremony.

No. 3. "Even the Presbyterians doing mission work in Greece have had to abandon the practice of sprinkling or pouring, for baptism!"

Observation; We have not abandoned or adopted any mode. The compound mode, above described, is more frequent with us than sprinkling, where the parents, distinctly understanding that mode means nothing, prefer this one, as most of them do.

ERRORS BY IMPLICATION.

No. 1. "An American traveller asked a professor in the University of Athens, what baptidzo (βαπτιζω) meant and the reply was that the word had but one meaning,"

Observation: It is implied here that a Greek professor knows more than a German, or American professor of ancient Greek. This is far from being the case. This answer would be enough to show it; but the modern Greeks have no lexicon with which every scholar in America is not familiar. Their lexicons are all translations, from either the German or English lexicons, and they all give several meanings for this word! The word has but one meaning now which is to baptize as the Greeks perform it, not necessarily to immerse; but that is true of many words, which once had a different, even several meanings. It is possibly a waste of time to illustrate this, but to take a familiar example, which is almost an exact parallel, the word alogon (ἄλογον) now means only a horse, but it originally meant any kind of animal almost.

No. 2. "Even the Presbyterians have had to abandon the practice of sprinkling, or pouring, for baptism."

Observation: It is implied here that we, or our people, accept this mode from some other reason than that of liberty in non-essentials. We recognize this as a mode, we practice it, if at all, only on the ground, always stated, that having had to abandon so much that was positively wrong and vitiated the sacrament, such as oil, exorcism, etc., etc., in the rite, as usually performed, we are willing to retain or recognize, this mode, although cumbersome, when it is not contended for as the only mode. But it is necessary to repeat the statement, we never immerse—for that is not the custom among the Greeks and no one demands it.

No. 3. "What will our Pedo Baptist friends do with these Greeks for being faithful to God's word?"

Observation: It is implied here that the Greeks immerse, and not infants. Every Greek child is baptized, as described above when a little over a month old! We will answer this question by asking another like unto it.

What will our immersionist [of adults] friends do with these Pedo Baptist Greeks for being faithful to God's word? They may be called this; but they are really Paido-effusionists [child sprinklers] and only Pedo-Baptists [feet immersionists], if Baptists at all.

I regret that this article has grown so much upon my hands, but I hope the matter is important enough to warrant this full statement and that it will put an end to a great deal of nonsense that has been written on this subject.

I have had several other inquiries on this same subject—one from a minister in your State came yesterday. I have been careful in every point I have made and have the word of many members and even bishops in the Greek Church to bear me out in these statements.

T. R. SAMPSON.

ENCOURAGING RESPONSES.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

It may enconrage Bro. McCorkle and others as it rejoices me to be able to report that my cry for help for Caswell Missions has not been entirely unheeded. Notwithstanding the hard times God has put it into the hearts of some of his people to give even of their great poverty to help provide houses of worship for those who are without these sources of blessings.

As all the contributions received have been acknowledged personally, except one from "a member of Westminster church," I shall not give the names of the contributors but will only classify them by Synods.

From North Carolina I have received $26.85 with a promise of $15 more. From Tennessee, $1; Louisiana, 50 cents; Texas, $6; Illinois, $5; Pennsylvania, $19.10. This makes a total, including what is promised, of $103.45.

But, Christians of North Carolina, remember this is only a little over one fourth of the $400 necessary to build the four churches needed at once in the mission field of Caswell. One of these churches has been brought near enough to completion to be used. But it would have been exceedingly uncomfortable, if we had had much severe weather this year. Another one has been begun and the others will be started and all will be pushed along just as fast as the means shall be furnished.

Just a word as to the contributions received. They have come from both rich and poor, from men, women and children, from individuals, societies and churches. Two little girls sent a "birthday gift." One lady a part of "the Lord's tithe." One came from a man and his wife who wanted to be "one of one hundred to furnish the money asked for." One was sent as the joint contribution of two societies in the same church. One was a collection taken up in a mission church. Two were family collections. One good lady got up a church entertainment and by this means was enabled to send a contribution which amounted to more than one-third of all that has been received.

These facts connected with some of the contributions are mentioned in order that they may provoke others to love and to good works, and be the means of causing them to go and do likewise.

TO THE SESSIONS AND SABBATH SCHOOL WORKERS OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

In obedience to the directions of Presbytery (see minutes of '93 page 95) arrangements will be made for a Sabbath-school convention to be held in the Presbyterian church, Salisbury, N. C., Wednesday, April 11th, 1894, the day before the spring meeting of Presbytery.

The convention will be called to order at 9 o'clock a. m. A copy of the programme will be mailed to each session so that the delegates may come prepared to take part in the discussion. Ministers, Sabbath-school officers, and delegates to Presbytery will be enrolled as members of the convention. Let each school be represented by one or more delegates.

Pastors are respectfully requested to read this notice to each of their congregations, respectively and insist on having each school represented.

Clerks of sessions are earnestly requested to forward the Sabbath-school reports to the agent's address, Mill Hill, N. C., on or before April 1st, 1894, so that he may have more time in which to prepare his report to Presbytery, and that the facts as to the condition of the work may be presented to the convention. The agent would respectfully call attention to the recommendation in Bro. Anderson's last annual report: "In view of the fact that we have reports from three more churches than last year, and yet five less teachers and forty-three scholars less and fifty-seven less additions to the communion, your agent would recommend that the Presbytery call the attention of the sessions and congregations to the facts, and affectionately urge them to a more faithful and diligent use of this most efficient branch of Church work, and that this recommendation be published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN and minutes of Presbytery."

According to the report mentioned above, about thirty-seven of the fifty churches sent reports to Presbytery. What shall we do about this matter? Let each delegate come in the strength of the Lord, praying for a blessing upon this important work.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Feb. 21, 1894.

The second week of the Moody and Sankey meetings closed last night with an audience as large as Convention Hall could accommodate. Public interest in the meetings is increasing, instead of diminishing, as one might have supposed would have been the case after holding two meetings a day for two weeks, with the exception of Saturdays. Our ministers have many of them testified to the great good that has already been accomplished, and much more is expected and prayed for. There is only one trouble about such mammoth audiences as are attending these meetings. A very large proportion of the people—probably more than half of them—find it impossible to hear the words spoken from the platform. Let me give you some idea of how big this hall is. It is an entire city square in length and the entire door space is taken up with folding chairs, seating in round numbers six thousand people. The speaker's platform is two-fifths of the entire length from one end of the hall, being at the bottom of the elevated tiers of seats occupied by the 1,500 members of the choir. The other three-fifths is occupied by rows of folding chairs with spacious aisles between, and at the extreme end is a small gallery seating several hundred people, which is always filled. This arrangement places the speaker almost in the center of his hearers, and the acoustic properties of the hall are excellent, while the order maintained is phenomenal when the size of the audiences are considered, but no man has a voice of sufficient compass to reach so many people clearly, even during a ten minute talk, and Mr. Moody often talks much longer. The result is that many of those who go are unable to hear connectedly. It is positively painful to see how Mr. Sankey strains himself in his effort to make his singing heard by all.

Hon. Luther Benson, of Indiana, who is regarded by many as the wearer of the mantle of the late John B. Gough, delivered one of the most graphic temperance addresses ever heard here, Sunday afternoon, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. It would be difficult to imagine a more horribly realistic bit of word painting than his description of his own sufferings from delirium tremens in the days when he was a victim of intemperance. Mr. Benson is a thorough believer in the doctrine of "no compromise" in dealing with the alcoholic evil. While here he accepted an invitation to deliver an address at the memorial services to be held in Washington on March 22d, in honor of the late Gen. Neal B. Dow, of Maine.

Senator Peffer delivered an address on mutual dependence, Sunday night at Foundry church, the foundation of which was the golden rule.

The Treasury Department yesterday began forwarding the new bonds to those who subscribed for them, taking the $1,000 denomination first.

Rev. Dr. Sunderland, the President's pastor, christened little Esther Cleveland last Sunday afternoon, in the Blue Room at the White House. It was the same room in which President and Mrs. Cleveland were married.

Owing to the inability of the sub-committee to agree the tariff has not been reported to the Senate Finance Committee and senators are apparently very much in doubt as to when it will be reported. The House finds itself utterly unable to do business on account of the opposition to Mr. Bland's bill for the coinage of the seigniorage and the absence of a considerable number of members. A caucus of the majority has declared that the bill shall be kept before the House until disposed of, but its opponents by refusing to vote, thus breaking a quorum, have prevented action. This has now been going on a whole week. Extraordinary efforts are being made to get the absent members back to Washington so that those who favor the bill can muster a quorum of their own.

There are two notable things, aside from politics, in connection with the nomination and confirmation of Senator White, of Louisiana, to the vacancy in the United States Supreme Court, the previous nominations to which caused long and more or less bitter contests in the Senate, resulting in the rejection of two nominations—Messrs. Hornblower and Peckam, of New York. Justice White is the first man who ever stepped from the U. S. Senate to the bench of the Supreme Court, and the second member of the Roman Catholic Church to sit upon that court, the first having been Chief Justice Taney, whose "Dred Scott" decision is a part of the history of the United States well remembered by many persons still living. There was no opposition to Justice White, his nomination being confirmed without even the formality of being referred to the Judiciary committee. His intimacy with the Cod Napoleon, which bears upon many cases originating in the States included in the Louisiana purchase, and of the spirit of the Latin civil law are said to have caused him to be nominated.

March 11th.—Jacob at Bethel.

Gen. xxviii. 10-22. Commit vss. 12–14.
Golden Text.—Behold I am with thee, and will keep thee. Gen. xxviii. 15.
Topic.—Jacob's vow to God.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. Study the sequel to the story of the last lesson as found in chapter xxvii. Note Isaac's increasing feebleness, and the influence of the flesh overcoming in his mind the voice of God that Jacob should be the heir; note that Esau was now acting as a "supplanter" in his readiness to take what he knew God had promised to Jacob and that he himself had bargained away to Jacob. Note the lack of faith in Rebekah and Jacob in trying to help out God's plans by sinful methods just as Sarah and Abraham had done in the matter of Hagar. See the bitter consequences of sin to all: Isaac trembling as he recognizes God's hand and sees his own sin in trying to defeat God's hand; Rebekah fearful for the life of her favorite and sending him away—we do not know that she ever saw him again; Esau vainly grieving over the consequences of his own choice; Jacob an exile from his home and fearful for his life in consequence of his own fraud. Isaac's spiritual nature re-asserts itself in the prompt surrender to the will of God when his eyes are opened to his sin, by confirming the blessing upon Jacob (xxvii. 33; xxviii. 3, 4.) With these things in mind try to realize the contents of Jacob's mind as he journeyed—thoughts of what his own sin and folly had brought him, mingled with memories of his father's blessing and the Divine purpose concerning him: What would be the outcome of it all?

Second Step. Master the points of the story by careful reading and re-reading of the lesson until you have a vivid picture of the lonely wanderer, the desolate couch, the splendid vision, the magnificent promise, the waking recognition of God, the solemn vow and the memorial stone.

Third Step Take up any points needing explanation, consulting your helps:

Vs. 10. Went out. Trace journey on map.

Vs. 11. A certain place, afterwards designated as Bethel. It was already consecrated ground. Compare xii. 8.

All night. Not the first night, probably the the third; Moriah was reached by Abraham the third day from Beersheba, and Jacob would travel faster. (See map.)

Vs. 12. Dreamed: a real dream naturally growing out of his thoughts and surrouudings, but sent by God to make a turning point in Jacob's life. God really spoke to him, but spoke through the medium of the dream.

A ladder, etc. We are told that the rough, zig-zag path up to the mountain (xii. 8) had much resemblance to a lofty stairway, which the dim light after sundowon would magnify. Thus his surroundings made the furniture for his dream.

Angels of God. Ministering spirits to carry out God's purpose without the blundering interference of man.

Vss. 13–15. The full Abrahamic promise in all its details with the added feature of protection and restoration to the wanderer.

Vs. 19. Beth-el, that is, The House of God.

Vs. The Lord shall be my God. We are hardly to understand Jacob as making his choice of God conditional. Indeed the "if" of the original does not necessarily imply uncertainty. The idea is rather that if God does so and so, or since He will do so and so, he will make acknowledgment of Jehovah as his God by establishing his worship at Bethel and by giving tithes.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson and compare it with the one below:

SUMMARY. [Under pretence of seeking a wife at his father's command, but really to escape the wrath of Esau], Jacob went out from Beersheba towards Haran. On a certain night he rested after sundown and lay down to sleep with a stone for his pillow. In his sleep he dreamed that a ladder extended from earth to heaven on which God's angels ascended and descended. From the summit Jehovah spoke to him and declaring himself to be the God of Abraham and Isaac, renewed with Jacob the Abrahamic covenant and promised him protection and a safe return. Jacob was filled with awe at the presence of God and taking the stone on which he had rested he set it up for a pillar, anointed it with oil, and declared that if God fulfilled His promise to him he would make this God's house and give God a tenth of all that he possessed. This was the origin of the name Beth el, superseding the Gentile name Luz.

Fifth Step. Take the topics of the Lesson and get the light of God's word upon them:

1. The unseen world.
   (a) Closely linked to this:—Behold a ladder.
   By Divine promise: vs. 15; Is. xliii. 2; Matt. xxviii. 20.
   By heavenly messengers: vs. 12; Ps. xxxiv. 7; Matt. iv. 11; Heb i. 14.
   By the Incarnation: John i. 51; xiv. 6; Heb. ii 14–16.
   By the gift of the Holy Ghost: 1 Cor. iii. 16; Eph. ii 22.
   (b) Revealed to faith:—Surely the Lord is in this place. 2 Kings vi. 17; 2 Cor. iv. 18; 1 Cor. ii. 9, 10.
2. Memorial Stones. Their use.
   (a) As monuments of historic facts: Josh. iv. 6, 7.
   (b) As witnesses between men: Gen. xxxi. 45, 46, 48–53; Josh. xxii. 26, 27.
   (c) In grateful commemoration of God's mercies: 1 Sam. vii. 12.
3. The Tithe.
   (a) An expression of homage: Gen xiv. 18–20; Heb. vii. 4, 7.
   (b) A voluntary vow: Gen. xxviii. 22.
   (2) A law for Israel: Lev. xxvii. 30–34; Mal. iii. 8.
   (d) Modified in the Christian Church: 1 Cor. xvi 2; 2 Cor. viii. 12; ix. 6, 7.

Sixth Step. Make the lesson practical by studying Jacob's vow, considering it: (1) as praiseworthy, because involving (a) recognition of God's presence (vss. 16, 17), (b) reliance upon God's promises (vss. 20, 21), reverence for God's house (vss. 18, 19), confession of God's help (vss. 21, 22); (2) as defective, because involving no confession of his sin and reparation for his wrongs to his brother. Bethel was not complete without Peniel (xxxii. 24–30).

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Bring out especially the fitness of the dream to Jacob's condition, as treated in the "First Step" of the study. The ordinary teaching of this lesson will be much helped by having the scholars memorize, "Nearer my God, to Thee." The third verse, omitted in our old church hymn books, is of special significance.

There let the way appear,
Steps unto heaven:
All that thou sendest me,
In mercy given,
Angels to beckon me
Nearer, my God to thee,
Nearer to thee.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF FEB. 14.

25. Jephthah, Judges, xi. 31, 34, 39. (Mesha was not an Israelite.)
26. Because it was not commanded by God. (Those who answered that it was a rash vow had practically the same idea.)
27. Several texts might be given, but Rom. viii. 32, and 1 John iv. 9 are the best. 1 John iii. 16 speaks of Christ's love in dying, rather than the Father's love in giving. John iii. 16 had to be ruled out because texts not quoted in the Lesson Study were called for.

31. How many allusions to this incident do you find in the subsequent history of Jacob, and where?
32. What prophet alludes to the events of this lesson, and where?
33. What familiar hymn besides the one alluded to above is founded upon this lesson?

STILL ANOTHER PRIZE.

Mrs. S. G. Lewis, of Wilmington, offers a prize for Wilmington Presbytery similar to the one mentioned last week for Mecklenburg. The count will begin from March 1—that is from the answers to the questions in this week's paper. These second prizes, we hope, will encourage others to begin who may feel that it is too late to contend for the Synodical Prize. Now let us hear from the other Presbyteries.

Teachers' Exchange.

ANOTHER SUNDAY-SCHOOL BUILDING.

We had the pleasure last week of seeing the Sunday-school building of the Fayetteville church, which is now about ready for occupancy. It is built against the side of the church, the opposite side coming out in the form of a semi octagon, with large windows. A large porch forms a common vestibule to the church and Sunday-school; at the rear is a similar projection constituting an airy, well-lighted Primary Room. A flight of stairs in the main room leads to a second floor in which the Bible classes will be accommodated. We congratulate Bro. McKelway on this valuable and usetul addition to his facilities for work.

PRAYERS IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Do superintendents and others who make the prayers in the Sunday-school keep in mind what is the object of these prayers? The prayers one generally hears in the Sunday-school are such as would be appropriate for a Teachers' Prayer-meeting, or a meeting of parents, but are not at all appropiate for the Sunday-school. The prayer in the Sunday-school is not a prayer for the children but it is to voice the prayers of all, officers, teachers and scholars,—especially scholars. It should therefore be (1) brief; children's minds cannot be long occupied in such an exercise, (2) simple, that they may follow it, (3) definite, that their hearts may take hold of it, (4) For a few objects, that their interest and attention may not be divested and their minds confused, (5) for such objects as they can appreciate and enter into—else they have no part in it.

It is NOW that the great strength and purity of the ROYAL stand out as a friend in need to those who desire to practise Economy in the Kitchen. Each spoonful does its perfect work. SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

At 11 o'clock last Saturday night it began to snow here and continued to do so during almost the entire day, Sunday, and Sunday night. Such a Sunday one hardly ever experiences in a lifetime. I have not heard of a church service having been held in any of our churches in consequence. The snow is deep and there is much suffering among the poor for wood and food. To-day, Monday, is beautiful.

Greensboro, N. C., Feb. 26th.

The first snowstorm of the season for Wilmington occurred last Saturday afternoon, beginning about 4 o'clock and ending about 10 p. m. The ground was covered to depth of an inch or two, but rain next day carried all off before Monday morning. In Raleigh, Durham and other places the storm was quite severe.

In Halifax county, the Register of Deeds says, the number of mortgages has not been reduced but the amounts are not so large as usual and the people are cancelling these rapidly The country is much better off than last year.

On Saturday last snow covered the ground, for the first time in three years in Houston, Texas; Chattanooga, Tenn., at the same time got three inches of snow. Dallas had over a foot of snow from the same storm. The day before in Canton, Miss., the the sleet broke down valuable trees and strained telegraph wires—and so all through the South and Southwest the storm was felt.

A special to the N. O. Picayune from San Antonio, Texas, Feb. 24th, says: The drought and cold weather are causing the death of cattle by the thousands in the lower Rio Grande counties. During the past few weeks there have been shipping from Alice Station on the San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway 15,000 hides of cattle which died from starvation and exposure. Several thousand hides have also been shipped from other points in that section.

FOR THE FAMILY.

SOME OF THESE DAYS.

Some of these days all the skies will be brighter—
Some of these days all the burdens be lighter;
Hearts will be happier—souls will be whiter—
Some of these days!

Some of these days, in the deserts upspringing,
Fountains shall flash, while the joy-bells are ringing,
And the world—with its sweetest of birds shall go singing
Some of these days!

Some of these days! Let us bear with our sorrow;
Faith in the future—its light we may borrow;
There will be joy in the golden to-morrow—
Some of these days!

Items for Lady Readers.

Peter Paul Rubens, the greatest of Belgian painters, was born in the little town of Siegen, in 1577. His mother had intended that he should study law, but, like all the artists who are born, not made, his talent for painting soon asserted itself, and he was put to study art. He was most fond at first of painting landscapes. Rubens was perfectly devoted to his mother, and one of his first pictures was a portrait of her.

When he was 23 years old he went, like all the other great artists, to Italy. Through the influence of a friend Rubens met Gonzaga, duke of Mantua, and was appointed painter to the court. Rubens did not spend his time going to parties and having a good time, but when he was not hard at work painting he was reading good books, for he was too smart to waste his time on pleasure alone. Often when he was painting he would have some one read aloud to him. He staid in Italy for eight years, and then was called home by the illness of his mother, but she died before he reached home. He grieved so much for her that he shut himself up for four months in the abbey where she was buried. He did not go back to Italy, but remained in Antwerp, and a year after his mother's death he married.

He built a beautiful home in Antwerp. He had two children, both boys, to whom he was devoted. Rubens was now rich and famous, but he worked as hard as ever. In summer he got up at 4 o'clock, went first to mass, and then to work. His favorite exercise was riding, and always every afternoon he rode for an hour or two. In the evening he received his friends, and so he spent a quiet, regular and yet always busy life. Once an alchemist asked Rubens to go into partnership with him, The great painter answered: "You have come twenty years too late. I found out the secret of transmuting metals long ago;" then pointing to his palette and brushes, he added: "Everything I touch with these turns to gold."

A new honor was now conferred on Rubens. Marie de Medici summoned him to Paris to paint twenty-two immense pictures, illustrating her life, for her palace of the Luxembourg. The queen was delighted with his pictures, taking lessons from him in drawing, and often while he was at work she would sit and talk to him.

Rubens was specially fond of painting children, and his pictures were so lifelike that once, where some children were standing looking at his painting of a child, one of them exclaimed: "Does Rubens mix blood with his paints?"

Rubens went to England and painted a number of pictures for King Charles I. The king knighted him, and after the ceremony, gave him the sword, a handsome set of silver, a diamond ring and a rich chain, to which was fastened a picture of the king. Rubens ever after wore this around his neck.

Rubens' wife died in 1626, and four years afterwards he married again, a young girl only 16 years old and very rich. Rubens was then 53 years old. During the last years of his life Rubens suffered much from gout. He died May 30th, 1640. He was buried, at night, as was the custom, and all the people followed him to the grave. Among them were sixty orphan children with torches. At his own request a "Holy Family," one of his finest pictures, was hung above his tomb. In this picture are the portraits of himself, his youngest son, his father and his two wives. Rubens left his sketches to whichever son might become an artist, or to whichever daughter might marry an artist, but not one carried out his conditions. There is a fine monument erected to his memory in one of the public squares of Antwerp.

Pineapple salad is made as follows: Chop a ripe pineapple very fine, add half a cup of sugar, two cut-up oranges, cut across the grain, one banana, the juice of half a lemon, and a dash of black pepper. It is the pepper that seems to accentuate all the flavors of the fruits.

Things Useful.

Frosting Without Eggs.—Five tablespoonfuls of milk, one cup of granulated sugar. Boil five minutes.

To make orange sherbet, boil a pint and a half sugar in three pints of water for twenty-five minutes; then add in the juice of twenty oranges and one lemon, strain, and freeze. A pretty way to serve this is to put it in the skins of oranges.

To Clean Steel Knives.—Steel knives or other articles which have become rusty should be rubbed with a little sweet oil, then left for a day or two in a dry place, and then rubbed with a finely powdered unslaked lime until every vestige of the rust has disappeared, and kept in a dry place wrapped up in a bit of flannel.

Peanut Brittle.—Crush a quart of peanuts with a rolling pin, after removing the external shell and the red covering of the kernel. Melt slowly, pouring in a little at a time to prevent caking, a pound and a half of granulated sugar. Just as soon as the sugar is melted stir in the nuts and pour out on buttered plates or pans quite thin. Draw off in squares, and when cold it will easily break up. Other nuts will answer, but peanuts are preferred.

THE STORK C.

An Amusing Bird Story Told by a German Clergyman.

I heard last summer a true story, which seemed to me worthy the ear of young readers. It was narrated by a clergyman to a group of young folks on a hotel piazza. I shall not tell his name, because I know the story better than the historian.

Several years ago this gentleman was living in the German capital with his family. There were many new sights and sounds to interest the American family, but nothing more fascinating than the colony of white storks which settled on the adjacent house tops and made a bird village of the nestled chimney stacks.

The birds had such an air of proprietorship and general coziness, that some member of the family insisted that that particular part of the city was the regular summer home of these tourists, who returned to their old quarters each season, in human fashion. This idea was not accepted as fact, and there were many speculations as to some possible means of testing the theory. Not being up in the stork language, no one could ask questions and get answers, neither could any mortal remember the fine points of stork physiognomy from year to year.

A plan was finally decided upon, and one particularly aristocratic monarch-of-all-I-survey-looking bird was enticed by a good dinner into the garden. There a silver ring was placed about his leg, on which was engraved "Berlin, 1888." He then flew back to his favorite chimney, and ere long he joined the passing flocks that were constantly leaving for the south. Many a thought followed the feathered fugitive during the long winter, and at the first sign of spring eager eyes watched for the return of the travelers. After many days, a distant line of storks, far up in the blue, came into view. Over the clergyman's house several detached themselves from the sky caravan and hovered around the dwelling. A tempting feast was prepared, and presently the weary pilgrims flew down into the yard. Friendly eyes watched every movement with joyous welcome. Imagine the surprise when one of the flock was seen to have two silver rings upon its legs!

Behold! the old ring was back again, and accompanying it another, which read: "India sends greeting to Berlin."

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D.

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.
Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.
"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

My exhibit of Seeds and Garden Vegetables was awarded several Premiums and a Special Diploma by Piedmont Exposition Judges in 1891. Incouraged by this success, I sent a collection of Seeds to the World's Fair, and was awarded Medal and Diploma for best collection there. This is high endorsement, for the Seed met in competition those great seed houses of this country, but mine got there beautifully. I have had experience with the various seeds offered the farmers, and my judgment says the collection below is the best. The collection is a choice selection of Garden Vegetable Seeds, and is gotten up with the idea of establishing a seed business: 28 papers (extra large) of choice Vegetable Seed; 1 package containing 200 Annuals (Flower); 1 package my Cotton, "King's Improved;" 1 package of my Corn, "King's Improved"—all postpaid for $1.00. CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

HOW TO DO IT.

The fields are all white,
And the reapers are few;
We children are willing,
But what can we do
To work for our Lord in His harvest?

Our hands are so small,
And our words are so weak,
We cannot teach others.
How then shall we seek
To work for our Lord in the harvest?

We'll work by our prayers,
By the pennies we bring,
By small self-denials—
The least little thing
May work for our Lord in his harvest?

Until by-and-by
As the years pass at length,
We too may be reapers,
And go forth in strength
To work for our Lord in his harvest?

—Children's Record.

How Roxy Found Children's Day.

Roxy had lived with the Fosters ever since she could remember. Now she was eight years old, but small for her age.

It was Roxy here, and Roxy there, until the poor child grew so weary and discouraged that nothing seemed left but to relieve her over-wrought feelings in a flood of tears. And then Mrs. Foster would remind her that if she hadn't taken pity on her, and brought her home from the poor-house, she would be there at the present time. Roxy often wondered if the poor-house could be much worse than the place she now called home.

Poor little Roxy! She had but one friend on the whole Foster farm, and that was "Shag," the curly little black dog, who, being no favorite himself, felt for the lonely child. The two waifs were united in a bond of sympathy and pity for each other. And so Roxy had one firm friend who loved her most faithfully, and who in return received all the affection of her starved little heart.

Roxy had learned to read a little, having attended the district school several months during the two winters after she was six years old. But Mrs. Foster thought it a waste of time to let her go in the summer time, and said that the girl would have to work for a living, and would be better off without any cranky notions about education. So poor little Roxy had to drudge through the long summer days. When other children were running about, and growing strong, her thin, stooping shoulders were bearing burdens that would have been heavy for much stronger ones.

About a month before "Children's Day," Roxy read in her slow, uncertain way, a long article about its accompanying exercises, its floral decoration, its music and birds, its happy children who were to take part, and for whom it was especially observed and celebrated.

And then the lonely child began to wonder why she could have no such days—no flowers, no music or pleasure of any kind.

The brown, tangled head rested upon Shag's, tears rolled down the sad little face, and the thin, undeveloped form trembled with the great sobs that came straight from the grieving heart of this child who had known so little of joy or happiness.

Shag kissed away her tears in his doggish way, and did his best to cheer up his only friend's sorrowful spirits.

At last a happy thought struck Roxy. Why could not she and Shag go to the city and find Children's Day? Why had she not thought of that before? Children's Day must be for all children—why not for her?

So Roxy planned and dreamed about the day when she would start to find Children's Day. Not a word did she say to the Fosters, for she well knew that would mean death to all her plans, but she whispered her precious secret to Shag, charging him over and over not to mention it.

She kept the piece of paper with the date of the auspicious day upon it, and lived in a happy dream of anticipation from that time. The day of all days dawned clear and full of sunshine. Long before any of the Foster family were awake, Roxy stole quietly out of the house, with Shag close at her heels, her little bare feet brushing the dew from the grasss, her limp pink sunbonnet falling over her face, and her patched calico dress fluttering in the gentle breeze that blew so sweet and fresh against her face.

On she trudged, never once thinking of turning back, or with the least regret for those she had left behind. Had she not all that cared for or loved her following close by her side? As she was passing one house, a large dog ran out to the road barking furiously, and Roxy was frightened terribly, but aside from being thrown down in the thick dust of the road she was not hurt. Shag, being a little frightened too, ran between her feet, throwing her down; but when he saw that something unpleasant had befallen his beloved mistress he fell upon the cause of all their trouble and reduced him to a state of apparently abject fear.

And now a thought came to Roxy that gave her pleasure as well as anxiety. The piece of paper she had treasured so carefully said that each child must bring flowers, if only a few, but where would she find them? Of course, if Children's Day was for her, she must take some kind of flowers, or else they might not let her and Shag in. So she turned into a strip of woodland lying along one side of the road, and found handful after handful of sweet wood-violets, looking up at her with their dear, fragrant faces.

The birds sang, as they hopped and flitted from limb to limb. It was so cool and restful within the shadows that Roxy and Shag rested a long time before they started on again, and, when they turned once more into the road, Roxy's pink sunbonnet was full to overflowing with sweet wood-violets.

How tired these two foot-sore travelers were before the spires of the city greeted their tired eyes! Poor little Shag limped painfully but bravely along, and Roxy could scarcely move one little red, blistered foot after the other.

At last, the streets are before them. More than one curious gaze of the passers-by are turned in their direction. Shag limps along, his tongue hanging out, panting and thirsty; Roxy walks slowly behind, sunbonnet in hand filled with violets, her tangled hair falling about her face, little rivulets down each cheek made by tears and past, the faded calico dress hanging limply upon the thin, childish form, the swollen, blistered feet, bare and red; all telling of an uncared-for child, a lonely, unloved creature, yet, none the less "one of His little ones."

Up the long street the strange looking pair make their way, eagerly watching for the place where she could find Children's Day. Finally they paused in front of a church to rest. At that moment the sweet tones of an organ floated out to them, and a chorus children's voices rang upward like bird-songs.

Roxy was all excitement and glad expectation now. Her little body quivered with joy and happiness.

"Oh Shag, we've found it! we've found it! Come on, poor Shag, now your foot won't hurt you any more. We'll have such a nice time, Shag. Just hear the music; and I can most smell the posies that the paper told about, can't you, Shag?"

Quickly the child, followed by the faithful Shag, hurried into the vestibule of the church, and on up the aisle, never stopping a moment until the altar was reached. Then pausing, in front of the kindly-faced minister, Roxy held out her old pink sunbonnet, in her eagerness to bestow her offering, spilling her sweet blossoms.

Her voice rang through the church clearly and distinctly:

"Please take my flowers, won't you? I've come so far, Shag and me, and we're tired and hungry; but we've found Children's Day, and you'll let us stay, won't you? I brought the posies—all the ones I could find, Shag and me." But here she began to realize that the great church was full of strange faces, and that they were all looking at her. But there was not a smile; not even among the children.

It was so pathetic, so touching, that it appealed to every heart, young and old, The now frightened, bashful child was not the only one sobbing in that large assembly.

Roxy did not stand alone but a moment. A woman with a face shining with purity and nobleness, took her by the hand and seating her in her own pew, wiped the dirty tear-stained face with her own fine, soft handkerchief, talking to her and soothing her as poor little Roxy had never been talked to before.

And that was not all. The minister drew such a lesson and talked to the children so beautifully about the incident that had just transpired, that those who heard it, never forgot. The impress of that ragged child's earnest faith, her struggle to reach something bright and sweet in life, will live with them while life lasts.

What became of Roxy? After careful inquiry and proper action, the sweet-faced lady adopted her. And as Roxy did not think she could live without "Shag" her only friend in the lonely time, before she found "Children's Day," he lived to a fat old age with his old and his new mistresses.—The Comfort.

Japanese Babies.

Do you know how the babies of Japan are taken care of?

Those of the middle classes are nursed in much the same way as the babies of our country; but those of the poor people, when but a few months old, are strapped upon the back of a larger brother or sister, themselves not more than five or six years of age, who play about all day long, indifferent to the load on their back, and the baby looks over the shoulders of its carrier, and watches their games with evident delight.

Probably not many of our boys and girls would care to have a baby on their back all day, even though they loved it ever so much. It seems as though it would be a very heavy load, doesn't it? And it would be for the little Japan boy or girl, too, were they not trained for it. The training is done in this way:

When but two years old a very small sack of sand is strapped of their backs, and as they grow older the load is gradually made heavier, until at the age of four or five the weight of the sack of sand is equal to that of a baby, and they are then ready for a baby brother or sister to be strapped on.

Where there are no other children in the family the mother carries the baby in the same manner, and in this way can nurse it all day, and attend to her housework at the same time.—H. H. Bevis, in Our Little Men and Women.

TO KEEP HER YOUTH, a woman must keep her health. All the "beautifiers" in the world won't do as much for you as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With that, you can see the good that's done, as well as feel it. That regulates all the womanly functions, improves your digestion, enriches your blood, brings refreshing sleep, and builds up, strengthens, and repairs every part of your system.

In every one of the "female complaints" and weaknesses that make women old and miserable, the "Prescription" will certainly cure. It's the only guaranteed remedy. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in the case of every weak or suffering woman, she'll have her money back.

You pay only for the good you get.

There's the very best evidence that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure your Catarrh. It's this promise, made by the makers of the medicine: "If your Catarrh can't be cured, no matter what your case is, we'll pay you $500."

LIGHT LITERATURE.

By this we do not mean what is pleasant to read, not requiring much attention or thought, some of which is helpful and restful; but what is trashy and of hurtful tendency and effect. The title will serve us to call attention to pernicious periodicals as well as bad books. When having reference to the one book of Ecclesiastes, which he was writing, and giving sanction and commendation to the Book then being given by inspiration and now complete and perfect and true in every letter as our Bible of the Old and New Testaments, SOLOMON, the wise king of Israel, wrote these words: "Of making many books, there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh." The meaning of the first clause depends on a truth going before it that the Bible as one book of many parts written by many hands, in many times, under many conditions, by one inspiration, under one Shepherd is the only book that satisfies and rests. It alone is always and altogether true. When we turn away from that or even when holding to that we go into fields of human research and learning and activity, there is no end to the making of books, and none of them give final answers to the problems they are meant to solve, none of them give the last analysis of the subject they are meant to discuss, none of them give restful refuge of reason or desires from the distresses and perplexities of life. Hence the added phrase: "and much study is a weariness of the flesh." The surface meaning is true that much study is a serious tax of the muscular and nervous forces, but the real meaning is more true that the desire for exact learning and for complete knowledge or for the gratification of taste and imagination, in reading, while it may receive much pleasure and benefit, is not satisfied out of the Bible. The one Book is sufficient, and all other books may help or please only as aids, companions or servants to those whose only infallible rule of faith and practice is the Bible.

There is a class of light literature prepared of set purpose to put in natural and practical association in every day life, some of the principles or doctrines, promises or helps of the Bible. They sometimes offer the solution of a question of Christian conduct in social life or give in an attractive colloquial, or discursive setting historical or geographical knowledge or facts of discovery or observation in travel and of science. There is also a vast amount of books called novels, differing in style and purpose from age to age. These are helpful so far as written in clear pure style, with a good moral tone, controlled by Christian principles and read in due proportion to books of closer thinking and for real learning and mental training. They must never be allowed to supercede the regular systematic reading of the Bible. It is to be lamented that many parents and private or public teachers who have not learned the many beauties and attractions of the Bible, suffer the young in their charge to form a taste for this light literature on the false supposition that the Bible is not attractive and pleasant reading. Some will allow this for want of industry and care to get acquainted with the Bible themselves and to show the way of this to the young.

There is a mass of pernicious light literature which we do not care to advertise by referring to it here, but because of the harm it is doing in its many forms we must denounce it. In one form it is sent out in cheap paper and pictures as parts of serial stories to appear in subsequent numbers. The whole of it is bad. It is meant to catch the unwary. It is a money-making scheme with highly colored accounts of impossible adventures and often immoral conduct. If the money spent in buying the later issues were only saved and used to buy cheap editions of good books there would be great saving of morals too. The illustrated weeklies offering pictures and accounts of crime and jealousy and unchastity and sold all through the land, ought to be shut out as completely and with as strict a quarantine against their immoral contagion as we enforce against yellow fever or cholera. They are making the fibre of much of the growing immorality, licentiousness and dishonesty of our youth. The chaste teachings of pure mothers is undone by these lewd nude figures and a sort of halo is cast about the ravisher, prize-fighter and burglar. These papers are a popular substitute for the dime novel, and cheap blood and thunder stories of fighting with Indians and of burglaries and robberies. They are a nuisance and a pest in our social fabric.

The country is just now receiving a flood of cheap publications, containing the smart sayings of the most popular unbeliever of the times and of gibes, innuendoes and insinuations against this blessed Bible which has lighted the pathway of all our sainted fathers and pillowed the faith of our mothers in many a night of darkness and in the last sleep. It is sometimes said that preachers are opposed to this class of books because they are afraid of losing their power by them. Yes, just as the physician warns against the use of alcoholic intoxicants because it will make powerless the remedies for diseases that may otherwise be successfully treated, and as he warns against the use of deadly poison because it will remove the patient from his care or help. So is the preacher aware that this is worse than alcoholic stimulant and more deadly than the poison, because they first excite and then destroy the soul; his enemies because they put the soul beyond the remedies he has to offer in the gospel. This class of books and periodicals is light in the worst sense. It is all worthless, lighter than vanity, but weighty as lead to drag the soul down to death. If only one case of a thousand can be shown where hearing or reading this has done any good, has elevated the moral tone or improved the character or made the life purer what we here write may be taken with some allowance, but until this is done we protest against the evil of it and beseech all to follow that which is true and good in reading as well as in living.

If there were no pure literature, or if it were too costly being only available for the rich; if there were no illustrated papers pure and bright and entertaining; if there were no libraries for the young and circulating libraries for all classes; if all these we denounce did good, what we here write might be discounted. If the Bible had no parts attractive to the young, no literary attractions for the cultured, no right principles for the life, no variety for the many tastes, and no great matters for the thoughtful what we here write might be offset.

If there were any books that prepared for time and eternity, we might admit them; but while there are none such dissociated from the Bible, we call again to this one issue that there is but one book infallible and satisfying and no literature, specially no light literature, should be tolerated in rivalry or abuse of that book; and no literature that diminishes our interest or deadens our sensibilities to the teachings of the Bible is worthy to be called literature.

JOHN Y. McKANE, WHO VIOLATED the election laws, prominent as he was in political and social circles, has donned the stripes and is now doing duty in the Sing Sing state prison. It is a triumph for good morals. Hereafter men in that locality, who are disposed to set at defiance the rights of others to the elective franchise, will think seriously before undertaking such villainy.

HERE AND THERE.

ARTICLES COMMUNICATED, FOUND ON our second and third pages are delightful, our readers will join us in saying. Prof. MOORE conclude his Historical Sketch of Union Seminary and Dr. BLAIKIE, of Edinburgh, furnishes an article on Regenerated Homes. Next week we will give our readers an article from Dr. McGILVARY on misson work in Siam and an article on work in Edinburgh, Scotland, "on Reaching Our Poor;" from one of our ministers who lately has gone there. Rev. S. G. WALKER has sent us an article on the subject of Co-operation in Colored Evangelization, which is specially interesting as from the pen of a colored minister. It will appear next week.

"If there is sin, it is the reading public's sin, and not the publisher's. We may be sure if church-members stop reading papers on Sunday the Sunday issues will be abandoned."

This regarding the Sunday newspaper appeared in a religious contemporary from whom better things might be expected. It certainly is indefensible morals, and surely as justification for Sunday publishing is exceedingly poor logic. Since when has it come to pass that he who furnishes the opportunity for sin and ready means for commission of sin is guiltless of sin?—this even if you can acquit of direct, abstract sin, which here cannot easily be done. The principle here laid down by our brother editor would excuse every institution of vice, that exists the world throughout, to ensnare souls and people the realms of perdition; it would justify every gambling hell, every den of infamy, every liquor saloon.

LET US APPLY IT TO THE LIQUOR-saloon and see: Suppose one saying: "If there is sin, it is the dram-drinker's sin, and not the liquor-seller's. We may be sure if people stop drinking the liquor-saloons would not exist." Usually this would be considered simply execrable as a justification of the soul-destroying traffic. And yet, listen! we are told it is precisely the argument(?) by which professing Christians who keep so many of our corner bar-rooms defend their conduct. They put it concisely thus: "The sin is not in the selling, but in the drinking."

HOW SAD IT IS WHEN ONE WHO IS A leader in religious thought gets astray on a question of morals. One tires of the plain well-beaten path and takes a little airing on another line, lightly weighing the consequences of this departure. And if possible sadder still is the thought that an act like this is forever beyond recall. Awhile ago a widely influential religious newspaper, strangely enough, employed its pen in such a defence of moderate drinking as was hardly to be distinguished from advocacy of the practice. There was no ill intent in this, it would seem to have been simply one of those perversions of the moral sense which is totally inexplicable. But who shall measure the harvest of sin and woe which shall spread through the vast future from a seed-sowing so unwise.

THE ASHEBORO COURIER IS ABOUT right when it says:

"If all the churches in the land were to turn out members who refuse to pay their debts there would be fewer members, but the world would have confidence in those who were left in Zion. Then membership in the church would be a badge of distinction worth more than gold and rubies."

The only trouble is to know when non-payment is the result of sheer inability and when of downright dishonesty. Every honest man pays his debts when he can, even if to do so causes great personal sacrifice. But as every dishonest man denies his ability, and his statements could not ordinarily be disproved, the matter has to stand a matter of conscience. A church-member who can pay his debts and refuses to do so is very, very, far from clean at heart.

WE INVITE PARTICULAR ATTENTION to the article "The Matter Explained" on our fourth page, as there has been considerable misapprehension concerning the subject discussed.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF THE Roman Catholic nuns employed in the public schools of Pittsburg, Pa., to wear their distinctive dress is to be inquired into. The pastor of St. James's Roman Catholic church says the church will not insist on the garb during school hours, and the sisters will not give religious instruction during those hours, but he thinks—and here is the modest proposition—the local board might grant one room in the school building to the sisters to teach religion [Roman Catholicism] to such as may choose to remain after school hours. In other words the school authorities might directly provide for distinctively teaching Romanism. To the not very acute minds of the Roman hierarchy there would be no combination of Church and State in this.

MR. GLADSTONE HAS RESIGNED THE premiership of Great Britain. He has failed in the great aim of the latter years of his life. Whether one regards this as a desirable result or otherwise, all will concede that he deserves the gratitude of the Irish contingent, which he so implicitly served of late. The way they now regard him, and the way the Roman Catholic Irish denounce him, is but a fresh instance of that ingratitude which casts one aside when he can no longer be made serviceable. The Protestants of Ireland had in great measure ceased to fear Mr. GLADSTONE, for it has been manifest of late that the domination of the Roman hierarchy, to which his efforts tended, would utterly fail of accomplishment.

IT WILL BE UNIVERSALLY CONFESSED that the U. S. Congress, in either branch, is not just now an edifying spectacle to the nations of the world, nor is their conduct such as commends them to the people whose interests they have in charge; and this the members will be apt to learn in the near future.

RECENTLY ABOUT TWENTY MAYORS of cities in Great Britain who are total abstainers from spiritual liquors—twenty of the forty-three who hold this high office in the United Kingdom—met in the Mansion House, London, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor of London and gave their testimony in behalf of abstinence. They were addressed in a telling speech by Sir BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON. Such a meeting is bound to have great influence. Could that gathering be duplicated in this country? We fear not.

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1*st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.*

2*d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper.*"

3*d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.*

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Nuggets From Many Mines.

Some time ago there was much talk of Japanese philosophers, who professed to reconstruct Christianity, to make a Christianity for Japan. Happily we hear nothing now of that quaint misconception. A church they may build, after their own models and according to their own fancy; but the materials, the Christian creed, as the occident has cherished it for two thousand years, is immutable. It is the creed that elevates the individual by its doctrine of the fatherhood of God and the common brotherhood of man; that raises childhood; that protects and elevates woman; that sanctifies marriage; that rescues the the unfortunate; that emancipates the slave; that limits the horrors of war. There may be something better in another planet, but not in the genius of Japan.

After listening to his accusers for some years, it is no more than fair to allow Sir Edwin Arnold to speak for himself:

"I have been criticised for an implied comparison between Buddhism and Christianity, in regard to doctrines derived from them and principles contained in them respectively. No such object was in my mind. For me Christianity, rightly viewed, is the crowned queen of religion, immensely superior to every other; though so great an admirer of much that is great in Hindu philosophy and religion, I would not give one verse of the sermon on the Mount away for twenty epic poems like the Mahabharata, nor exchange the Golden Rule for twenty Apanashads."

The sphere of woman is a narrow one in all heathen lands. In India she "can grind, spin cotton, sometimes pull punkabs, and carry mortar and no other way of supporting herself is open." To be a washerwoman, a cook, a housemaid, a dressmaker or anything else of that kind, is out of the question. Such is public sentiment, and because there are no teachers. Zenana missionaries are endeavoring to work a revolution at this point, and to open up various honorable ways for their sex to earn a livelihood. Industrial schools are likely to multiply in the near future.

An educated Hindu was lately asked what in modern missionary effort made him fear most for the stability of his own religion. He replied, "We do not greatly fear your schools; we need not send our children. We do not fear your books; we need not read them. We do not much fear your peaching; we need not listen. But we dread your women and we dread your doctors, for your doctors are winning our hearts, and your women are winning our homes; and when our hearts and our homes are won what is there left us."

The slaughter-houses of Chicago called out a fierce denunciation from a representative of the Hindu religion, at the Parliament of Religions. He declared that India did not want a Christianity which tolerated such atrocities. Yes, yes, alas! But then "while the Hindu is shocked at the killing of a cow for food, and the Buddhist carefully avoids killing any animal, neither finds special occasion for concern in the death of a man. India, in the past, has been one vast slaughter-house of humanity, under the sanctions of Hinduism. Men have been flayed alive, mangled under wheels of idol cars, drowned in the Ganges "the Sacred River." Women have been cursed, crushed, burned on funeral piles, and subjected to every form of shame. Even to-day harlots form a part of the sacred service of the Hindu temples." As an indignant sister exclaimed "and the representative of this horrible, obscene, filthy religion is invited to Christian America to lecture us on the evils of canned meat! Why could he not find time to answer Mrs. Palmer's question on, What Hinduism has done for women."

The question of the married, versus the unmarried, missionary, is often discussed—and not a few are inclined to prefer the single missionary, especially on account of his supposed cheapness. Cheap things are not always, or generally, the best and there are many reasons why unmarried missionaries are not even desirable in the Eastern countries.

But hear what a converted Hindu now, a minister of the gospel, says: "The home of the missionary has done more to forward the progress of the gospel in India than any other agency. To see a woman, intelligent yet womanly, presiding at the table, voicing her opinion and ideas freely, assisting her husband in his noble work, managing diligently her own household and conducting faithfully her special work among women, is a novel and most interesting sight to a Hindu. The aesthetic and Christian environments of such a home have so impressed the minds of our people that they are endeavoring to adopt this ideal home life, as far as practicable."

For our own part we do not care to hear any man's views of the Fatherhood of God or the Brotherhood of Man, until we know what he holds about the sisterhood of woman and the childhood of children, girls as well as boys.

THE TAPESTRY WEAVERS.

Let us learn a useful lesson—no braver lesson can be—
From the ways of the tapestry weavers on the other side of the sea;
Above their heads the pattern hangs, they study it with care,
And as to and fro the shuttle leaps, their eyes are fastened there.

They tell this curious thing beside, of the patient, plodding weaver:
He works on the wrong side evermore, but works for the right side ever.
It is only when the weaving stops, and the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees his real handiwork; that his marvellous skill is learned.

Ah! the sight of its delicate beauty—it pays him for all his cost;
No rarer, dainter work than his was ever done by the frost!
Then the master bringeth him golden hire, and giveth him praise as well,
And how happy the heart of the weaver is, no tongue but his own can tell.

The years of man are the looms of God, let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are ever weaving, till the mystic web is done,
Weaving blindly, but weaving surely, each for himself his fate;
We may not see how the right side looks—we can only weave and wait.

But, looking above for the pattern, no weaver hath need to fear;
Only let him look clear into heaven—the Perfect Pattern is there.
If he keeps the face of the Saviour forever and always in sight,
His toil shall be sweeter than honey, and his weaving sure to be right.

And when his task is ended, and the web is turned and shown,
He shall hear the voice of the Master; it shall say to him, "Well done!"
And the white-winged angels of heaven, to bear him thence shall come down,
And God shall give him for his hire not golden coin but a crown!

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

BY PROF. W. W. MOORE.

VIII. PERIOD OF ASSURED PROSPERITY, 1885–1894

There can be no doubt about the propriety of the title which we have given to this installment of our sketch. And yet the institution has suffered heavier losses by death during these years than in any equal period of its history. The very fact, however, that its growth has not been checked by the removal from it of such men as Judge Watkins, Dr. White, Dr. Latimer, Dr. Smith, and Dr. Peck, in mournfully rapid succession, is the best proof that it is now firmly established, and is no longer dependent upon any particular man or men for its continued success. Judge F. N. Watkins died on the 5th of September, 1885. He had been Treasurer of the Seminary for more than forty years, having been elected in 1844. "The period," says the memorial adopted by the Board, "embraces several seasons of great financial embarrasment to the Seminary, especially the years of the war, 1861–1865. Through all, he performed his duties not only with conscientious fidelity, but in such a wise and judicious manner, as to gain, yearly more and more the confidence of the Trustees, and often to secure important increase in the investments. Not a cent was ever lost through neglect or mistaken judgment. The only instance in which the Seminary ever suffered loss during his administration resulted from his being overruled by higher authority to make a loan of several thousand dollars."

In 1886 nearly $6,000, bequeathed to the Seminary by Mrs. Henrietta L. Powers, was devoted to the establishment of the Powers Scholarship, in accordance with the provisions of her will.

In the same year, by the will of Mr. David Baylor, the institution received a legacy of $8,000, the greater part of which was used for the erection of an additional professor's residence, on the vacant lot just west of the Library. The remainder was devoted to a number of sorely needed improvements in the seminary building.

The two ancient stoves which had so long disfigured the chapel and mocked the desire of its shivering occupants with promises of warmth which were never fulfilled, were now relegated to the lumber room, together with the excruciating low-backed benches which had for years tortured Protestant students of Theology as though they had been Romish asceties doing penance; and also that long counter, with its faded red curtains, which did duty for a pulpit and over which so many torrents of sacred eloquence had been poured; and instead of these, a furnace was placed in the basement with registers for heating the chapel above, opera chairs were substituted for the benches, a modern reading stand for the archaic counter aforesaid, and pulpit chairs for that vast sofa so strongly suggestive of the iron bed-stead of Og, king of Bashan.

About this time, also, the gymnasium was built and equipped, chiefly through the agency of Dr. Latimer.

In October 1889 the first number of the Union Seminary Magazine was issued, and was received on all hands with a welcome so cordial as to justify the belief of its projectors that there was a real demand for a religious and literary magazine to occupy a place midway between the philosophical quarterlies and our religious weeklies. It has continued ever since to make its regular bi-monthly appearances during the session.

In May 1883 the Board had initiated measures for the establishment of a Fifth Professorship to be known as the chair of English Biblical Study and Pastoral Theology, and later in the same year the Rev. S. T. Martin was appointed Financial Agent to raise the requisite endowment. At the meeting of 1889, in consideration of the liberality of the members of the Second church of Louisville, Ky., it was ordered by the Board that, in accordance with the wishes of some of these generous donors and in honor of an honored servant of God and a distinguished alumnus of this Seminary, the new chair when established shall be known as the "Stuart Robinson Professorship."

In May, 1891, the Rev. T. C. Johnson, pastor of the Third church, Louisville, was chosen to fill this position and entered upon the work of the chair in the following September.

In the meantime Dr. Alexander had resigned the chair of Biblical Literature and the Interpretation of the New Testament, and at the same meeting (May, 1891) the Rev. C. C. Hersman, D. D., LL. D., Chancellor of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, was elected to succeed him.

For seven years the number of students had been steadily increasing, having grown from forty-eight in 1884–1885 to seventy-two in 1890–'91. For the second time in its history since the war the accommodations of the Seminary were outgrown. During the year 1890–'91 thirteen of the students had occupied rented rooms outside of the Seminary. These were no longer available. It was necessary to provide additional accommodations without delay. The Board accordingly requested one of the professors to visit the churches during his vacation for the purpose of bringing this emergency to their attention and asking their assistance in relieving it. The churches visited responded liberally, notwithstanding the financial prostration of the country, and the result of this agency was something over $7,000. Of this amount, $6,500 were used in building and furnishing two additional dormitories, "Geneva Cottage" and "Edinburgh Cottage," each containing eight rooms; and the remainder was used in making certain long needed improvements in the older buildings, with a view to securing two larger lecture rooms and providing better accommodations for the students' Boarding Club. As early as 1876 the Trustees had ordered that arrangements be made for ventilating the lecture rooms, "especially the one occupied by the Trustees at their meetings," and in 1878 they had ordered that the lecture rooms be refurnished with more comfortable accommodations. But things are never done at Hampden-Sidney in indecent haste. So it was not until 1891 that these instructions were carried out. The eastern end of the main building, occupied as a residence first by Dr. Rice and last by Dr. Alexander, was subjected to certain alterations, and the two largest apartments were converted into lecture rooms and furnished with convenient desks. Incredible as it may seem, the students before that had had no facilities whatever for taking notes. At the same time a passage was opened on the second floor to connect these rooms with the rest of the building, and a covering was built over the landing in front of the chapel.

Dr. Chas. White, Secretary of the Board and Intendant of the Seminary, died Nov. 8th, 1891. Dr. Latimer died Feb. 29th, 1892. At the following meeting of the Board (May, 1892), Dr. Johnson was transferred to the chair of Ecclesiastical History and Polity, and the Rev. T. R. English, D. D., pastor of the church at Yorkville, S. C., was elected to the professorship of English Biblical Study and Pastoral Theology. Dr. Smith died (at Petersburg, Va.,) March 14th, 1893, having spent more than forty years of his life in the service of the Seminary. In the autumn of the same year Dr. Peck died (Oct. 2d, 1893,) after thirty-three years of continuous service as a professor. At the request of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees, the Rev. C. R. Vaughan, D. D., consented to teach Dr. Peck's classes in Theology for the rest of the session, and immediately entered upon the work.

There were two notable, donations to the Library in 1893, and a third in 1894. The first was a plaster cast fac simile of the Temple Tablet discovered at Jerusalem in 1871, presented by the Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D. D., of Richmond. The stone is one of those described by Josephus and referred to by the Apostle Paul, which stood on the wall of partition in the Temple precincts, in the time of our Lord, and warned all foreigners not to pass within that limit on pain of death. The second donation was a gift of more than a thousand valuable volumes by the late Rev. Wm. Blackwood, D. D., of Philadelphia.

(No one who examines the records of Union Seminary can fail to be impressed with the fact that the liberality of the Christian people of the North towards this institution has been not less notable than that of the Christian people of the South, both before and since the war. A large part of the money used in the erection of our buildings, and a still larger part of our permanent endowment and other productive funds, were contributed by friends in the North, as well as hundreds of the choicest possessions of our Library.) The donation of 1894, alluded to above, was a copy of Nicol's cast iron model of Palestine, presented by the Rev. Thomas E. Converse, D. D., of Louisville.

The whole number of volumes now in the Library is 15,500. The invested funds of all kinds amount to $305,900. Besides these, the property of the institution consists at present of about eighty acres of land; for residences for professors; a main building, which contains a chapel, refectory, lecture rooms, and dormitories; three additional buildings for dormitories; a superior library building; and a gymnasium. That is to say, the Seminary has a good equipment, and a fair endowment. There are now seventy-four students in attendance, and the average annual attendance is larger than ever before.

What then has Union Seminary done? She has educated one thousand ministers of the everlasting gospel. She has given to the Church some of the noblest preachers ever known in the American pulpit, and a large proportion of our most useful rural and metropolitan pastors, evangelists and missionaries. About two-thirds of all the men we have on foreign soil, preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ to the heathen, are sons of Union Seminary. About three-fourths of all the ministers in the Synod of Virginia, the largest Synod in the Church, and one-half of the ministers in the Synod of North Carolina, the second in size, were trained in this same venerable school of the prophets—and a goodly proportion of the membership of the other Synods as well. Her sons have steadfastly maintained the great doctrines of our faith, have preached Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of sinners, have comforted the sick and the afflicted and the dying, have been leaders of correct public sentiment in hundreds of communities, and in a thousand ways have benefitted and blessed the world.

Every evil to which we do not succumb is a benefactor. We gain the strength of the temptation we resist.—Emerson.

TIDINGS FROM AFAR.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The following is a circular letter to the missionaries of Japan:

NAGOYA, Jan. 22d, 1894.

To the Missionaries Laboring in Japan:

DEAR BRETHREN AND CO-LABORERS:—The Holy Spirit is manifesting Himself in this city.

"The Week of Prayer was observed by the missionaries and the native Christians, the former meeting every afternoon at 4 o'clock, and the latter together with such members of the missionary force as could do so, holding their united gatherings in the evening at 7 o'clock.

"At all these meetings, whatever the subject, the burden of the petitions offered was for power from on high. At the end of the week of prayer the Christians were one in petitioning for a continuation of the nightly services. Accordingly, for one week, with one accord they have met in one place, to pray and wait for the promised blessing.

"As a result the Christians are awakened as never before to a sense of the responsibility that rests upon them, and have been filled with a desire to lead others to Christ. So, at the close of this week of extra services they have matured a plan for aggressive work among unbelievers. They propose to conduct evangelistic services in different parts of the city every night, the foreign and Japanese workers laboring together.

"But the most perfect plans must fail without God's blessing upon them. If divine power is given us it will only be in answer to our earnest petitions. It has ever been thus. Witness the rich ingathering of souls in Yokohama in 1876; recall familiar instances in the history of missions throughout the world; see the eleven hundred converts to Christianity among the Japanese, last year, on the Pacific coast of America; hear the oft repeated injunction of Jesus, 'Ask and ye shall receive.' We believe in the power of prayer.

"While the present situation in Nagoya is the occasion of this letter of rejoicing and earnest appeals for your prayers on our behalf, it also emphasizes the thought, that the supreme need throughout Japan is an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, to the end, that,

"(1) All believers may be endued with power from on high—power to present the teachings of God's word, and wisdom to guide souls to Christ; (2) That the Holy Spirit may enter the hearts of unbelievers and convict them of sin and turn them to the Saviour.

"Therefore, as co-laborers with Christ, let us with one heart meet at the throne of grace each day at noon, to seek and wait for the promised blessing, that the work now begun in Nagoya may result in the saving of many souls, and, further, that throughout the whole Empire we may this year witness a rich ingathering, to the "praise of the glory of His grace." May we show that we dwell in such unity of spirit, that the Lord will "command the blessing."

We remain your sincere fellow-laborers in Christ,

W. C. BUCHANAN,
H. J. HAMILTON,
D. S. SPENCER,
A. R. MORGAN,
Committee.

Under a later date the following was written in a private letter to Mrs. A. E. Randolph:

NAGOYA, Jan. 81st, '94.

* * * "The Week of Prayer was kept by foreigners and natives alike, as usual. The Japanese kept up their meetings for the next week, and the next, and the next.

"The meetings are now going on, and have been continuously, ever since the beginning of the week of prayer—January 7th. The people have been more than usually concerned. The Holy Spirit has manifested Himself here. The meetings are still being continued, and we all trust that still greater things may result—a still greater blessing may descend upon this place.

"You are glad to hear this, I am sure; but I have something to tell you that will make you still more so. Last Thursday on my way to my Bible class * * * little Suguira San came up to me and told me that she wanted to be baptized. That, you know, is the way they express their desire to make a profession of faith. * * * After the class was over, and I was going to speak to Miss Houston a minute, Shizue San came up to me and told me that she too wanted to be baptized!! And on my way home, when leaving the dining room, O—San was there waiting to tell me that she also wanted to make a public profession of her faith; that she had been baptized when young, but wanted now to take this step herself!! In the afternoon, little Hayasha San and Okyo San also told Miss Houston the same good news!! Are you not rejoiced? Two of the first three that you had here as scholars—and three others besides—to come out for Christ. * * *

"Of course all these girls have been thinking about this matter for a long time themselves, but this season of special interest seems to have brought them to a decision. May we not yet hope and pray for greater things?"

A private letter from Mrs. J. L. Stuart, of Hangchow, China, contains the following:

"We are looking with great joy to the arrival of Dr. Houston, though if he carries out his plans, he will not work with us at all. He may change them when he comes, however. In any case, we shall expect great things from the presence of such an able, consecrated man among us; and if by working on a new plan, he can bring in more souls, we shall fervently thank God, for this is what we all desire.

"God is giving us the 'drops of mercy' all the time, as we seldom have a communion season without some additions to our Church; last time Yohvong, one of the school girls, and Ahyun's youngest son. * * * Eleven were examined, and there are always a goodly number of inquirers. I rejoice in the work more and more. * * * We are making progress although it is not all apparent."

Fraternally yours,
S. H. CHESTER,
Acting Secretary.

The Love of Christ.

There was kneeling one day in the church a poor collier lad, some ten or twelve years of age. His hair was rough, his clothes were torn and ragged; his feet were bare. His hands were clasped as in prayer, a sad, wistful look was on his face. I kneeled by his side.

"I want to be good," he said. "I want to belong to the Saviour, but I could trust him if only I could be sure that he loves me."

His had been a hard life in the world, poor heart, how shall I convince him of the fact of the love of God? I spoke to him of friends and playmates.

"Is there anyone you have ever known, who, if you had to die, would be willing to die in your stead to save you?"

A moment's silence, and then with a sweet smile he looked up and said:

"I believe my mother would."

In that brief pause he had looked back on life, and measured a mother's love. Perhaps there passed before his mind the vision of her toil late at night to mend his clothes, or earn to-morrow's bread, and convinced of the reality of a mother's love his heart told him it would be strong unto death.

"Then see what Jesus has done;" and I spoke to him of the bleeding hands and feet of the Crucified. He bowed his face in his hands, as he said:

"I can love him back again, and trust him too."

Thus was the victory of the Crucified won in that young heart. So is it ever with us all.—The Way of Life.

Dear Sir :—Ever since I began to use the Electropoise in our family I have taken frequentoccasion to speak to my friends of its wonderful curative power. We have both the pocket and wall Electropoise, and we would not part with either under any circumstances. I have found that no medicine or drugs will so quickly give relief as the Electropoise and particularly is this true with a cough, or in case of sleeplessness. The application of the instrument almost instantly stops the cough, and thereafter produces sleep. Ordinarily I decline to give public testimonials, for I very much dislike notoriety in any form, but I take pleasure in recommending the Electropoise, because of the wonderful relief it has accomplished in our family.

Yours truly,
MRS. HOWELL E. JACKSON.

REGENERATED HOMES.

BY W. GARDEN BLAIKIE, D. D., LL.D.

It is now fully tdirty years since one of the best and ablest women of England wrote a book entitled "Ragged Homes and How to Mend Them." The rags to be mended, or rather the evils to be removed, were of various sorts. Broken glass and broken plaster were not the worst of them; ignorance, sullenness, quarrelsome tempers, habits of gossiping and evil speaking, indolence, love of drink and all the usual cousins and concomitants of such habits were far harder to deal with. But the lady was a wonderfully skilful mender, and many of the homes in which she applied her hand were so wonderfully transformed that no one would have known them. And she got such wide fame as a homemender that people came to her from all quarters and asked How did you do it? Do give us your recipes, for we have at our own door a vast amount of similar work that perplexes and even baffles us.

The lady was Mrs. Mary Bayly of London, who is still alive at an advanced age, but through ill-health almost entirely confined to her couch. Her husband was a sailor, the late Captain George Bayly, an "elder brother" of the Trinity House. They were likeminded, Christian people, kindly, warm-hearted, deeply touched with the love of Christ, and eager to reflect on the homes of the miserable the sunshine that had been poured on their own hearts. The writer of this paper had the great pleasure of being acquainted with them for many years, and still numbers Mrs. Bayly among his particular friends; and with a warm personal affection for herself he combines great respect for the common-sense and Christian wisdom which have always marked her work as a philanthropist.

The scene of her labors as a homemender was a miserable district called Potteries, in the aristocratic suburb of Kensington in the west of London. In recent years the place has been swept away; it was a strange eyesore in such a situation, but a generation back London here and there presented extraordinary combinations of grandeur and degradation in contact with each other. The chief industry of the place was pig feeding, and the whole locality might fitly be called a pigsty. The inhabitants were little above the animals they fed. They were igorant, dirty, ragged and drunken. Most ladies would have despaired of such a neighborhood, and turned from it with disgust. Not so Mrs. Bayly. She had full confidence in the regenerating power of the Gospel of Christ, and laid great stress on texts like this: "Such were some of you, but ye are washed, ye are justified, ye are sanctified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God,"

In grappling with her work, the one desire that filled Mrs. Bayly's mind was the regeneration, physical and moral, of the people's homes. All through her life she has been burdened with the feeling that through mismanagement and the absence of the Christian spirit innumerable homes that ought to be abodes of sunshine and happiness, and nurseries of useful Christian lives, are turned into dens of disorder and discontent, and send out unhappy beings into the world to become in due time parents, and propagate the mischief and the misery in which they have themselves been brought up. And the one aim of her life has been to make home a sanctuary of love and peace, and to provide for the upbringing of the children in an atmosphere of cheerfulness, contentment and Christian joy.

Accordingly, her first step in dealing with the Potteries was to establish a mothers' meeting. But it was not deemed enough to open a hall with a comfortable fire, sing a hymn or two, and give a suitable address to the mothers, or get a clergyman or missionary to speak to them. All the resources of Christian tact and wisdom were employed to gain the confidence of the mothers, to make the meeting a real attraction to them, to let them see what their homes too often were, and what they might become, to awaken and strengthen all motherly and womanly feelings in their breasts, to reveal to them the faults that ruined their homes, and the method by which they might be regenerated. It needs hardly to be said that Mrs. Bayly expected little good to come from anything short of the power of Christ working in the hearts of the mothers and gendering that love and respect for husband and children which would make them patient, gentle, and affectionate. Mrs. Bayly was much occupied with her own family cares and other duties, but the help of a devoted Bible woman and an excellent city missionary was of the greatest benefit. Besides the ordinary appliances of a mission, a Workman's Hall was erected, which proved an invaluable means of good. It was, we believe, the first of the kind, but it was followed by many more. While it remained it was carried on with great life and spirit, a contrast to many such institutions which from want of tact and energy on the part of the conductors have an air of languor that shows how little good they do. Of course abstinence was one of the great features of the movement, and the Hall was the great center of operations. Upwards of nine hundred signed the pledge, and of these two-thirds kept it. With regard to the money aspect of the abstinence question, taking only four hundred as the number of rigid teetotalers, and ten shillings (two dollars and a half) as the average spent of each on drink, the saving effected was £200 ($1,000) a week, or in one year £10,000 ($50,000). Out of this saving the tailors, drapers, butchers, and bakers of the neighborhood profited abundantly, and a wonderful tranformation became apparent on every side.

In answer to the requests of her friends to tell them "how to do it." Mrs. Bayly many years ago published her book "Ragged Homes and How to Mend Them." The present writer remembers well her visit to Edinburg in 1863, and her introduction to Dr. Guthrie. It needs not to be said that the author of "Ragged Homes" and "A Plea for Ragged Schools" drew most cordially to each other and became life-long friends.

Thirty years have done much, but they have not abolished ragged homes. No, not nearly. Home wisdom is still deplorably lacking, and home misery is the result. And this is not confined to one class of society. Mrs Bayly has seen ragged homes under noble roofs and lordly surroundings. No more striking case of this could be found than that of the first of recent philanthropists—the late Earl of Shaftesbury. Neglected at home, and brought up in the coldest and most loveless atmosphere, he seemed never to know that joyousness of heart which is the natural heritage of children. He used to say that at school as the holidays drew near he was miserable because he was going home, and as they drew to a close he was miserable because he was going back to school. Rich mothers living in pleasure, if they don't make ragged homes in the common sense of the word, make them very ragged morally, and may well tremble to think what answer they shall give at last to the question, Was it not your duty to make home happy to your children?

The subject being still vitally important, Mrs. Bayly, with the help of her daughter, has written another book, presenting briefly the results of her more mature experience, under the title "Home Weal and Home Woe." (London: Nisbet & Co.) It is full of the fruits of mature wisdom, but in a few lines at the end of a paper we find it absolutely impossible to convey any adequate idea of its contents. We limit ourselves to a single incident, as showing the combination of faithfulness and kindness with which she worked. One evening at temperance meeting, missing a mother who was in the habit of going out to work, she asked "Does any one know if Mrs. D——will be here tonight?" A woman replied "O no, she has had one of her children burnt, today." "How unfortunate," exclaimed another, "this is the second she has burnt." "Don't say 'unfortunate,'" struck in Mrs. Bayly; "it was a wicked and cruel thing and a great sin in the sight of God to leave a child where it could set itself on fire. The cries of that little sufferer have gone up into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth." Herself at a white heat, she plead for little children as she had never done, and the meeting was set on fire. Not a stitch of work was done that night; all ordinary ways of proceeding went to the winds. The Spirit of God moved in the meeting, convincing the mothers of sin in neglecting their children. They knelt down weeping and praying. They said they could not go on as they had been doing; but if their husbands brought them so little money, what could they do? Mrs. Bayly gave them suitable counsel, but asked them to call on her one by one during the week. Many a sad case was spread before her. One who thus came told how in her absence one of her little boys had wandered out and got so wet and chilled that he contracted an illness which ended in hip disease, making him a cripple for life. At the meeting this poor woman had been terribly overcome. Going home she had told her husband all about it, and the man was as distressed as the woman. They tried to do better, but the remembrance of the past could not be wiped out. Not long after the father died, and his mourning cry "Poor, poor Johnnie!" showed that to the last he was agonized on account of his thoughtless cruelty.

Drink was the great manufacturer of these ragged homes. And drink involved drink sellers. As the people became teetotalers the drink traffic suffered. Some of the publicans had to give up simply for want of custom. One of these landlords observing that the people had quitted company with drink, did the same. He took to a legitimate business, which prospered. Many years afterward he was asked how he was getting on. "O," he said "we get on steady; we have enough for all our wants, and more, thank God. My wife is a good business woman, and we are never ashamed of what we are doing now. Our children are all growing up respectable, what they would have had little chance of doing if we had stayed at the public-house. The Hall did a deal of good, but it never did a better stroke than when it turned my wife and children out of that public-house. My wife and me are often saying it is the best thing that ever happened to us in all our lives."

Bravo, publican of the Potteries! Many a publican and publican's wife agrees with you in their secret hearts, but they have not the courage to follow their convictions, and it is terrible to think of the alternative—carrying others and drifting themselves to misery and ruin.

A PLEASANT WORD ABOUT OUR COLORED WORK.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The Executive Committee of Colored Evangelization has had much to encourage it of late. From June to November it seemed like a death struggle. But by God's grace the ministers nearly all stood to their posts. Some picked cotton, some worked one way, some another. All suffered. But matters have been brightening ever since October. The Institute opened with very bright prospects. The old students who returned were delighted with the new courses of instruction. In spite of inevitable drawbacks the Academic Department has been a great success. Prof. McAlpine's health has steadily improved. He has not missed a recitation during the entire session. The students, to a man, love him, because he has their interests deeply at heart. His theological instruction is warm with spiritual fire. There are not wanting signs of a revival of genuine religion among the students. They are more active than ever in Sunday-school and other church work. Their need of clothing has been supplied, tho there is now some need of underwear and shoes.

There has not been much sickness among them of a serious type. Dr. Otts has presented each student with a copy of his excellent "Unsettled Questions." They have had several excellent lectures. Their new organ has inspired them to sing better. The two missionary candidates have made steady progress in their studies and in French and medicine. All are waiting with pleasure the coming of a special committee appointed to visit and report on the work being done and on improvements that are needed. There have been twenty-four students all Presbyterians, enrolled during the session, which is the largest number of Presbyterian students ever enrolled in one year. The senior class numbers four. We wish greatly to find fields of labor for them. Who knows of a special field?

ORGANIZATION.

The work is being better and better organized every year. There are at least fifty-six Presbyteries that now have permanent committees on colored work, who are stirring up the churches. We had a most encouraging letter the other day from a lady in the Grand Avenue church, St. Louis, telling us of the organization of a committee of the Ladies' Society who should look after the interests of this work. Is that the first committee of this sort in our Church? Suppose you write and ask about it. It will do good to work along that line.

FINANCE.

The same close economy that has always characterized the management of this work is still being practiced. There are fewer salaried officials connected with the work than for many years. Since October 1st, expenses have been about $200 a month, less than last year. Up to Feb. 1st, '94, receipts amounted to about $6,763; for the same period of last year they were about $7,823. The committee hopes to enter on the new year, April 1st, free of debt. We fully expected that our receipts would fall below those of last year. But we are not at all discouraged, though we are often sorely perplexed. God never intends for us to give up this work to anybody. There has been already growth and progress in it for years. God's people will not let it go backward.

One of our best colored ministers writes, "Presbyterianism is taking hold of the negroes very fast, and if they are ever reformed from their superstition in religion, it must be by our Church. When I first came here they seemed to regard our Church as a Church of strange doctrine, but now they flock to us." Help us, brethren, to pray, to pay and to push powerfully.

Fretting.

A great many of us have the unfortunate habit of fretting over little things and big things and all sorts of things and everything. This is unfortunate and unnecessary for the Christian, it is needless to say, for Christ is able, ready and willing to help in the big things and in the little things. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

This verse will help any one and every one out at any time. If we can take our cares directly to God, we shall always find that help and that comfort and strength and deliverance that he has promised, and that will keep us from the deplorable habit of fretting. The difficulty is we do not take our troubles to him. We are not in the spirit to pray, and we do not feel as if we want to be helped at that particular time and in that particular way, but seemingly prefer to make ourselves and those about us miserable through our fretfulness brought by worries and cares.

But after all it is worth while to remember that although trials and troubles and tribulations, both large and small, will assail us on every hand, and we can always be in hot water and always be in distress if we will, yet with everything taken to God in prayer, the most trifling as well as the heavy trials and distresses will be overcome and we shall be able to have complete control of our disposition to worry and fret.

God's command to Jonah was: "Preach the preaching that I bid you;" and no man is fit to stand in any pulpit who has not the courage to do that very thing. To know the Word and not give it, when it means eternal death to somebody's soul to keep it back, is an awful thing to be answerable for; and yet there are multitudes of watchmen on the walls, who give dead men a false peace because they haven't got the courage to speak the truth.

Davidson:—It is probable that the Davidson College church had the largest congregation in the State on the 25th prox. The religious and secular papers state that on account of the snow, the services were generally abandoned. However, at Davidson there gathered through the deep snow at least 175 people and those who attended were well rewarded, for they witnessed the admission to the church of seven men—two of whom were baptized and one of these was a very aged man. This is but the first fruits of the Pearson services. * * *

DOMESTIC.

The contest which has been raging four years between two factions of the Mormon church in Kanzas and Iowa for possession of church property has ceased. The courts recognize the reorganized church, as entitled to the property and enjoin the Independence church, of Kanzas, from asserting its claims. The headquarters of the successful litigants is at Lamori, Iowa. It has 25,000 members and its President is Joseph Smith—a son of Joseph Smith the prophet of Mormonism.

On last Sunday at the forenoon service Dr. Talmage announced to the congregation of the Brooklyn Tabernacle that he had decided to remain with them as their pastor the financial affairs of the church having been adjusted. He will in the course of the summer make a tour around the world and be gone five months.

We select from the Presbyterian Journal: On Sabbath, February 11th, the first service of the united congregations of the Brick Church and the Church of the Covenant was held in the Brick Church. Dr. J. H. McIlvaine, the pastor of the Church of the Covenant, preached the sermon. The Covenant Church was organized thirty-two years ago next month. and in these years has contributed for religious purpose about $1,000,000. The valuable property of the Church of the Covenant will be sold and the money will be used to establish a permanent endowment for the Brick Church. By this arangement a Presbyterian Church is made secure in the centre of New York City. An interesting historical incident is brought to one's mind by the union of these two churches. It was in the Church of the Covenant that the New School General Assembly met in May, 1869, and the Old School Assembly at the same time met in the Brick Church. This was their last meeting as separate bodies, and it was in these churches that the reunion of the Presbyterian Church, divided for thirty-two years, was effected. There is, therefore, something poetic in the union of the Brick Church and the Church of the Covenant.

A correspondent sends this to the Presbyterian Journal: The Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie welcomed twenty-five new members into the Scotch Presbyterian Church, New York, at the communion on Sabbath, February 11th. This makes an accession of ninety since last October, when the Scotch Church moved from the historic Fourteenth street building to the new and commodious chapel on 95th street. This chapel cost $45,000. The new church, in process of erection, will cost $110,000. The land on which the buildings stand cost $115,000. Thus, when the church is erected, the society will have a property which cost $270,000. The old property on Fourteenth was sold for $315,000. The Scotch Church was organized in 1736 and has occupied four sites. In its long and honored career of 138 years the church has had but six pastors; the Rev. Drs. John Mason, John M. Mason, R. B. C. McLeod, Joseph McElroy, Samuel M. Hamilton and David G. Wylie. It was largely through the earnest and efficient leadership of Dr. Wylie, the present pastor, that the church has been moved so successfully to the new location. The loss in membership will naturally be heavy on account of the removal, but so far about three times as many members have been received as have been dismissed. It is the aim of Dr. Wylie, his session and his people to make the Scotch Church, more than ever before, progressive and aggressive.

DEATH OF REV. G. D. PARKS.

Rev. GEORGE DIXON PARKS died at his home in Charlotte, N. C., on Friday, 2d inst. He had been infirm for some months from a stroke of paralysis, though he appeared in the way of recovery until a week or two since. We clip the following sketch of his labors from the Charlotte News:

Rev. George Dixon Parks was born in April, 1827, and had he lived until next April would have closed his 67th year. He prepared himself for life's duties as a physician, and practiced his profession successfully in the Sharon neighborhood for three or four years. While Rev. Dr. Daniel Baker was conducting his famous revival meeting at Sharon church, Dr. Parks became convinced that he was called of God to preach the gospel and immediately began to prepare himself, unaided, to spend the remainder of his life as an embassador of Christ.

He began preaching in 1857, his first pastoral charge being Steele Creek, where he remained two years. During the first year of Dr. Parks' ministry at Steele Creek he received into the church more than two hundred members, without any outside assistance, which was the largest number of communicants ever received into any one Presbyterian church in a single year in North Carolina.

At the expiration of two years at Steele Creek, Dr. Parks' health became impaired, and a few gentlemen united and sent him as a missionary to Henderson and Transylvania counties, where he laid the foundations of the Presbyterian church in that region.

In 1861 Dr. Parks accepted a call to Third Creek church, Iredell county, and remained there until '66 or '67, when he accepted a call to the pastorate of Sugar Creek church, this county. In 1877 he assumed the pastorate of Sharon church. After serving Sharon for a considerable period, he became evangelist, and preached regularly and faithfully to the vacant churches of Mecklenburg county for nearly four years, when he set about to build Mulberry and William's Chapel churches, which he was serving when prostrated by paralysis last August.

No one man has ever labored more faithfully to build up the cause he loved than Dr. Parks. He was regarded by his co-Presbyters as a man remarkably wise, prudent and practical, willing to labor wherever work was to be done without regard to his own personal comfort or the pecuniary compensation which he might receive.

DEATH OF Dr. D. W. SHANKS.

Dr. DAVID WILLIAM SHANKS died in Danville, Va., on last Sunday. He had been in Danville some fifteen months filling the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church during the enforced absence by illness of Rev. Dr. ALEXANDER MARTIN.

Dr. SHANKS was born in Fincastle, Va., December 30th, 1830. He studied at Washington Collage, Va., and afterwards took three years in law and Greek in the University of Virginia. He became a merchant and a lawyer, but after full theological preparation in Union Seminary was licensed to preach by Montgomery Presbytery April 27th, 1861. He was ordained by East Hanover Presbytery November 29th, 1864. His first pastoral charge was Amelia church which he served four years. He became pastor of Falling Spring church in Montgomery Presbytery in 1868 and continued in this charge seventeen years. Latterly his health has not permitted full and active pastoral work, but he has labored among weak and vacant churches doing faithful service as his health would permit.

UNION SEMINARY MAGAZINE.

This magazine is before us. It is so uniformly excellent that commendation at one time might be stereotyped for continuous use, but it does seem to us that the present number excels the past and will hardly be surpassed hereafter. The Early Days of Union Seminary could be written by none other than the venerable Dr. ROBERT BURWELL, ninety-two years of age, and as reminiscences of seventy years ago, written in what certainly under the circumstances is wonderful ease and in the saintliest spirit, they are exceedingly interesting. Other papers which it is needless to commend are "An Address" delivered in the Seminary chapel on January, 4th, by Dr. MOSES D. HOGE; "What the Terra Cotta Books Contained by Prof. MOORE; "Isaiah versus the Divine Critics"—Rev. W. W. ELWANG; the Power of the Ministry Purely Personal, never Official"—Rev. Dr. M. V. VANLEER—Editorial; Missionary Articles; Local and Alumni Notes; Criticisms and Reviews.

THE MATTER EXPLAINED.

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

Please accept my thanks for inserting the item sent you by telegraph. I would like to ask space enough in your columns to explain fully how this matter stands. Several items have been going the rounds of the papers to the effect that the salary of Rev. Mr. Moore has been pledged and one paper states that he expects to sail very soon. Now let us see if this is so. First, is the salary of Mr. Moore pledged? The church at Midway, through the zeal of its good pastor Bro. McMullen adopted Rev. Mr. Moore as its missionary and pledged toward his salary $400. This is a generous gift for this church and yet as a matter of fact, it does not supply full amount necessary for the support of Mr. Moore. The meagre salary paid a missionary is $600 and thus it appears that we still need two hundred dollars to make up the salary of this devoted man.

Now to the fund question. Even if Mr. Moore's salary has been or can be provided for, does that justify the announcement that he will sail at once or very soon for Japan? Those who read the fact given in your paper several weeks ago, will remember that it was stated that Moore and his little boy could not return to the mission field alone but that God had opened the way for him to go, by calling his sister to the mission work and she now stands ready to accompany her brother.

It will be seen, therefore, that the support of Miss Moore must be secured before Mr. Moore can arrange to sail. This is a call for $600 additional.

But there is a third fact. Suppose Mr. and Miss Moore's salaries are fully pledged—would the way be open then for them to go? Let us see. There must some provision be made for Miss Moore's traveling expenses and outfit and for Mr. Moore's traveling expenses, which would require $600 in addition to the salary fund.

These are the reasons why the appeal was made for $1,800. That seemed a large sum and so it was. But God has already shown that it can be raised if the people will act quickly. In addition to the $225 promised up to February 9th, I have received one dollar from "a friend of missions," making a total in hand of $226. As announced before the Midway church pledges $400 for Mr. Moore's salary and now the Durham church promises $500 provided the balance is raised in March. Already then we have secured $1,126 out of the $1,800 provided the people of the Synod give at once $674.

Brethren, will you do it for the Master's sake, that His gospel may be preached to those who sit in darkness? Let the pastor's pray over this and let the people pray over it, and let us act quickly!

It has been several times intimated that some churches would support one or the other of these missionaries.

Brethren act at once. If March passes before these gifts are pledged, then Mr. and Miss Moore must wait until August to start on account of the climate of Japan.

A few weeks delay in our contributions will delay God's ambassador's for six months in carrying the gospel to the heathen! In that time hundreds of Christless souls will have gone to a Christless grave to enter a Christless eternity! God give us an answer while we ask!

Fraternally,
ALFRED T. GRAHAM.

Davidson, March 1st, 1894.

THE PEARSON MEETING AT DAVIDSON.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

From February 4th–18th inclusive the Davidson College church felt the quickening power of the Holy Spirit to such an extent that it seemed as if the "whole atmosphere was saturated with holy influences." The burning question was the conversion of souls, the reclaiming of cold and indifferent church members and the building up of all in the most holy faith.

For two weeks the well-known Evangelist Rev. R. G. Pearson, preached twice every day (except Saturdays.) The services were at first conducted in the church, but after a week's time, the congregations became so large that it was necessary to use the Commencement Hall, which seats about twelve hundred people. Several times at night the hall was as full as it ever is at the height of the commencement season. In spite of the large crowd, order and quiet reigned and the interest strong even at the first grew steadily as the meeting progressed. And it was a healthful interest aroused not by lurid declamation, nor by sulphurous appeals to the terrors of the unconverted, but by an earnest, forceful, direct, clear, and pointed presentation of the Word of God. Scripture was linked with Scripture in a wonderfully luminous and vigorous manner, and brought home to imagination, intellect and conscience by a variety of illustrations noteworthy for their pungent directness. By far the larger part of them were gathered from the homeliest details of every day life and experience, and appealed with equal power to the most ignorant and most highly educated of his hearers.

But after all the Evangelist's success lies in his self-effacement and spirituality. The man is lost sight of and the message comes with burning, unimpeded directness, from one who is so full of it that the tears start unbidden to the eyes as he makes his tender appeals and the lips quiver with an emotion all the more powerful because every effort is made to restrain it.

The arrangement of the sermons was noteworthy. Every morning (with very few exceptions) there was either a Bible reading or a sermon to Christians. The night sermons were directed to the unconverted. Each set of sermons was arranged in a sort of spiritually progressive series. For Christians, the first was Faith and Works, the middle one, Consecration, the closing one a most uplifting discourse on the Baptism of the Holy Spirit. For the unconverted, the first sermon was on an elementary principle, Regeneration, the middle one on Excuses for not becoming a Christian, the last on "What Shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?" The happy effect of the two sets and the progressive arrangement was twofold: Christians were built up in the faith and encouraged to become Christian workers, and the unconverted had the way made clearer and clearer until it was so clear that nothing was left except the acceptance or rejection of the Savior. After having preached two or three days, inquiry meetings were held every night after the service. In these Mr. Pearson, Rev. A. T. Graham, the pastor, and other Christian workers talked and prayed with the backsliders and the unconverted. Perhaps the power of prayer and of God's Word was felt here even more than during the services, and many a soul was drawn to Christ during those solemn moments of heartfelt communion. It was touching to see how zealous each convert was to bring his unsaved friends into the fold. The heart of the young, keenly sensitive to the appeals of warm-hearted friendship, was thus often given to the friend that sticketh closer than a brother." We must not forget that the prayers of friends of Davidson here and in many widely scattered States of the Union were ascending to a Father who is more willing to grant His Spirit than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children. His gracious answers not only brought unspeakable joy to the many a loved one here and at a distance, but strengthened the faith of many who saw their prayers answered so swiftly and specifically that doubt was impossible.

Night after night numbers professed conversion, or renewed their vows to the church, until at the close of the meeting the whole number converted and reclaimed was in the neighborhood of three hundred. This includes many from the village and the neighborhood and all but about six of the college students. This last statement will gladden the heart of many a friend of Davidson and of many a mother who reads this communication.

In the afternoon at 3.30 Mrs. Pearson held three meetings for the ladies especially, and charmed them by her unaffected and earnest presentation of the truth. She was a most efficient worker in the after-meetings and seemed to understand the art of meeting the difficulties and winning the affections of the young men.

The pastor of the church was instant in season and out of season in his earnest, prayerful talks to the young men, and many of them, we know, would say that he was God's chosen instrument in their conversion. His closing words of thanks to Mr. Pearson were full of beauty born of the sincerest expressions of the heart, and they but reflected the sentiments of the whole community to whom the Evangelist's visit has been, through God's grace, an unspeakable blessing.

MR. MOODY AND HIS WORK IN WASHINGTON.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Let an old friend give you her impressions of a visit to Washington City to hear Mr. Moody, the recollection of which will be one of the many pleasant memories for this life, and an aid to the greater enjoyment of the life to come.

While waiting the arrival of the train, I listened with interest to the various remarks made by those who had heard the great evangelist, and were going again. One of them closed his criticism by remarking that "upon the whole Mr. Moody was worth hearing." We reached the city just in time for the constantly increasing number of passengers to get to Convention Hall" to the afternoon service. The hall, which extends across an entire square, seats six thousand comfortably. When filled, the doors were closed, and the "overflow meeting" of frequently more than a thousand, was conducted in one of the nearest churches by some one of the city pastors, Mr. Sankey frequently singing at both services. When the doors were opened nearly an hour before preaching began, a novel sight presented itself to me, six hundred men and women, old and young, crowding, rushing, running, to hear—the gospel! Not having heard Mr. Moody before, I had never seen such a sea of upturned faces held in undivided attention and under perfect control, as that wonderful old man charms, without the slightest approach of excitement. I think Mr. Spurgeon's mantle must have fallen upon him, and the stars in the crowns of those two consecrated workers will surely be innnmerable.

Mr. Moody has no advantage of personal attractions, polished grace of manner, or pulpit oratory, but an intense love for the Master, and the souls of men, and such an entire filling with the Holy Spirit, as gives him the power to play upon the heart strings of his hearers as he does. I am an orthodox Presbyterian (or think I am) and heard nothing at all at variance with our theology in any of his sermons, or exhortations.

His manner of conducting the "after meetings" is conservative, and all "high pressure" seems to be carefully avoided. Each worker gets upon a card prepared for that purpose, the name, residence and church preferred, by those with whom they converse, and these cards are delivered to the respective pastors, that they may give the instruction and oversight, needed by those under religious impressions. I wish all our ministers and evangelists could spend sometime with Mr. Moody, and learn from him the power in praise, as well as prayer, his pointed way of presenting truth, his art in rousing private Christians to work for the Master, and most of all, to catch the Spirit which makes his life a sort of inspiration to all with whom he comes in contact.

The service of song is both an attraction and power in the meetings. The choir of fifteen hundred singers, gathered from the choirs of all the Protestant churches in the city, is conducted with such skill as to render the "concord of sweet sounds" most effectively. The music is wonderfully inspiriting; the solos sung by the ladies of the city, Mr. Sweney and Mr. Sankey, were all beautiful and impressive. Though Mr. Sankey is not a scientific musician, his singing is done with great feeling, and seems to be an explanation of his words. For me, the crowning glory of the music, was the way in which that great number of vocal and instrumental musicians, would sink into a whisper at the soft repeats, making it sound like an echo softened to exquisite sweetness. Not until I hear the heavenly choir do I anticipate enjoying music more than some that I heard in Convention Hall.

March 18th.—Wine a Mocker.

Prov. xx. 1–7. Commit vss. 1–7.

(A Temperance Lesson.)

Golden Text.—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Prov. xx. 1.

Topic.—The wise avoid all excess.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. This lesson is wholly disconnected with the Bible course we are pursuing, in accordance with the plan of the committee to give a Temperance or Missionary Lesson every three months. There is no connection, therefore to consider, but the first step is to form an idea of the general purpose of these verses. They are not a connected whole like a story or an argument, but there is a general idea running through them all. That idea is not temperance, in the common sense of abstinence from drink, but temperance in the proper sense of self-control, or self-mastery.

Second Step. Master the points of the lesson.

1. The use of intoxicants inconsistent with self-restraint.
2. The need of self-restraint in rulers and ruled.
3. Self-restraint under provocation.
4. Self-restraint in business.
5. Self-restraint in speech.
6. Self-restraint in promise and performance.
7. The blessing of a disciplined character.

Third Step. Consult your helps upon points of difficulty, such as:

Vs. 1. A Mocker. Wine and strong drink considered as a person seeking to be our companion. It is not to be trusted, but mocks at virtue and in the end will mock us. Its pretences of good fellowship are all false.

Strong drink. Any intoxicating beverage, wine applying only to the fermented juice of the grape. Ardent, or distilled liquors were unknown to the Hebrews, and this fact makes ten-fold more impressive all that the Scriptures say of strong drink.

Raging. Better a "brawler" or "rioter," the idea of a person being still carried out.

Vs. 2. Fear of a king. The unbridled license of absolute power was a great evil, but prudence would avoid a conflict with it as one would with a wild beast.

Vs. 3. An honour—only fools think it a disgrace to retire from a conflict.

Vs. 4. The cold. Better as in R. V., the winter. The rainy seasons were the only times when the ground was soft enough to plow. The man who wanted a harvest must have grit enough to stand the rain.

Vs. 5. Counsel, etc. We must not be spouting out our advice to everybody. If it is worth anything men will seek it as they draw waters from a deep well because they are better.

Vs. 6. Proclaim, etc. Rashness in making promises is as plentiful as faithiulness in the performance of them is rare.

Vs. 7. Integrity, that is "whole-ness." The self-restrained man is the only whole man.

Fourth Step. Make a summary of the lesson and compare it with the one below:

SUMMARY.—If you would be a whole man:—
Avoid the deception and riot of drink;
Neither abuse power nor fly against it;
Avoid strife, and win the honors of peace;
Be not self-indulgent but diligent in business;
Keep your counsel till it is sought;
Be slow to promise but faithful to perform;
So shall you leave a blessing to your children.

Fifth Step. Study the topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word:

1. Wine a Mocker. It promises good cheer, good fellowship, quickened intellect, a light heart, but its actual fruits are—
   Poverty, Prov. xxiii. 20, 21.
   Sorrows and ailments, Prov. xxiii. 29, 30.
   Perverted intellect, Is. xxviii. 7; Hos. iv. 11.
   Moral and spiritual stupidity, Is. v. 12; Luke xxi. 34.
   A train of associated sins, Gal. v. 19–27.
   Remorse, Prov. xxiii. 32.
   Shame, Gen. ix. 21, 22.
   Destruction, 2 Sam. xiii. 28; 1 Kings xvi. 9.
   Exclusion from heaven, 1 Cor. vi. 10; Gal. v. 21.
2. The Way of Wisdom.
   With regard to wine, Prov. xxiii. 31.
   With regard to all temptations, Prov. iv. 15.
   With regard to the body, 1 Cor. ix. 25–27.
   With regard to the heart, Prov. iv 23.
   The greatest victory, Prov. xvi. 32.

Sixth Step. Consider whether there is any form of self-indulgence of which you are guilty, and seek the Divine help to put in practice the teachings of the lesson with regard to self-mastery. It may not be intemperance or gluttony, but how about procrastination, sloth, a sharp or gossiping tongue, a quick temper, extravagance, pleasure-seeking?

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

The usual steps can be gone through with, but it is very desirable that the teacher shall illustrate the evils spoken of in the lesson either from reading or observation. Impress temperance in all things, and the habit of self-mastery as the true discipline of life, and point your scholars to Christ who alone is able to keep us from falling, Jude 24.

(We had a slaughter of the hosts this week, but unless we have a hard question or two now and then, how are we going to determine the prize? Only three got all the questions right. The answers generally given to the second part of 29 either refer to events that cannot be called crises, or are mere revolts, which cannot be called joining with the enemies of Israel. The answers to 30 were either not kings, or not kings in Israel, or were not Edomites. The fact that the Herods were Edomites is not stated in the Bible but is so frequently mentioned in the study of this familiar part of Scripture as to put in the range of Sunday-school scholars.)

NEW QUESTIONS.

34. What class of men in the Bible abstained from wine by a voluntary vow?
35. What men abstained because commanded by their father?
36. What men were required to abstain (at certain times) by command of God?

Getting Children to Attend.

How is a scholar who lives at a distance from the Sabbath-school to be induced to attend regularly? The methods of solving this old problem are various; with the pastor's assistance, the parents may be led to see the duty and the importance of sending their children regularly to the Sabbath-school. Parental influence, apart from the question of parent authority, is in most cases the key to the situation. Notice how the attendance prizes at the anniversaries run in families. Distance doesn't count for much, with an earnest mother at the other end of the line.

But besides this, the children must be given something to come for. The superintendent must exert himself to make the exercises interesting, by closing up the waits and gaps in the programme, cutting short the long-winded addresses and prayers (his own, if need be, included), preventing the frequent interruptions which tire out the scholar's power of attention, and the disorder and want of neatness in the room which offend his taste, and so arranging the order of service that the scholars have plenty to do. Extraneous attractions, such as Christmas entertainments, picnics, and Sunday-school orchestra, etc., are well enough in their way, but they do not "draw" like a thoughtful, sympathetic endeavor to meet the actual wants of the scholar.

A similar law prevails in regard to the teacher. Gift-books and reward-cards and invitations to tea are good, but regularity and studiousness and common-sense and love are better. Good, downright love, wisely worked out, will charm a scholar over muddy roads and through hard rains and under hot suns. When all other attractions fail, try love, which "never faileth."—Exchange.

Words of cheer are words of help. Words of gloom are words of harm. There is a bright side and a dark side to every phase of life, and to every hour of time. If we speak of the bright side, we bring the brightness into prominence; if we speak of the dark side, we deepen its shadows. It is in our power to help or to hinder by a word any and every person whom we are with.—S. S. Times.

What Christ's prayer was, all true prayer must be; you must pray with the great prayer in sight. You must feel the mountains above you while you work upon your little gardene Little by little your special wishes and the eternal will of God will grow in harmony with one another; all conflict will die away, and the great spiritual landscape from horizon to horizon will be but one.—Lucy Larcom.

Departed this life, at her residence, in this city, Miss PRISCILLA ELDRIDGE LATTA on 12th of February, 1894.

Sympathetic hearts in this community were stirred to their utmost depths by the unexpected announcement of the sudden death of Miss Priscilla Eldridge Latta. But the day before in apparent health, she took part in the services of the sanctuary, and taught her Sabbath class from God's holy Word. Her well-balanced character, calm and equable temperament, her affectionate disposition, endeared her to the hearts of many sincere friends. Her life was shadowed by heavy trials, for her Heavenly Father was steadily polishing this precious stone to adorn His holy temple. The labors of her skillful hands were gratefully placed at the service of the church she loved; she turned from her own trials to the Master's work. Devoted to her dear relatives, beyond all to her dear Redeemer, she was faithful to the end, and has received the crown of life. When God's righteous will, with her was done, He advanced her into the ranks of an eternal and perfect service. May He who wept over the grave of Lazarus, and who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, who bears our sins and carries our sorrows, comfort the hearts of the bereaved, and give them "garments of praise, for spirits of heaviness." For our "loss is her eternal gain." "There remaineth a rest to the people of God."

Our hearts were saddened to learn of the untimely death of LUTHER, the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McGirt, of Rowland, Robeson county, N. C., on Sunday, Feb. 4th. As this manly little fellow was crossing a small stream near his home he accidentally made a misstep, falling into the water, and was drowned. His body was not found till several hours later, and was buried next day at Ashpole church. We mourn his death, but say with the Psalmist and the Apostle, "True and righteous are all His judgments. FOR THE FAMILY.

THE LITTLE ONES HE BLESSED.

I wonder if ever the children
  Who were blessed by the Master of old,
Forget He had made them His treasures,
  The dear little lambs of His fold.
I wonder if, angry and wilful,
  They wandered afar and astray,
The children whose feet had been guided
  So safe and so soon in the way.

One would think that the mothers at evening
  Soft smoothing the silk-tangled hair,
And low leaning down to the murmur
  Of sweet childish voices in prayer,
Oft bade the small pleaders to listen,
  If haply again they might hear
The words of the gentle Redeemer
  Borne swift to the reverent ear.

And my heart cannot cherish the fancy
  That ever those children went wrong,
And were lost from the peace and the shelter,
  Shut out from the feast and the song.
To the days of gray hairs they remembered,
  I think, how the hands that were riven
Were laid on their heads when He uttered,
  "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

He has said it to you, little darling,
  Who spell it in God's Word to-day;
You, too, may be sorry for sinning,
  You also believe and obey,
And 'twill grieve the dear Saviour in heaven
  If one little child shall go wrong,
Be lost from the fold and the shelter,
  Shut out from the feast and the song.

In the picturesque city of Seville was born, in 1617, the greatest painter of Spain, Bartolome Murillo. His father was a mechanic, and the family, though once very wealthy, had become poor. Bartolome had been consecrated to the church, for his mother was very anxious for him to be a priest, but she soon had to give up all such plans, for he showed his artistic talent at a very early age. One day when left at home while his mother was at church, he took a picture of "Jesus and the Lamb," and painted his own hat on the infant Saviour's head, and changed the lamb into a dog. All during school hours he was continually drawing pictures on the margins of his books and on the walls, and many a good scolding he got for it, too.

Murillo studied art in his uncle's studio. When only 22 years old he was left utterly dependent upon himself, for his father and mother were both dead and his uncle had gone away. Murillo was then very poor and not at all famous, and he set up an open-air studio in a public market place, where eatables and old clothes were sold. There he painted his pictures and sold them to the people who came to buy in the market-place. He worked there for two years. He was crazy to travel, to see famous painters and famous cities, but he had no money.

One day he bought a piece of linen, cut it up into pieces, and on them painted pictures of saints, fruits and flowers. He finally sold them, and then he started on foot over the Sierras, to Madrid. When he reached there he had neither money nor friends, but he was not discouraged, for he knew in that city he would find the famous pictures he wished to study. He made his way to Velasquez, then a great artist, and an influential man. Velasquez was very kind to him and made him come to his own home to live. There he met all the leading Spanish artists and prominent court people. He stayed there for three years, and then went back to Seville. He spent three years in painting eleven pictures for a convent. These pictures made him famous, and he got more orders than he could fill.

Just at this time Murillo married a very wealthy lady, and his married life turned out to be a very happy one. Many of his madonnas are the likeness of his wife, and his two sons were his models for the infants Jesus and John.

In 1660 Murillo established an academy of art in Seville. He was very generous and gave all that he earned by painting to the poor.

His last picture was begun when he was 62 years old. He was on a scaffold painting a picture in the Capuchin church, at Cadiz, and falling down, fatally injured himself. He was buried with distinguished honors, for all Seville loved and honored him. Over his grave was placed a stone slab on which were carved his name, a skeleton and the words in Latin, "Live as one who is about to die." Murillo was a good, as well as a great man.—N. O. Picayune.

Things Useful.

To make delicious stewed lobster pick all the meat out from the shells of two good-sized, freshly-boiled lobsters and cut it into square pieces about half an inch in size. Place in a saucepan with an ounce of fresh butter, season with a salt-spoonful of salt and a little red pepper. Cook for five minutes. Then add one-half pint of sweet cream, into which three eggs have been beaten, and stir until amost to the boiling point, when it will be ready to serve. This must be served and eaten while hot.

A 15-inch square of red cheese cloth, with narrow, brier-stitched hem and two strings of worsted braid sewed across one corner, does not sound like anything remarkable, but when one learns it is to wrap up shoes or slippers for bag or trunk the full value of the notion appears. Shoes are the meanest thing to pack or wrap in paper, but the soft cotton wraps them close and the strings keep them in place.

Lemon Sandwiches.—Beat into a teacupful of nicest butter, slightly softened, the raw yolk of one egg and a teaspoonful of French mustard; rub smooth the yolks of two eggs which have been boiled three-quarters of an hour and cooled, and rub into them one-fourth of the butter, then a teaspoonful of lemon juice and a scant half-teaspoonful of salt, add another fourth of the butter, rubbing it in well, another teaspoonful of lemon juice, and so on until all the butter and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice are added, rubbing each thoroughly in; spread evenly and thinly on very thin slices of bread, lay two together, cut into triangles and serve.

THE STORMY PETREL.

Queer Superstitions Sailors Entertain Regarding the Bird.

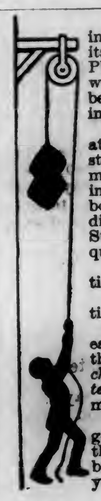
One of the best known of the sea birds is the stormy petrel. It is oftenest seen during storms, flying above the waves in search of shellfish and other small animals that are brought to the surface by the tempest.

The sailors call petrels "Mother Carey's chickens" and do not view them with much favor, owing to their being constant companions of storms. "Jack" thinks that rough weather may be expected when he sees petrels about and is not quite sure that they do not in some way cause the tempest. When the bird is on the outlook for its prey it seems to walk on the water. Hence the seamen of the olden time in allusion to Apostle Peter's walking on the water called the bird petrel, from the Latin Petreilus, "Little Peter."

So far from the sailor's being superstitious as to the capture of another kind of petrel, the cape pigeon, which is of a black-and-white color and about the size of a tame pigeon, I have known Jack to take a hand occasionally in capturing them as a bit of recreation during a dog watch.

In southern latitudes the cape pigeons follow a ship in thousands, says St. Nicholas. A common bottle cork is tied to the end of a piece of thread and trailed astern so that the cork touches the water. This gives the required tautness to the thread.

As the birds fly in clouds from side to side astern some of them constantly strike the thread with their wings, and the resistance is enough to turn them over it, when the thread is wrapped round the wing and the bird is hauled on board. In this manner I have seen hundreds caught in a day.



On one occasion a clipper ship carrying passengers to India captured pigeons by hundreds, and the surgeon by some mischance succeeded in entangling a stormy petrel.

Now, the doctor was an enthusiastic naturalist, and what to the sailors is known as a "land lubber"—that is, he was on his first voyage. The doctor at once took the specimen to his cabin and made preparations to skin and preserve it. In hot haste a deputation of seamen, headed by the old, gray-haired sailmaker, came aft with a request that the petrel be set at liberty, saying that otherwise the ship and all on board would surely suffer.

The doctor, somewhat surprised, intended to set the bird free, but his enthusiasm as a naturalist prevailed over the superstitious warning, and when the sailors had disappeared the bird was added to his collection. The fact soon became known forward among the men, and the doctor was regarded with black looks by the crew for the remainder of the voyage.

In the course of time the good ship anchored in the Hugil river, and that day at dinner the doctor suddenly died.

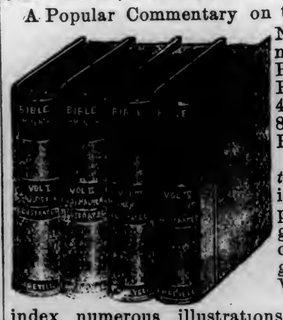
There was a gathering of the sailors around the windlass that dog-watch, and the doctor's sudden death was attributed by the superstitious sailors to his slaughter of the stormy petrel.

THE WAY THEY'RE PUT UP, in sealed glass vials, is enough in itself to recommend Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. It keeps them always fresh and reliable. You can't be sure of the big, old-fashioned pills in wooden or pasteboard boxes.

But these little Pellets are better at every point. By their tonic or strengthening effect on the lining membranes of the intestines, they increase the natural action of the bowels, and permanently cure Jaundice, Biliousness, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, and consequent stupor or drowsiness.

There's no disturbance, no reaction afterward, and their help lasts.

One tiny granule is a gentle laxative; three are cathartic.



They're the smallest in size, the easiest to take, and the easiest in the way they act. They're the cheapest, too, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned.

Nothing else can be "just as good." Tricky dealers always have things to urge upon you which are better for them to sell, but bad for you to buy.

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

Roy's Lesson.

"I do not like him, and I will have nothing whatever to do with him."

Roy Winslow spoke very decidedly; he was rather apt to be positive in his assertions.

"And you are sure that you are right to do so?" asked his mother.

"Certainly; he is not the kind of a fellow I care to associate with, nor one that I suppose you would approve," answered Roy, in a slightly injured tone of voice.

"Circumstances alter cases, Roy. It seems to me Joe has not much of a chance to be different. He hasn't any mother, you know, and his father is not a very good man, I am afraid. If Joe has nothing to help him at home, and you boys all cut him, as you say you do, what is left to him but to go wrong? Aren't you strong enough to reach out a hand and help him up a little, Roy?"

Roy's bright face clouded. Missionary efforts in the abstract were very fascinating, but brought into new life in the shape of helping some one rather disagreeable, they suddenly become very unattractive.

"I am sure, I don't know what I could do for him,", he said.

"'Ask God to show you," his mother answered.

"My mother beats any one I know presenting a cause," Roy said once. "She don't urge you much, nor argufy; she just lays your duty out so plain before you, that you will never feel comfortable until you have done it."

So Roy found that he could not be easy in his mind about Joe White. It was just as his mother said; his home was very different from any of the other boys, and he seemed to have no one to help him, as they did.

Roy was inclined to be a little of a Pharisee; he had rather felt as if he were naturally good, but somehow, as he thought of what his mother said, he wondered if he would have been as good as Joe in his place.

"I guess I am priding myself on my mother's goodness, instead of my own. She has to put me up to everything, and she has hard work getting me up to some of them, that's a fact," he said rather shamefacedly, to himself, as he thought it over. "I'm not so much of a fellow as I thought I was. I wonder, now, if Joe would go to the social with me to-night, if I asked him. O, dear, it would be just horrid having to take him. I wonder if doing good isn't rather tough work, anyway, when you are doing it, instead of thinking or reading about it? Well I'll try to get Joe to go to-night; perhaps we can help him a little."

And, having made up his mind, Roy put on his cap and started for Joe's.

Joe himself was standing at his own gate in an irresolute way. He had come out of the house half an hour or so ago, and had been standing there ever since trying to make his mind up what to do. Jim Morgan and Tom Ryan had asked him to spend the evening with them; they would "show him some fun," they said; but, rough as Joe was, he hesitated. A faint memory of his mother clung to him; he was sure, in his heart of hearts, that she would not have wanted him to go with them. No, he knew well, if she had lived, he would not have wanted her to see him even speak to such fellows.

"But what can I do?" he said to himself, bitterly; "there isn't anyone at home, and the good boys won't have me. I might as well go to the bad and be done with it."

"How are you, Joe? I was just coming down to see you. Wouldn't you like to go with me to the social to-night? We have real good times, I think. I'm sure you would enjoy it. Come on, won't you?"

Joe turned, and looked at Roy a minute.

"He is just such a boy as she would have wanted me to be," he thought, "I'll go with him."

So Joe went and Roy found him less of a trouble than he had expected.

"But that's often the way, isn't it?" he said to his mother. "No matter how tough a thing looks, it isn't usually as hard as you expect, when you really get at it And Joe puzzled me somehow. I spoke to the boys, and we have agreed to see if we cannot help him. Come to think ourselves over, I, for one, don't feel so sure that we're anything 'extry;' but we can all try together, can't we, if our mothers will all help?"

* * * * * * *

"I want to thank you, Roy," said Joe, months after, when he stood up before the world and confessed his intention to serve Christ henceforward. "I want to thank you for asking me to go with you that night. It was the turning point of my life, and I feel, under God, I owe everything to you."

"No, you don't, Joe; you owe it to my mother," answered Roy gravely.

"Then, God bless her!" said Joe fervently.

And in his heart Roy said, "Amen!"

Nurse Powell's Giant.

Winnie Wentworth was a good while eating his supper, and Robbie and Lillie were getting impatient.

Nurse Powell had told them that as soon as Winnie went to sleep, she would come up in the children's room, and begin her story about the giant. It was Children's Evening.

"Hurry, Winnie," they kept saying; "hurry."

Baby Wentworth had been in bed an hour or more.

Finally Nurse sent them off, for she wanted Winnie to finish his supper in peace.

It seemed a long time to wait, but Nurse was ready at last.

Mr. and Mrs. Wentworth always came in Children's Evening, for they liked the stories Nurse Powell told as well as Robbie and Lillie did. Before long they meant to bring Winnie, he was getting so big.

"The first I knew that Electricity was a giant," said Nurse Powell, "was when I was a child about the size of Lillie.

"My brother Roland—who was a boy as large again as Robbie—and I, were out in the garden picking currants.

"All at once there came a heavy rumbling, and such a rattling you never heard.

"'Just hear that old giant,' said Roland. 'Hark!' he whispered, as I started to run into the house.

"'I shan't stay where there are giants,' I told him.

"'Oh! you silly thing,' he laughed. 'Don't you know what that is?'

"I told him that it sounded like a clap of thunder.

"'That's what folks say it is,' and Roland shook his head, and looked wise enough, you may believe. 'But it is the old giant Electricity. See him wink!' and he fairly shouted, he was tickled when a sheet of lightning flashed right in front of us.

"I wondered why he did that, if he was a truly giant, and knew what he was about.

"'He's a clearing up the atmosphere,' said Roland. 'The earth has been sending up vapors, or else the wind has been rubbing against the earth, and taken off a lot of particles that make the air heavy, and the old giant is moving about. When he begins to stir things have to stand around, I can tell you. We couldn't take a long breath,' Roland declared, 'if it wasn't for the old giant's clearing up the air every now and then.'

"He said he had three kinds of winks. They were forked lightning, and sheet lightning, and globular lightning.

"When I asked him about the thunder, he said the old giant was opening and closing his eyes. Of course being a giant, he naturally had big eyes and big eyelids, and they made all that noise coming together."

Mr. Wentworth had to laugh at this odd conceit of Roland's.

"He must have been a very clever boy," he observed. "What do you think?"

The children looked up, and there stood Uncle Jim. Uncle Jim was an electrician, so he could not help enjoying Nurse Powell's story.

"I think he must have been," said Uncle Jim.

"Wasn't the old giant winking, papa?" asked Lillie.

"What do you think, my boy?" asked Mr. Wentworth, turning to Robbie.

"'Course I know thunder is the sound that goes with lightning," said Robbie, "but it is the old giant Electricity, just as Nurse Powell's brother said.

"I think his winking with his great big eyes so we can hear him is splendid. I shall be glad when summer comes, so we can get out of doors and watch him. Won't you, Lillie?"

"If mamma and Nurse go too," Lillie said.

"I'll tell you something better than that," spoke up Uncle Jim. "Run in to my shop some day pretty soon, and see what the old giant is doing down there.

"Let Winnie come too," he urged. "He wants to know what is going on as well as the rest of you."—Gretar Bryar, in Our Little Men and Women.

Celery soup, take two heads of celery and boil them in a pint of water about half an hour, and then mash fine in the water in which they have been cooked. Put on to boil a pint of milk, and in it a slice of onion, a bit of mace, and when it boils up thicken with a tablespoonful of flour, mixed in cold milk. Add a tablespoonful of butter and then stir in your mashed celery; season, strain and serve immediately. This is a good invalid's soup, and is refreshing to everyone.

The Best Medicine.

J. O. WILSON, Contractor and Builder, Sulphur Springs, Texas, thus speaks of Ayer's Pills:

"Ayer's Pills are the best medicine I ever tried; and, in my judgment, no better general remedy could be devised. I have used them in my family and recommended them to my friends and employes for more than twenty years. To my certain knowledge, many cases of the following complaints have been completely and by the use of Ayer's Pills alone: Third day chills, dumb ague, bilious fever, sick headache, rheumatism, flux, dyspepsia, constipation, and hard colds. I know that a moderate use of Ayer's Pills, continued for a few days or weeks, as the nature of the complaint required, would be found an absolute cure for the disorders I have named above."

Permanently Cured

"I have been selling medicine for eight years, and I can safely say that Ayer's Pills give better satisfaction than any other Pill I ever sold."—J. J. Perry, Spottsylvania C. H., Va.

SILVER TRUMPETS.

In the tenth chapter of Numbers there is a record of the command of MOSES to make them. As they were to be a memorial and were to be used in the call to the feast of the Passover and at its close they were probably made of the redemption money paid by Israel as we read in the thirteenth chapter of Exodus. They were to be used by the priests alone for the solemn feasts and assemblies and to call the congregation for the journeyings or returnings to camp. There were but two at the first, when two of the sons of AARON were priests. In the time of SOLOMON there were one hundred and twenty for the priests of the Temple. When the walls of Jericho were encompassed JOSHUA put rams' horns to be blown with the trumpets. From this union comes the annual use of the ram's horn in orthodox synogagues to our day.

These trumpets sounded the signals announcing the commands of the LORD and thereby exhorting the people to rise and obey or to rest and be refreshed. They gave the calls to worship as well as the alarm for war. From them went out the messages of GOD. They were made of redemption money and were sounded by the priests. In all this they were types and have for us spiritual meanings, and instruction. They furnished the figures for our Christian poet to write:

> "The trumpet of the Gospel sounds,
> With an inviting voice."

This gospel is essentially the gospel of redemption. It is for the service and to convey the messages of GOD in the hands of the kingdom of priests. These messages are not now to be given separately from GOD for each several occasion, but are written out as His promises and commands in the revelation we have in the Bible. There is a signal, a message, a call prepared and provided for every occasion and every need of the church and the world. The priests are to study these and the special trumpeters are to be students of the times and needs to sound withal.

There is a reference to this in the thirty-third chapter of Ezekiel. Those who watch for souls, prophets of the new dispensation, as well as of the old, are warned that if they fail of their duty to sound the message or command of GOD they will be held responsible, but if they sound the alarm the sin shall be upon the soul that would not heed the warning.

This use of the trumpet is made an illustration by the Apostle in writing to the Corinthians. In the twelfth chapter he was writing of spiritual gifts that every one might use to the edification of believers. In the thirteenth chapter he turns to the more excellent way of the fruit of the Spirit, which is love; its nature, its value, its power, only to return in the fourteenth chapter to the duty resting on Christians to prophecy—to speak for GOD. As many coveted the gift of tongues he urged rather to prophecy so that every one in hearing would understand, than to speak in an unknown tongue to confusion, saying: "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself for the battle." As there were certain well known signal calls, what value would there be to know all manner of music if that were sounded instead of the right signal. It might make the impression of much culture or learning in music and skill in making beautiful sounds, but it would not summon to duty or call to battle. In the day of battle it would serve rather to confuse. It is all very well for the prophets of the LORD to have learning to understand and skill to sound the signals to announce the messages, as the trumpeter needs to understand music and have practice to sound the proper calls. In either case the learning and skill are not to be paraded to make a great impression, but to be used as servants to give a certain sound.

In every case of the record the use of the silver trumpet was honored of GOD for the success of those who so trusted GOD. When MOSES was to war against MIDIAN he caused the silver trumpet to be sounded and got a great victory from the LORD. When JOSHUA had marched the six days around the walls of Jericho and came to the seventh, the signal was sounded by the silver trumpets taken up and repeated by the rams' horns and echoed in the shouts of the people and the walls of the city fell. Other instances will occur or may be sought by any interested like that of the crowning of SOLOMON and the battle of ABIJAH against JEROBOAM.

Translated into their spiritual meanings these suggest that wherever the gospel is preached, where its notes are sounded with faith in GOD, and as His messages, is always success. Whatever use there may be for fine music and great skill of the cornet as entertaining or pleasing, where that cornet is the trumpet it must give no uncertain sound in the call to battle or the commands of the chief. So whatever use or excellence or attractiveness, there may be in learning, in the gospel, it must all be at service to make simple and plain to the understanding of all, the messages and commands of CHRIST.

Wherever the church is weak and languishing, or worldly and frivolous, it is by the substitution of human learning for the simplicity of the gospel, or the furnishing of aids to worship or the use of unscriptural means to attract the masses. Whenever and wherever the church, with faith in GOD will blow the silver trumpets, and her prophets sound only the signals of grace and truth which came by JESUS CHRIST, success is sure.

A more personal lesson pleads to be heard and heeded. Every Christian is a priest, now that all the ritual and literal priests have passed away with the types and shadows, and as such each Christian is to use the trumpet of the gospel with no uncertain sound. If it be with a spoken word, it must be the command or message of the KING, it must be with purged lips, and whenever thus spoken will be with power. It may be the prophecy of a life, for the only message of the gospel many in the world get is in the lives of Christians. It becomes us to order our lives according to this gospel of the grace of GOD, that they may give no uncertain sound. The character, as it is the more important may often be the more powerful voice of any who lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty and sincerity. Characters built by the grace, and lives ordered in the truth of the gospel, are the calls which men often hear and by which they often arise to obey.

By a ministry faithful to give the certain sound of gospel grace, by a church consecrated to heed the call, by individual lives ordered in the ready response to the call, the world may learn and must hear, or sin by refusing to hear, the silver trumpet.

A BROTHER NOW RESIDING BEYOND our bounds writes: "Though out of the Synod now I still read the paper with unabated interest, and congratulate you and the Synod upon the new features which have added so much to your already excellent paper." We do not propose to give our readers all the kind and pleasant words we have been receiving, but the appreciation with which the ministers who have left our Synod regard the paper and the kindly terms in which they express such appreciation induce this publicity.

HERE AND THERE.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN CATHECHETICAL FORM, compiled by MRS. M. W. PRATT, lately published by our committee at Richmond, in paper cover, at ten cents, is one of the most acceptable small books we have received. It gives Scripture and scholarly references with concise answers to questions not found in other books, and of facts and principles which all our people need to know. This work is very useful for Bible class instruction and should be studied by all our church officers.

WE NEED NOT EXPECT "THAT GOD will interpose to prevent a man from sinning, who either seeks, or willingly encounters, the temptation and the opportunity to sin. When a man finds charm in opportunity and delight in temptation, he has already committed in heart the sin he shrinks from embodying in action; and GOD rarely stands between him and further guilt. We are to keep ourselves [as far as possible] from opportunities and GOD will keep us from sin."—Earnest Thoughts for Every Day.

"IF WE COULD GET THE SECRET HISTORIES of those who stand suddenly discovered as vicious, we should find that they had been through the most polluting preparatory processes; that they had been in the habit of going out and meeting temptation in order that they might enjoy its excitement; that underneath a blameless outward life they have welcomed and entertained sin in their imaginations, until their moral sense was blunted, and they were ready for the deed of which they were thought incapable."—Ibid.

ACCORDING TO PROMISE MADE LAST week we lay before our readers some exceedingly interesting communications. They will be found on our second page. The article from REV. S. G. WALKER, a colored minister, favoring co-operation between the churches on Negro Evangelization, is well worthy of perusal and we doubt whether any stronger presentation can be made on that side of the question. If we are to judge by the lack of interest manifested, however, the matter is already virtually decided against the committee's report and the Assemblies will give it very little attention.

AFTER THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO, when the fortunes of Napoleon had culminated in irretrievable disaster, the following incident occurred:

BLUCHER still smarting under the humiliations which his country had been compelled to suffer from BONAPARTE, gave orders to undermine and blow up the bridge of Jena, that it might not continue to stand a monument proclaiming the defeat of the Prussian army. The work was already in progress when WELLINGTON placed a single British sentinel on the bridge to prevent the accomplishment of BLUCHER'S design. To have proceeded would have involved Prussia in a rupture with Great Britain; for that single obscure individual represented for the time and under the conditions the might and power of the whole British nation.

And so it sometimes falls to the lot of some mere individual, neither great nor renowned, as the representative of the King of Kings to stand in his lot and defy the powers of evil that may surge around him.

HERE IS A PLEASANT LILTLE INCIdent concerning Lord ROSEBERY. It is culled from the New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun:

Lord Rosebery, the new British Premier, is well remembered here. He has paid two visits to New York and did the city thoroughly, going into an extended investigation of our social and public life. While he was passing through one of our public institutions he was attracted by the bright face of a little newsboy and made some inquiries about him. These being satisfactory, he asked the head of the institution to have the boy sent to school at his expense and see that he had every opportunity to make his way in life. From time to time during the years that followed he kept up his interest in the boy's career and was especially pleased to hear of his continued success and progress.

WE DID NOT HAVE THE OPPORTUNITY last week to pay our tribute to the memory of Mrs. MARY HEMENWAY, who had just died in Boston, Mass. The citizens of Wilmington can never afford to forget one who in the trying times just after the late war lavished of her means to give their children educations, which otherwise probably they could not have obtained. Personally the writer will never cease to remember with gratitude Mrs. HEMENWAY, and the venerable Miss AMY M. BRADLEY, through whom the benefactions of the former were so judiciously dispensed. As long as Tileston Normal school building shall stand there will not lack a fitting memorial to the invaluable aid and services of those noble women.

THE CAUSE OF THE BRAZILIAN insurgents has been rapidly waning of late, notwithstanding the effort to create upon the public mind a contrary impression. The news that the government had concentrated its fleet at Rio Janeiro evidently with a view to battle—and in fact had informed those representing foreign nations of its intention—indicated a struggle that must end the contest one way or the other, but the very latest up to time of this writing seems to assure a termination of the conflict, most fortunately, without further bloodshed. The U. S. minister has informed the State Department at Washington that Admiral DE GAMA has through the Portuguese naval commander made overtures to President PEIXTO looking to the surrender of his fleet on condition of safety to himself and his followers. Later news comes through the same channel that DEGAMA has sought refuge on board a Portuguese man of war.

This news appears to be authentic and it justifies the hope that the war is ended. Should a battle take place the chances appear to be that the government will utterly destroy the insurgent fleet. At the same time military operations on land will be so prosecuted as to suppress all opposition in that quarter.

[Very latest: the insurgents have surrendered unconditionally.]

WE CLIP FROM AN EXCHANGE:

There are few agencies in the work of the church more potent than the church newspaper and those who succeed in securing new subscribers and readers for for such organs are not only doing good missionary work, but are conferring a lasting benefit upon the stability and usefulness of the Church.

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.

2d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper."

3d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

The Student Volunteer Movement.

A great convention, of this body, was held from the 28th of February to the 4th of March, in the city of Detroit. The kindness of a few friends made it possible for us to attend this convention, and accept an invitation to deliver an address, on a subject, which had been defined. "The practical situation in the Levant as related to Mission work."

The object of the convention was, to bring together the representatives of the missionary organizations, of all the colleges, theological seminaries and medical schools, the leaders of the missionary societies of North America and prominent missionaries of foreign lands, to consider the great question of speedy and world-wide evangelization.

The attendance far surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the promoters of the scheme.

Something over six hundred delegates were expected. More than twice that number were enrolled and many were present who were not enrolled.

Over fifty seminaries and colleges were represented, and as many missionary organizations—all the influential ones of America.

The program was a most admirable one and covered the whole ground, as completely as was possible.

The mornings were devoted to the discussion of matters, immediately concerning the volunteer. His preparation, intellectual, practical and spiritual. How to promote and foster missionary interest. The extension and development of the S. V. Movement—Its relation to churches and missionary societies, etc., etc.

The afternoons were devoted to section conferences; one on the different phases of missionary work, evangelistic, educational, medical, etc; another on the different fields China, India, Japan, the Levant, etc., and a third to Denominational Conferences—when an opportunity was given for the discussion of those matters which most nearly affected each group of representatves.

At night there were stirring addresses, from some of the strongest speakers on missionary subjects, from both sides of the sea—among whom may be mentioned Drs. Pierson and Gordon, Hudson Taylor and Miss Geraldine Guinness beside a host of others, like Dr. Judson Smith, Robt. E. Spear, and L. D. Wishard, too numerous to mention.

The whole was interspersed with addresses for deepening the spiritual life.

We must confess to have felt, always, some mistrust of this movement and to have gone, considerably prejudiced against it, to Detroit. We attended its sessions most faithfully and conscientiously, in order to be able to form an intelligent and unbiassed opinion with regard to it.

We have had many of our objections or prejudices seriously shaken, if not removed. The most admirable report of the secretary, Mr. Mott, commended itself to our judgment, from beginning to end. There was a candid confession of mistakes and misunderstandings in regard to the pledge, which is now simply a declaration. There was a clear statement of the difficult problems to be solved, and a manly courageous setting forth of the perils by which the movement is beset. There were also wise suggestions, to meet many of these difficulties.

There were no high pressure calls for volunteers. There was an excellent educational exhibit of books maps and other helps.

We cheerfully and frankly testify, that it was a most instructive, helpful, inspiring gathering, and are confident that it will do, it has already done, great good.

Our own Church was represented by Dr. Chester, Revs. D. C. Rankin and T. R. Sampson, and by a noble body of young men, from all of our colleges and seminaries, besides not a few most excellent women, who met and, we are glad to say, took steps towards the formation of a closer connection between our own institutions on these same lines.

A meeting of all the Southern delegates held later, appointed a committee with Dr. McBryde, of Lexington, Va., as its chairman to concert some means, by which the generally confessed, benefits of this meeting might be extended to all our Southern institutions, which were not fully represented.

Still we will not say that everything pleased us or that we would not be able to suggest anything which might make the future meetings more generally acceptable. We will not develop this, but simply say that there was too great prominence given to certain individuals and their special isms, e. g., Preadventism—Perfectionism—Faithism, and women-where-the-way-not-belongism.

We have coined a word, Faithism to designate what some people call Faith; but is not the genuine article as we have understood it.

We have felt the spell of the power in the individuals who present these subjects, and we give them full credit for their sincerity and honesty, but we believe them, in some points, self-deluded, and are convinced that their interpretations of the Scriptures are often far-fetched and their experience very different from many of the most eminent Saints both of church and sacred history.

THE CHAMBERS OF IMAGERY.

EZEK. 8 : 5–15.

Show me no more, O God of love!
  In mercy now forbear,
Nor let my soul's dark imagery,
  Thus tempt me to despair—
I shrink with horror and dismay
  As oft I gaze within,
And see in Thy clear light portrayed,
  Each frightful form of sin.

Each idle thought, each bitter word,
  Each covetous desire,
Each deed unkind is written there,
  As with a pen of fire.
There pride with serpent form is coiled,
  With its envenomed brood,
Envy and jealousy and scorn,
  And passion unsubdued.

The lofty look—The cold disdain,
  The careless, slothful frame,
The cherished though forbidden wish,
  The unforgiving blame;
Time unredeemed, Heaven's choicest gifts
  Ungratefully possessed,
Or turned to idols which dethrone
  My Maker from my breast.

Thus hath Thy searching Spirit shown,
  Alas! though but in part,
The deep, the desperate wickedness.
  Of this deceitful heart!
Shew me no more, All-seeing One,
  Unless Thou first reveal
Thy boundless mercy which can know
  Yet love the sinner still.

Turn not away, O God of love!
  But hear my mournful prayer—
From unknown depths I cry to Thee,
  Soul refuge from despair.
Oh! come with purifying power,
  And purge away my sin -
Rebuild this temple to Thy praise—
  Dwell evermore within.

ANNUAL REPORT OF CHIENGMAI STATION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

STATESVILLE, N. C., Feb. 27th, 1894.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Having received a copy of the annual report of our Chiengmai Station I will send you some extracts from the same. Every one interested in the progress of the gospel in heathen lands will, I think be cheered and encouraged by the facts so clearly stated by the writer Rev. Stanley K. Phraner:

"In submitting the following report of the work accomplished by the missionaries of Chiengmai Station and the churches under its immediate supervision for the year ending November 30th, 1893, we do so with thankful hearts for the mercies the Lord has granted to us and for the blessing He has given to his work.

CHURCHES.

The First Church, of Chiengmai, Mr. Collins stated supply, closes the year with the largest number of accessions in its history. One hundred and thirty-four have been received on examination, six by letter, seventy-eight children baptized and sixty-five dismissed to other churches. The Sunday-school under the charge of Rev. E. B. McGilvary has had an average attendance of 142. A teachers' class meets weekly at his house and the instruction there given has added greatly to the usefulness of the teachers and the interest of the work in the school. The resident missionaries adopt the plan of having one of their number conduct the services at the church, and the rest visit the neighboring villages. This plan was faithfully carried out with excellent results. The Chiengmai church is the mother church of this Laos land. The two churches at Lakawn and Lampoon and the six churches under the care of Chiengmai Station have all been organized with members dismissed from this church. It has performed a grand work in the past, it promises a still grander work in the future. It has now a total adult membership of 719.

Maa Dawk Daang Church, Mr. Phraner Stated Supply. The year has been one of rich spiritual blessings to this church. Forty-one adults have been received on confession of faith, twelve received by letter, twenty-three infants have been baptized. There are now 223 adult members on the roll and a new church building or an enlargement of the old (which was a brick church built by themselves) has become a necessity. Two of the elders are expecting to be licensed by the coming meeting of Presbyteries, one of them (a son-in-law of Nan Intah, the first convert among the Laos) for ordination.

Bethlehem Church, Mr. Collins Stated Supply. Thirteen on examination and one by letter have been received, fifteen children have been baptized. One new elder has been ordained. Every member of the church is faithful in attending the regular services. The Sabbath-school is in charge of the elders and has added largely to its numbers during the year. Eight members of this church have spent all or a part of the school year in the training school at Lampoon.

Chieng Dow Church. In November the committee appointed by Presbytery consisting of Revs. Phraner and Nan Tah visited Chieng Dow and on November 5th organized the church of Chieng Dow with forty-seven adult members and thirty-three non-communing members, all dismissed from the First church of Chiengmai. Four ruling elders were elected, two of whom were formerly elders of the Chiengmai First church. The other two were ordained. Two were received on confession of faith and nine children were baptized.

The Churches of Chieng Saan, Chieng-Hai and Pa Pow were all visited by Dr. McGilvary and Mr. Irwin on their tour to the North. At Chieng Saan four adults were received and two infants baptized, The church has a membership of thirty-four. Chieng Hai church received six adults, infants baptized five, total membership eighty-three. Pa Pow church received four adults and four infants were baptized, whole membership is forty-three. The gradual growth of these churches and the fidelity of their members is worthy of note. Surrounded by heathenism, far removed from us and from each other, with only an annual visit from a missionary, these three little Christian bands are not only holding their own, but year by year adding to their number and are faithful witnesses for Christ in their homes and towns and villages.

Other extracts will be given next week.

Yours,
D. MCGILVARY.

REACHING THE POOR IN EDINBURGH.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

A bright, clear winter day is a rare treat in Scotland. Last Sunday (Feb. 18th) was such a day. When I awoke, my window was all aglow with a grand American sun-rise. The gorgeous clouds seemed to rise far away in the North Sea and shed a soft light upon the towns along the Forth and the little mountains in the park.

Let us take a hasty meal and be off to the drill hall to see the "free breakfast." Every Sunday at eight o'clock a free breakfast is served to the very poor. Thirty or forty ladies and gentlemen work in the meeting. The large hall is for adults and a smaller one for the children, workers have already gone to the lodging houses and through the poorest streets inviting the people to come. Here is a gentleman at the large door giving a leaflet to each one that passes in. Entering, we see three or four hundred already seated, each with a pint mug in hand. On the rostrum, is a choir singing Moody and Sankey hymns. Let us return to the door, and see the people as they enter with their history on their faces. Here comes an anxious face woman leading a blind man. Their spare features and scant, neat clothing tell of a long struggle with "the wolf." Next comes a gray-haired, bloated sot. A few more stages will bring him to the journey's end. Here is an earnest face and an empty sleeve. There comes a young woman with a "wee-bairn" wrapped in a shawl. The premature shadows on the heart-sick face spell out "A drunkard's wife."

Next comes what was a woman? The slovenly gait and garb, the haggard features and the dull, dogged eyes reveal a tale that would make angels weep. Here is an old man tottering in. Truly poverty is a hard master. He is no respecter of persons and has no reverence even for gray hairs. There comes a mother with a bright eyed, but pale-faced daughter. The bloated face of the mother shows all too plainly that she was drunk yesterday. The door-keeper stops the child and tells her she must go around the corner to the children's hall. The little one is confused as if convicted of theft and turns away in tears. The mother explains, "she has no been there afore and dis naken the way."

Let us go with the child. The tears are soon dried and the face is bright again. What a blessing that the morning showers of childhood's sorrow do not last all day. A dozen ragged barefoot children are running up the alley, for it is almost eight o'clock and then the door will be shut. What a chatter! two hundred children from six to sixteen—some singing with the organ, others screaming the words of the hymn, others making their own music and guessing at the words; and a large number talking. There are a dozen ladies and gentlemen endeavoring to keep order, but not succeeding. What a sight—a hall full of unwashed, uncombed, unfed children! Some are ragged and many a little red foot needs a shoe and stocking, but they are children and therefore cheerful. After trying in vain to awake the answering smile in the serious features of the men and women, it is refreshing to see the laughing eyes and playful smile light up the little dirty faces of the children.

The door was closed, the song ended and the leader called for silence; but the order was easier mad an enforced. The leader stormed and stamped and uttered sh-sh-sh! with a powerful voice while all the assistants were enforcing the order: after a minute or two, the noise abated so that the speaker could be easily heard and he called to prayer. It was a noisy prayer time and the assistants had no chance to pray; they had to preserve order; though the majority of the children bowed their heads and were silent.

The prayer was finished and then the sandwiches were rolled in, in large baskets. Each child was given a paper bag containing two large slices of baker's bread and a slice of meat, but it did not contain them long. It was beautiful to see the satisfaction with which they "made themselves at home" with the breakfast. As soon as the bags were distributed, great tin tea-pots were brought and each mug (½ pint) was filled. Some "asked for more" and were more successful than David Copperfield. Soon all were satisfied and the paper bags began to burst. Then they were called to order and behaved like a different lot of children. They listened to a fifteen-minute Bible story and after singing and prayer, were dismissed. There goes one little girl with her breakfast, untouched, under her thin shawl. Perhaps a sick mother is waiting to share it with her. Truly this is preaching the gospel to the poor, and we know that some of the seed will yield the fruit of eternal life.

Most of the children scamper away while others join their parents at the main door. Let us also wait and see the crowd pass out. The maimed, the lamb, the halt, the blind, publicans, harlots, jail birds, and sinners of many kinds, all have been fed with the bread that perisheth and the Bread of Life has been laid once more upon their minds. God grant that they may feed upon Him and live. They go away in all directions, but the great majority of them flock down the Candlemaker's Row to find their lodgings among the pawn shops and barrooms of the Cow Gate and the Grass Market.

[For the N. C. Presbyterian.]

AS SEEN FROM THE BRIGHT SIDE.

The subject of co-operation in the work among the negroes is of great importance and justly demands particular, sober and serious consideration, especially as it regards the Southern States. Hence no one should be surprised or become impatient because of the apparent opposition, or the reluctance with which the brethren yield to the proposed plan of co-operation of the two Assemblies, in the colored work. I regard both the advocates and the opponents, alike as true and worthy friends of the negroes and their best interest. It clearly shows that the Presbyterian Church, United States, is by no means insensible to the demands, or indifferent in respect to work being done among the negroes at their doors; but on the contrary they will contend to the bitter end against any effort or plan which would serve as a means of of alienating the peaceful relation existing between the races at the South.

It is no less evident that the Presbyterian church, U. S. A., feels and recognizes it to be their responsible and indispensable duty to heartily assist in the work of preparing the negroes to become fit servants of God their Master, loyal subjects of the State and true and faithful friends of their fellow-men.

In the light of these facts and with the knowledge that both churches have acquired in respect to the many difficulties and drawbacks which have attended their respective works in the past, would it be unreasonable to entertain and cherish the hope, that a good, practicable plan of co-operation could be adopted and successfully and advantageously prosecuted?

It is my humble and honest opinion that a practicable and comprehensive plan of co-operation discreetly and faithfully carried out would work admirably to the greatest interest of the negro, the South, and to satisfaction of both Assemblies. When it is remembered, that the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., is far from being satisfied with the results attained from the expenditure of more than three millions of dollars in her effort to build up a colored Presbyterian church. And that the Presbyterian Church of U. S., is as far from being pleased with the fruits of her labor or with the available means and forces at command, wherewith to prosecute the work among the negroes.

In the discussions on this subject, little has been done on the bright side, to show the good effect to be derived from the proposed plan:

1. I dare say that the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., would be much gratified to have the privilege of dropping forty or fifty colored ministers from the roll of stated supplies, which act alone would be a saving of at least $75,000 per year, but this would be possible only by the proposed co-operation of the two Assemblies. In most of the Southern cities and large towns, the colored churches could, with the aid of white Presbyterian churches, under whose shadow they stand, support their own pastor or ministers. The interest of the races are so closely allied and intricate that wisdom and prudence would commend the adoption of this cause either from policy or principle or perhaps both.

2. As a natural consequence of this co-operation the weak churches in small towns and in the country would fall into a better system of grouping, not unlike that of the white Presbyterian Church, U. S., by which not a little money could be retained in the Freedmans' treasury.

3. It would also be of great benefit in the selection of good openings, the establishment, and erection of new colored Presbyterian churches.

4. While last but by no means the least. The colored Presbyterian church members would more readily find good paying employment for themselves and their children, by which they would be the more able to contribute to the support of their own pastors and ministers. Thus bringing about the end contemplated and much desired, namely self-supporting colored churches.

Viewing the matter from the bright side the causes for opposition seems to be few and less dangerous. (a.) There will be little or no cause for friction. (b.) The Presbyterian church, U. S., will have ample scope and power to protect everything that would be of interest to the Church, South, and home circle. (c.) In no other way can our Church exert so much power in properly directing influences into channels favorable to the greatest good of our Southland and her citizens.

Yours for the Master's causes,
S. G. WALKER.

What the Gospel Can Do for a Place.

Some time ago I saw a picture which made a deep impression upon me; it was the face of Delia, a young girl rescued by Mrs. Whittemore from the slums of New York. It was her face as it was before and after Christ had come into her heart. Underneath were the words "What the gospel can do for a face;" and as I looked upon it, I thought what a sermon that picture will preach for the power of the gospel.

I would that I could paint for you another picture, one that has come into my own life during the past two months. If I could, I would write underneath "What the gospel can do for a place."

The place bearing the name of Sodom is a little village up among the hills of Vermont. Less than a hundred souls make their home in this little valley, into which we drove one pleasant October day and inquired of a man (banking his house for the winter) the names of any Christians in the place. His answer was, "I don't know of any unless it be myself, and I'm a pretty poor one." Our next question was, "How long is it since you have had any religious meetings here?" to which he replied, "I guess not since the other Sodom was destroyed, for I can't remember when we have had any."

He told us there was no regard for the Sabbath, and the children were growing up with no knowledge of God and the Bible; that there was a great deal of intemperance, and ended by saying he didn't believe it was of much use to try to do anything for Sodom. Our friend, however, offered us his house for a meeting, and we decided to appoint a service of prayer and praise there the following Sabbath.

This was Sodom as we found it. Much prayer was offered for that little meeting, and God heard and answered us abundantly above all that we asked or thought, for thirty-seven gathered in our first meeting, and when we inquired how many would like a Sunday-school in the place, every one approved.

Our next question was, "Who will be your superintendent?" and God had provided for that need, for only a short time before, he had sent to live in their midst one of His own chosen ones, and she was ready to take up this work for her Master. The next Sabbath, the man whom we first met was so aroused that he drove some twelve miles to procure a minister to come and preach for them. They carried in planks for seats into his little kitchen, and over fifty hungry souls gathered there to be fed with the bread of life.

We felt more sure that God was leading in this work in Sodom when we heard that a retired minister living some distance from the place, had come there to see if he could engage their hall to hold meetings on the Sabbath. The people welcomed him gladly, and now they have preaching every Lord's day.

The Lord led us, through the earnest desire of the people, to hold special services there for two weeks, and at our last meeting, seven testified for the Lord. Family altars were established, and a mid-week prayer-meeting was organized, and we left, feeling that many souls would soon be ready to come out on the Lord's side. We left a growing Sunday-school numbering about fifty in membership; they have lately procured a library with the help of a neighboring church, and had their first Christmas tree this year, some of the children learning for the first time the true meaning of the dear Christmas-tide.

Since we left, the minister writes us that salvation is in the air, and that he shall soon have some more special meetings, for he feels that it is a time of supreme opportunity.

This is Sodom as we left it, and what the gospel has done for the place in two months. This is not the only place we find in need of the help of the Lord, for the fields are white. "Pray ye that the Lord may send forth laborers into His harvest," and that we who go may be filled with the power and wisdom of the Holy Ghost.—S. S Union Missionary in Vermont.

THE UNPROFITABLE SERVANT.

In a napkin, smooth and white,
Hidden from my mortal sight,
My one talent lies to-night.

Mine to hoard, or mine to use,
Mine to keep, or mine to lose;
May I not do what I choose?

Ah! the gift was only lent,
With the Giver's known intent,
That it should be wisely spent.

And I know He will demand
Every farthing at my hand,
When I in His presence stand.

What will be my grief and shame,
When I hear my humble name,
And cannot repay His claim!

One poor talent—nothing more!
All the years that have gone o'er
Have not added to the store.

Some will double what they hold,
Others add to it tenfold,
And pay back the shining gold.

Would that I had toiled like them.
All my sloth I now condemn;
Guilty fears my soul o'erwhelm.

Lord, O teach me what to do!
Make me faithful, make me true,
And the sacred trust renew.

Help me, ere too late it be,
Something yet to do for Thee,
Thou who hast done all for me.

BOOKS.

Polly Oliver's Problem, by Kate Douglass Wiggin $1.00. Houghton Mifflin & Co., Boston. Mrs. Wiggin fully appreciates and understands young girls; in her pure, bright and charming style she depicts Polly's "Careering" first in a pleasure resort in California then as the support of her widowed mother in San Francisco. Mrs. Bird is introduced and originates the clearer idea of professional story-telling. Polly is a thorough girl, full of fun and humor and the ambitions of youth, but equal to the responsibilities of life. We heartily recommend the book to our readers.

MAGAZINES.

The Blue and Gray. $1.00 a year. The Patriotic American Co., Philadelphia. The leading article is the eighth paper with Farragut on the Hartford, Mobile Bay. Recollections of an Army Surgeon from Vicksburg to New Orleans Through the Enemy's Country, Leaders of the Civil War, and A City of the New South, are among the table of contents.

The contributors for McClure's Magazine has given in the March number some very readable articles. It is well illustrated with portraits and other pictures. Ruskin's home life is very attractive.

Patience.

The first element in Christian patience is self-control. It requires such a mastery of self as does not allow anger or slothfulness or passion to get control of us. Some are naturally more hasty in temper than others, and a longer discipline is required to acquire the art of ruling our own spirit. But this is the foundation of all true patience, for the test of its presence is the occurrence of those trials which would naturally tempt us to impatience.

But it is more than self-control. "He that endureth to the end" has the same trait of character. There is work to be done, toilsome, and painful and wearying, work all the more distasteful because it cannot be laid aside, but must be taken up afresh with each returning day. Here is where endurance shows itself. The man who is reckless and gallant in battle is not always the best on a long march, when hunger and fatigue have to be endured. The gallant troop who will make a brilliant dash against the enemy, may not be able to stand hour after hour the withering fire of hidden batteries. The English doggedness and the French enthusiasm have sometimes been pitted against each other in battle, and it was at Waterloo that the value of stern endurance was tested. The traditional remark of the Duke of Wellington is, "The day will depend on who can hold out longest." This is such a very homely virtue in every-day life, that we are not disposed to think highly of it. Just to take up the daily burden and perform for the thousandth time the bit of drudgery, just to plod on the same old dull way of duty, just to watch over the small interests entrusted to us with fidelity, these seem to be things not deserving of any special praise. Yet how many thousands of human beings find life made up in just this way. Little change, little excitement, little renown from their calling, but their work is absolutely essential to the well-being of society. These obscure, patient toilers deserve the kindly recognition and the ready help of these more fortunate than themselves. Their lot in life would be wonderfully brightened by an effort to give them occasional respite, to take off some of the weight of their burdens, and to prevent their becoming mere machines.

For there are times when heart and hand and brain become overtaxed, and depression, insanity, or suicide terminates the hard struggle. To lose heart in life's battle is often to lose the fight altogether, and it is in this sense that the Scripture says, "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine." Blessings upon those who are not only strong and patient and enduring themselves, but who lift up the fallen, and speak a word in season to him that is weary, and help on with words of courage and deeds of kindness those who are ready to faint by the wayside.

How may this grace of practice be developed and strengthened within ourselves? We know that we are naturally impatient, apt to murmur, often ready to throw down a hard task, tempted to give up even the highest, most sacred work upon which we have entered. How may we go on step after step in the Christian life, and win the blessing held out in the promise, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." If we are believers in the Lord Jesus, we have set before us an example that may well hush our complaints and cause us to follow in his steps. We think of the external advantages of this life as essential, not merely to happiness but goodness. If we were not so poor, so hard-pressed, so ill provided with means and opportunities, we could better overcome the obstacles which seem to prevent our wider usefulness. But Jesus was born in a humble home, grew up in a remote country village, knew no education save that of the village school, no preaching save that of the synagogue of Nazareth. It might have been otherwise. Had his mission depended on wealth and rank and the learning of the schools, he might have been born amid the purple and fine linen of humanity. But that life which was to renew the sin-cursed world was a typical life of obscurity, lowliness, and poverty. What could nourish in him only such a high and noble character, may by his grace minister to the spiritual growth of those who love and follow Him. When He entered on His public mission, wonder and applause soon gave way to insinuations and sneers against his social standing, and his personal motives. "The carpenter," the "Galilean," "the friend of sinners," "the Samaritan," "the man in league with the prince of devils" were some of the mocking titles given him by the wise and the wealthy and the respectable people of his own day. "Consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." The disciple may not be greater than his Master. If we have need of patience in the midst of drudgery and poverty and disappointment, let us seek it as a blessed trait that can take away the sting from all these things, into the Christian home, patience enters not alone. She brings with her her sister Hope, hope that sheds her soft light on the dark scene and lights up the gloom of earth with the picture of a better future. From her lips come to weary hearts the repetition of the gracious promise, "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer for I have overcome the world."—Southern Presbyterian.

As the Days Are Going By.

A minister was approaching a town in which he had been, a few years before, pastor of a church. In company with him, on the train, was a gentleman who was still a resident of the place. He remarked to the minister: "You have a great many friends and admirers in this town. You will probably never know how greatly you were loved, and by how many people. You live in their hearts. They often speak of you, and regret that one whom they loved so well should have gone from them." And the answer came, after a moment: "Why did you not tell me this while I was living there? It would have done me good. I would probably have never gone from there had I known it." But the time had passed. The relationship was dissolved. The days had gone by, never to return. A little outspoken appreciation would have done immeasurable good at the time. It would have encouraged and strengthened. The givers would have received it all back again. It would have fallen again upon them as the dews fall in the evening to gladden and refresh.

We are passing through life but once. We shall not come back this way again. The opportunities for blessing others come not to us after they are gone. The good that we are to do we must do today. The night cometh. Let us not leave the words of appreciation until after the separations of life have taken place. If we have loved ones, let us tell them that they are loved by us. Let us not wait until we weep over their silent ashes, and then sob out to others the expressions of our affection.

If there are tears for the dead, let there be cheers for the living, also, to strengthen them for their efforts. If there are flowers brought to deck the casket and the grave, let there also be flowers, bright and beautiful, to be pressed into the hands and among the tresses of the living. If there are words of praise for those who have gone from us, let there also be words of esteem and love for those into whose living eyes we may look in tenderness, and into whose glad ears we may whisper the expressions of our affection.

A most affecting story was told not long ago of a mother who was dying, and whose children had been strangely cold and unresponsive. When they realized that she was dying, that she was actually going away from them into the mystery of the far-off life, they gathered reverently about her bed. One took her in her arms and held her up. One and another kissed her and bade her goodby, and spoke lovingly to her and called her by name and looked into her eyes. She almost forgot in her joy that death was anything to wonder at, and said: "I am glad to die if it brings my children so close to me. Oh, how happy I would have been if you had always spoken this way to me." Let children remember that father and mother cannot always be with them, and let them gladden the hearts of those who have done so much for them by at least making expressions of a loving appreciation of that which has been done so long in their behalf.

Anything, good or bad, grows by exercise. Any gift or talent, however good, withers by repression. Even our love shrivels if we do not manifest it. Our lives would be better in every way if we would be more outspoken in our expressions of that which should be cultivated. We cannot afford to seal the spring to save the water. Let it flow to bless the world. Let the life pour out its tide to bless every cause which needs assistance, and to oppose everything which should have resistance.

That one who thinks to love and follow Christ makes a most deplorable mistake if he does not outspokenly confess him and espouse him before the world. That one who, as a professed Christian, thinks to go through life without witnessing for Christ, and being known as a man of prayer, commits a lamentable error. No Christian should think to live a silent life.

The days are going by. We have few of them to call our own. The opportunities, few at most, are growing fewer every day. May God fill our hearts with his love, open our lips and make our mouths to show forth His praise.—Herald and Presbyter.

A Cheerful Face.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the cheerfulface. There is no mistaking it—the bright eye, the unclouded brow, the sunny smile, all tell of that which dwells within. Who has not felt its electrifying influence? One glance at this face lifts us out of the mists and shadows into the beautiful realm of hope. One cheerful face in the household will keep everything warm and light within. It may be a very plain face, but there is something in it we feel, but cannot express; and its cheery smile sends the blood dancing through the veins for very joy. There is a world of blessed magic in the plain, cheerful face, and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth.

It may be a very little face, but somehow it shines, and the shining is so bright the shadows cannot remain, and silently they creep away into the dark corners. It may be a wrinkled face, but it is all the dearer for that, and none the less cheerful. We linger near it and gaze tenderly upon it, and say, "God bless this dear, happy face!" We must keep it with us as long as we can, for home will lose much of its brightness when this sweet face is gone. And after it is gone, how the remembrance of it softens our wayward natures! When care and sorrow snap our heart-strings asunder, this wrinkled face looks down upon us, and the painful tension grows lighter, the way seems less dreary and the sorrows less heavy. God bless the cheerful face! What a dreary world this would be without this heaven-born light.—Home Visitor.

Good Nature.

To become a quality worthy of admiration good nature should be associated with regard for justice and a sense of duty. When good nature is simply a form of weakness it finds expression in kindnesses that work injustice. The man who is free and generous with his companions is called good-natured, but his character appears somewhat different to his creditors if his bills are unpaid, or to the wife whose weekly allowance is cut down that he may enjoy his selfish pleasures. There is such a thing as good nature, and it is a very great virtue, but when it is worthy of the name it is coupled with consideration for others and is manifested in such a way as to do no injustice to any one. It is better, after all, to be just than generous, unless we can make sure that our generosity is founded upon and supplementary to justice. In the social state men and women are bound together by innumerable ties, so that motion by an individual in one direction affects more or less the mass. It is only with our surplus time or money or other agency that we can play the part of a good-natured man without injuriously affecting those to whom we are bound. The good-natured young man who serves on committees and attends to public or semi-public business with as much zeal as he could bestow upon his private affairs is much to be commended, provided he does so by a sacrifice of time that is wholly his own, but if he robs his employer of the hours devoted to charitable or church or public work, his good-nature is exhibited by a sacrifice of duty. So, also, if, having grown older, he neglects his family to care for the waifs of society, he is disregarding his duty, though the world being ignorant of such neglect, may applaud his public spirit. To live rightly one must first discharge the obligations that are created by business, family and social ties. When duty has been done, but not until then, is the time for the display of such graces of disposition as distinguish the man who fairly earns distinction for his good-nature.

The grossest misapplication of the term, however, is when it is applied to men of convivial habits, who ruin themselves and others by their so-called good-nature. It is, indeed, a very ill nature, for it is the very essence of selfishness. The good-natured drinker seeks first the gratification of his own depraved appetite, and he does this without consideration for any one and too often at the expense of other people. He may pay the bills, it is true, and with money that is nominally his own, but upon which creditors and relatives have unsatisfied claims. Yet he takes credit to himself for being generous and good-natured and is too often accorded it by the unthinking. The social state might perhaps be improved in some degree if men would take a more just view of life and draw proper distinctions between the surface indications of good-nature and good-nature itself.—Baltimore Sun.

Excuses to God.

How sad the delusion that Satan is impressing upon the minds of many that they can give God an excuse for non-performance of duty, and that God will accept it. A greater falsehood never existed. When it is not within our power to perform an act, God does not require it; hence it does not become a duty. But when it is within our power, it becomes a duty, and God will accept no excuse for a non-performance of that duty. To this position we fear no successful contradiction. How little and insignificant appear the many and trivial excuses given when viewed from this standpoint! Many upon this plea are found absent from the house of God on the Lord's Day, absent from the prayer-meeting, and absent from the Sunday-school.

Inconsistency in the Church.

"Inconsistent men in the Church?" No doubt there are; but what of it? You belong to society, which includes these same men of one faith and another practice. You find them in the same political party with your consistent self. They are citizens of the United States, as you are proud to be. They are residents with you of the town or city of whose advantages you are wont to boast. Their presence does not drive you from any of these relationships; why should it keep you from the church, where you ought to be, in duty to your God and to yourself?—United Presbyterian.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Durham :—Rev. L. B. Turnbull, formerly pastor of the Old Market church, Richmond, has accepted the call to the pastorate of this church. Mr. Turnbull preached his first sermon last Sunday.

Wilmington, First Church :—Last week was one of great privilege and blessing. Services were held at noon and 8 o'clock every day from Monday to Friday. The pastor had Dr. J. A. Preston, of Charlotte with him, who preached at every service except Monday morning. The morning service was especially for Christians, but many thoughtful non-professors were present. While ladies necessarily predominated, many men so arranged their business as to be present. The evening services were especially for non-professors and the new Anniversary Hall was filled to overflowing with earnest and attentive congregations. The preaching was attended with great power. It was simple in statement, tender in expression, convincing in argument, and full of deep spiritual experience. God's people were greatly enriched in their spiritual life, and a number decided for Christ who have been long hesitating. On Sunday the communion was celebrated in the morning at the church, and in the evening at Imanuel chapel. Ten persons were received in the church congregation on profession of their faith and eight at the chapel. Four had been received by letter since the last communion making twenty-two in all. Dr. Preston will always have a warm place in the affections of pastor and people.

Goldsboro :—The congregation of the First Presbyterian church, Goldsboro, recently held a meeting, and unanimously agreed to call the Rev. F. W. Farries, late of Knox church, Ottawa, Canada, to be their pastor. The congregation is also considering plans for re-seating and otherwise refitting their church so as to make it more commodious and comfortable, and the prospect is that at an early date the contracts will be let and the work pushed forward as rapidly as possible. Mr. Farries is now and has been for the past three months, serving the congregation as stated supply.

ALABAMA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Florence :— Our church has recently enjoyed a precious season of refreshing. Rev. W. E. McIlwain, our efficient and beloved Synodical evangelist came to us on Feb. 18th, and preached morning and night for ten days. His preaching was of such a character that it could not fail to do good; clear simple, earnest, forcible presentation of gospel truth. And though during the first week the inclement weather was against us and prevented us, perhaps, from reaching as many of the unconverted as we had hoped, yet the interest continued and deepened until at its close we had received seven new members into our church, with others, we trust, soon to follow, and feel that the best part of the meeting had been the quickening and stimulus which it brought to both pastor and people. On the Sabbath following the, special services Bro. McIlwain presented the cause of Synodical Home Missions and the church contributed $300—a contribution which shows that in spite of the grievous financial depression, the Presbyterians of Alabama, do not intend to let this great advance movement of the Church fail for lack of support. On Tuesday our Ladies' Missionary Society held a very interesting and profitable praise service. The spacious parlors of one of our ladies were thrown open, a delightful lunch was served, and our appropriate program of prayer, praise and reading greatly enjoyed. In the afternoon the semi-annual offering from the mite boxes was made amounting to about $60 which testifies to the interest of the ladies in the "Greater Mission work."

Our Young People's Society Started in January is working well, with between fifty and sixty active members and a strong healthy interest. We feel sure it is doing much good among the young people of the church.

And for all these tokens of God's favor, which may be of interest to several of your readers, we give Him thanks and ascribe to Him the glory.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Decatur :—The Rev. J. M. Evans, Synodical evangelist, has just closed a three week's meeting in the First Presbyterian church, Decatur. Notwithstanding the very bad weather he never failed to preach twice every day to reasonably good congregations, which enjoyed his preaching very much. Quite a number manifested more, or less, spiritual concern, and thirteen expressed a hope of salvation. Six of this number have been received into this church, and others will be received in a few days. The addition of these six persons makes twenty-eight additions to this church since I assumed charge of this work last July. When I came here I found a discouraged church, and a scattered congregation. The audiences were very small; and the work had many discouraging features. The attendance upon divine worship has steadily, but slowly increased, until now there is comparatively a very respectable assembly of worshippers.

My family and myself have been the recipients of much kindness since we came here. We have received a cow and many various contribtions to the larder and coal bin, and last, but not least, a very handsome and much appreciated suit of clothes was sent in as a New Year's present to the pastor. May the Lord bless and reward the people for their love and kindness.

First Church, New Orleans :—Rev. Dr. Palmer, pastor. Five additions by certificate and one on profession.

Rev. Dr. Markham :—We learn from the Southwestern Presbyterian that Rev. Dr. Markham, who had been convalescing on Monday experienced a serious change for the worse—a form of suffering with accession of high fever which developed as acute spinal-meningitis leaving very slender hope of recovery. News a day or two later, we get from the Picayune. The attending physician says: "The condition of the Rev Dr. Markham is more favorable. The fever and special symptoms associated with the involvement of the spinal cord are decidedly mitigated and have lost the element of violence which characterized this last development. He is now nourishing well, which, with the improvement of inflammatory symptoms, gives an encouraging view of his case."

Nicholasville :—The church at Nicholasville has been greatly refreshed. After two weeks meeting there were added to the church on profession of faith, Sunday the 4th inst. seven young ladies six of whom were baptized by the pastor. The preaching was done conjointly by Rev. Joseph Rennie, of Louisville, and Dr. J. G. Hunter, of Harrodsburg. Bro. Rennie began the meeting and preached ten days with great effectiveness. Not only the church but the town was visibly moved by the preaching. Dr. Hunter's preaching was with Pauline simplicity and power; the visible results of the meeting were twelve confessions of faith, and a decided purification of the religious atmosphere of the town.

DOMESTIC.

The N. Y. correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says: There is a commotion in local Protestant Episcopal circles over the fact that Bishop Potter has left St. Ignatius' Church, of which the Rev. Father Arthur Ritchie is the rector, off his list for visitation to administer the right of confirmation this ecclesiastical year. It is frankly admitted that the reason is the very "high" character of the services that Rev. Mr. Ritchie conducts every Sunday at his church.

The United Presbyterians of Oxford, Pa., on last Sunday dedicated their new church which cost $12,000. A dispatch to the Baltimore Sun says: The United Presbyterian church of Oxford is one of the oldest Associate congregations in America and the connecting link between the United Presbyterian Church of North America and the Northern Church of Scotland. It was founded in 1753 by Rev. Alexander Gellatly, of Scotland, who, together with Rev. Andrew Arnott, was sent here upon requests made by the colonists of Chester and Lancaster counties for supply of preaching to the Associate Presbytery of Edinburgh. These two missionaries, as they had been instructed to do upon their arrival here, organized the Associate Presbytery of Pennsylvania.

Mr. J. M. Smith, who died recently in Boston, Mass., left a legacy of $25,000 to the Presbyterian Church of the United States.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

A Recent and an Earlier Installation! Mr. Gales' Preaching—His Matter and Methods, &c., &c.

On yesterday morning—Sabbath, March 5th, 1894—the installation of my son, Rev. Egbert Watson Smith, took place in the presence of as crowded a congregation, as I have seen in the church since its dedication.

Just before the exercises connected with the installation, the names of twenty-five persons were announced as received at one or two recent meetings of the session into the First Presbyterian church, of Greensboro. Five by certificate and twenty on examination. These twenty stood before the pulpit and made their public profession of the Christian faith. Twelve had been baptized, and eight had not; after the baptism of these eight—they all retired to their seats, while the entire church rose and sang, the second stanza of the 117th Psalm, as they welcomed the new members :

"Eternal are thy mercies Lord;
Eternal truth attends Thy word;
Thy praise shall sound from shore to shore,
Till suns shall set and rise no more."

The Rev. Mr. Seabrook, pastor of Buffalo, Midway and Bethel churches in Guilford county, preached the sermon from John 12:21, "Sir we would see Jesus." He propounded the usual questions to the pastor-elect, and to the congregation, and delivered the charge to the pastor—and Rev. S. O. Hall, pastor of Westminster church, Greensboro, N. C., delivered the charge to the people. The exercises were of course protracted, but the entire congregation seemed to listen from first to last with unwavering and wrapt attention. At 7:30 p. m., the newly installed co-pastor preached and the exercises of this solemn and delightful day closed.

On the 24th of July, 1859, I myself was installed pastor of this church, which consisted then of one hundred and two white members, and fifteen negroes, and just after the evening congregation had assembled, I rose made a few statements, naturally and to mind and heart unavoidably recalled by the installation of my son in the forenoon. Nearly thirty-five years have come and gone since my installation; and of the old members that came up on that day to grasp my hand "in token of cordial reception and affectionate regard," all but about fifteen have passed away. The most of them living consistent lives, some indeed toiling faithfully in the church militant, and resting now, thank God, forever in the Church triumphant, "In the Christian's home of glory." In my diary of that day, I wrote, July 24th, 1859. Dr. Jas. Phillips, of Chapel Hill, preached this morning the installation sermon from 1 Cor. 3:5-7. "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase," and a capital good sermon it was. At night the respective charges were delivered, to the pastor by my old seminary classmate and dear friend, Rev. Cyrus K. Caldwell, pastor of Buffalo church; and to the people by Rev. Arch. Currie, pastor of Graham church. The congregation was very large both in the forenoon and night. The heads of families, &c., almost without exception, came forward and gave me their right hand. The Lord bless them and me, and make this relation and us a blessing to one another." Such is my record of this day in my diary of that date.

It is proper and just to say that most of those who appeared before the session, had been converted during the protracted services held in our church by Mr. Gales assisted by Egbert and myself. Mr. Gales was with us from Jan. 7th to Jan. 18th, inclusive—holding afternoon Bible readings and preaching every night. These meetings were largely attended, exceedingly interesting and improving and there was nothing sensational or objectionable in Mr. Gales' manner, matter or methods. He preaches the truth, with great earnestness; his delivery is exceedingly attentive and impressive; his illustrations are drawn from the life, and are often solemn, awakening and instructive. His range of topics is of course not very extensive, but he treats them well and Scripturally, and the only objection that I have to him and to others thus engaged, is that they do not seek licensure or ordination from the overseers or Presbyters who are set over the Church of God. Many more than the twenty above referred to, were awakened and we trust converted and perhaps have united with other churches. J. HENRY SMITH.

LET IT BE REMEMBERED.

Let it be remembered by all pastors and treasurers, that the fiscal year of our Church will close March 31st. All funds for Presbyterial or Synodical Home Missions should be sent to the proper local treasurer, all funds for that part of our Home Missionary work which is to be done through the Assembly's Committee in the Southwest and West, with Invalid and Colored Evangelistic funds should be sent to Assembly's treasurer, W. A. Powell, Atlanta, Ga., all for Foreign Missions should be sent to Erskine Reed, Nashville, Tenn., all for Colportage work to Rev. Dr. J. K. Hazen, Richmond, Va., and all funds for Education of candidates for the ministry should be sent to G. W. Macrae, treasurer, Memphis, Tenn. Remittances should reach these treasurers not later than the 31st, that they may appear in the annual reports to the Assembly.

THE EDUCATION CAUSE.

Some time ago there appeared in our Church papers a circular from the Assembly's Secretary of Education, quoting a part of the report on this subject presented to the Synod of South Carolina during its latest session, and making some comments of his own upon this report. From this circular we take the following extract :

"Bethel Presbytery, with twelve candidates, asked aid for six and gave $501, or $84 each; Enoree, with seventeen candidates, asked aid for fourteen and gave $204, or $14 each; Harmony, with nine candidates, asked aid for six and gave $199, or $33 each; Pee Dee, with three candidates, asked aid for three and gave $91, or $30 each; South Carolina, with five candidates, asked aid for three and gave $264, or $88 each; Charleston, with eleven candidates, asked aid for eleven and gave $186, or $17 each. Charleston Presbytery spends most of its Education contributions independently of the Central Committee. The average contribution per member from this Synod to the Assembly's treasury is 8 cents."

"The above, Mr. Editor, tells the whole story. And let it be remembered that this is the utterance of the Synod itself. Would that other Synods had been as thorough and as candid in their treatment of this subject. It is simply astonishing that the deficit of the Central Committee was no greater. If this one Synod had paid into our treasury as much as it received, our deficit would have been less by $1,829. And if the Synod of North Carolina also, had paid into our treasury as much as it received, we should have had hardly any deficit at all."

So far the circular letter. It is seen that these figures present the Synod of South Carolina in a very unfavorable light before the Church at large; before which she, with her sister Synod of North Carolina, is held up as an example of dereliction to duty; such dereliction being marked as explanation of the difficulties embarrassing the cause of Education.

Now, in simple justice, I wish to publish a few facts of which such a representation takes no account.

The report from which the Secretary quotes says, that "Charleston Presbytery spends most of its Education contributions independently of the Central Committee." There are no figures given, however, and this qualification does not enter into the computation which represents this Presbytery as asking aid for eleven candidates and contributing $186 or $17 per candidate. The independent contributions, of course, do not enter into the calculation which represent the Synod, and Charleston Presbytery as a part of the Synod, as giving an average of eight cents per member to the Assembly's treasury.

So that it seems to me that our venerable Secretary is somewhat hasty when he adds—

"The above, Mr. Editor, tells the whole story."

It has been for years, the custom in Charleston Prebytery for the stronger congregations to select each its candidate or candidates, and through their ladies' societies contribute directly to the candidates' support. The Presbytery has refused to disallow this old custom. Of course, the money thus contributed does not pass through the Central Committee's treasury, and receives no recognition whatever in its report; it does not enter into the figures, averages, etc., based upon that report.

The report, therefore, gives our Presbytery credit for having contributed $186 to this cause, an average of $17 for each candidate, and (as a part of the Synod) an average of 8 cents for each communicant.

As chairman of Education I have made it my business to collect statistics, and I have now personal knowledge that during the period embraced by this report there was contributed to the support of candidates for the ministry within the bounds of Charleston Presbytery $2,178.10, an average of nearly one dollar per communicant.

The Synod's report recited also the fact that all the other Presbyteries save one were doing "independent" work in the support of candidates, and from that excepted Presbytery the Synod's chairman had no report on the subject. None of this independent work is recognized in the figures quoted; therefore I maintain that the report does not tell the whole story by any means, and that the whole story when told puts us in a somewhat more favorable light before the rest of the Church.

Charleston Presbytery is apportioned for the cause of Education $800 and last year contributed nearly three times that sum to the cause, though she receives credit for having given only $186.

I have this further to say, viz:—that our venerable Secretary's explanation seems to me inadequate in a very vital point. He seems to reason as though the whole difficulty in the Education work is to be explained by the deficit in the Central treasury, caused in part at least by a disposition to contribute independently rather than through the Central Committee—and this failure so to contribute, and the consequent deficit "tell the whole story."

Now the cause of Education is wider than the Committee of Education. Even though the Committee could pay in full every appropriation it makes, no beneficiary could prosecute his studies without some "independent" aid; even though there were not a deficit of a single cent on the Central Treasury's books, the cause of Education would be just as much embarrassed is it now is, unless there were independent" contributions to the work. The "whole story" lies deeper than this deficit on the Committee's books.

I very much deplore discussion on this matter of Beneficiary Education; I believe the criticisms of the work, so current of late, do more harm than good and I have very reluctantly written the above; but the cause cannot be forwarded by misplacing the difficulty, more especially when such an explanation does injustice.

SAMUEL M. SMITH,
Ch'm. of Education, Charleston Presbytery.

"OUR FATHERLESS ONES."

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

I feel moved to say a few words about a little unpretending paper that comes semi-monthly during the year, to my house, and which is read by every member of my household, with pleasure and unusual interest. I notice that it is taken up and opened and read as soon as the mail carrier delivers it. I wonder how many families in the Presbyterian church of North Carolina, know anything of the little four page paper bearing the above tender and eloquent title—"Our Fatherless Ones." I wonder how many take it.

This paper is published at Orphans' Home, Barium Springs, N. C., at fifty cents a year. It selections of poetry are choice and admirable, and its prose extracts are equal to any that I see in any of our religious weeklies and some of these are thrillingly interesting and instructive, and may be read or listened to with rapt attention from grandpa down to the little tot of four or five years. May I enumerate the titles of some? There lies before me on my study table—the "No. 23" of February 21st, Vol. 1, and the No. 27 of March 7, Vol. 2. It will do any home good to read these articles to the listening boys and girls at your fireside. I omit the poetry. Starting on the Downward Path, by Gough; The Cause of Their Downfall, Atlanta Advocate; Our Monthly, and the way our little orphans live and are cared for at Barium Springs, and at the South Carolina Thornwell Orphanage, &c.; A Boy's Worth; Franklin and Wayland from the Youth's Companion; The Rainbow from the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN; Health in Happiness, Youth's Companion; Children of the Street, Dr. Talmage; A Backslider's End, Christian Herald; Foral College, Robesonian; Character, The Sunday School Times; Wait; Remembered Courtesies, &c.

And now last, but not least, the third page is filled with what is headed as "Home Happenings." There you look in upon the children and read little scraps of information about their studies, their sports, their rabbit hunts, their garden and kitchen work, with other items of general interest, and donations and monthly contributions, etc. I not know any way in which fifty cents can be spent for the higher interest of our homes, than by taking and reading "Our Faithful Ones." Try it and tell me afterwards your glad thankfulness. J. HENRY SMITH.

To The Churches of Concord Presbytery.

DEAR BRETHREN :—A goodly number of you pledged Rev. R. P. Pell that you would pay a certain specific sum of money, at a certain time for the purpose of church erection in his field. Depending on these pledges he has among other buildings just had one completed at Cove Creek, Watauga county. There is a debt of $150 due on this last building. A lien for this debt is held on the building and if the debt is not paid by the spring meeting of Presbytery the lien will be enforced and our church will lose the building and all that has been paid on it. If the churches, that made these pledges, afore mentioned would only pay what they have promised that would be a sufficient amount to settle the debt, lift the lien and save the building. Brethren will it not be a burning shame if this lien is allowed to be enforced and this building lost to our Church together with the five or six hundred dollars already paid on it?

C. A. MUNROE,
Ch'm. Home Mission Committee.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The clerks of the sessions of the Mecklenburg Presbytery will please send to me as soon as filled out the reports on Sabbath school. This is an important matter, if I am to make a full and accurate report to the next Presbytery.

March 25.—Review.

Golden Text.—I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Matt. xxii. 32.

Topic.—God had a plan of grace for lost men.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. Fix in your minds the great periods of time covered by the lessons of the quarter. Note the great event that divides the Ages before Christ into two nearly equal Cycles. (Gen. xii 1). Divid the earlier cycle into two (unequal) Ages by a great decisive event (vii. 11.) The second great Cycle is divided into four Periods, on the first of which (called the Patriarchal Period) we have begun but not completed the study. Locate on the map the regions in which this history lies, Ararat (Armenia), Chaldaea, Padan-Aram, Canaan.

Second Step. Fix in your minds the names of the leading persons of the period studied, and recall the chief events in their lives: Adam and Eve, Cain and Abel, Enoch, Noah and his sons. Abraham, Lot, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, Esau.

Third Step. Take up the leading ideas or subjects that have been developed in the course of your study, and glean the teachings of the lessons upon them.

GOD. Creator (Gen. i. 1); Moral Governor (ii. 16, 17); Judge (iii. 11, 19; iv. 9–12; vi. 13; xix. 24, 25); Gracious (iv. 4; vi. 8; xii. 2; xix. 16; xxii. 12); Hearer of prayer (xviii. 26); Revealing Himself to man (xvii. 1; xxviii. 13.)

MAN. Place in nature (i. 28; ii. 20); made in God's image (i. 27); his fall by sin (iii. 6, 7); loss of communion with God (iii. 8, 24); depravity (vi. 5; xiii. 13); restored by grace (xvii. 7.)

SIN. Its nature. Its beginning (iii. 4–6); meanness (iii. 12); malignity (iv. 8); corruption (vi. 12); presumption (xi. 4); selfishness (xiii. 11); fraud (xii. 13; xxvii. 19); heartlessness (xvi. 6; xxv. 31, 33); self-indulgence xxv. 32, 34); unbelief (xvi. 3; xviii. 13.)

SIN. Its fruit. Shame (iii. 7); fear (iii. 10); sorrow (iii. 16, 17); bitterness (iv. 13); destruction (vi. 17; xix. 24–26); loss (xix. 30, compare xiii. 5); trouble (xxi. 9–11; xxvii. 42; xxxi. 40); fruitless regret (xxvii. 34).

FAITH. Illustrated in Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, and Isaac. See the inspired summary in Heb. xi. 4–20.

CHRIST.—The seed of the woman (iii. 15); dwelling in the tents of Shem (ix. 27); blessing all the earth through Abraham (xii. 3); the sacrificial Lamb (iv. 4 with Heb. xi. 4; xiii. 8, 13, 14 with John viii. 56 and John i. 29).

Fourth Step. Make out from the above study a brief statement of the purpose of the book so far as we have studied it, and compare it with the one below:

SUMMARY. Genesis gives us the origin of the world, of man, and of sin. It traces the workings of sin in its character and its consequences both as they grow out of its nature or proceed from the direct agency of God. It reveals God's plan of grace and traces its development in the character of individuals and the history of the world.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Properly speaking a Review lesson should not be taught. The Review should be an examination of the scholars upon the previous teaching. Many schools do not know what to do with the Review, and shirk it altogether, or teach it in the most perfunctory manner. In others it is made the most useful and interesting lesson of the Quarter. We know of one school (Salem, Va.) where there is a quarterly written examination of the Sunday-school, and the scholars are graded and given certificates of their proficiency. For most schools a public, oral examination is the best that can be done. Its advantages are manifest: It tests the work of the school; it encourages the teachers who do thorough work; it stimulates them to do better work; it rewards the scholars that have been attentive and studious; it stirs up those who have been neglectful and indifferent. We would make the following suggestions as to the conduct of such a Review:

1. Announce through the pulpit when the Review will be held and invite the parents and friends of the scholars to be present.
2. Let the exercises of the school for that occasion be made especially attractive, and above all have them thoroughly arranged beforehand.
3. If possible let the Review be conducted by the pastor; this adds dignity to the occasion, and brings the pastor into his proper relation to the school. Where the pastor cannot be present, let it be done by the superintendent or some one selected by him. But, above all, let it be done by some one who is thoroughly prepared on the subject, and is thoroughly acquainted with the school.
4. Let the questions be asked by classes—accepting the answer from any member of the class. Where a class fails to answer refer it to another class—generally to one that you know to be well prepared; or, call for volunteer answers from the school. Some questions should be asked in the first instance of the whole school.
5. The teachers are expected to be thoroughly prepared on the lesson, and should (collectively) be called on for answers that the school fails to give.
6. A Review of the catechism gone over during the Quarter will give a feature of added interest and value.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF MAR. 1.

31. (a) Gen. xxxi. 13; (b) xxxii. 12; (c) xxxv. 1–15, (d) xlviii, 3, 4, 15, 16. (There is possibly another allusion in xlix. 24; the clause in parenthesis is translated by some, "By the hand of the Shepherd of the Stone of Israel"—an expression equivalent to "Shepherd of Bethel," or "God of Bethel." But we do not count this.)
32. Hos. xii. 4, 12.
33. "O God of Bethel by whose hand Thy people still are fed."

(If we should ever ask for a hymn again will our friends please remember just to give the first line. Two answers were "Hymn 369"—in what collection? Another was "Hymn 235"—Another was more definite, "No. 10 in the Meth. Hymn Book"—but a Presbyterian Minister is not expected to have a Methodist Hymn Book convenient. The Hymn "How firm a foundation" which was given by some was not founded on this passage but on Isaiah xli. 10; xliii. 2, etc.)

NEW QUESTIONS.

34. Which family among the sons of Noah was to be the fountain of spiritual blessing to the world?
35. Which family was to have the greatest earthly prosperity?
36. Why was Abraham called "the Hebrew"?

I have peeped into quiet parlors where the carpet is clean and not old, and the furniture is polished and bright, into rooms where the chairs are neat and the floor carpeted, into kitchens where the family live, and the meals are cooked and eaten, and the boys and girls are as blithe and joyous as the sparrows overhead, and I see that it is not so much wealth, or learning, or clothes, or servants, or toil, or idleness, or town, or country, or station, as it is tone and temper that render homes happy or wretched. And I see, too, that in town or country, good sense and kind feeling, and God's grace make life what no teachers or accomplishments, or means, or society can make it—the opening stave of an everlasting psalm—the fair beginning of an endless and blessed existence—the goodly, modest, well-proportioned vestibule to a temple of God's building that shall never decay, or wax old, or vanish away.—John Hall.

"I want you to spend fifteen minutes every day praying for Foreign Missions," said a pastor to some young people in his congregation. "But beware how you pray, for I warn you that it is a very costly experiment." "Costly?" they asked in surprise. "Ay, costly," he cried. "When Cary began to pray for the conversion of the world, it cost himself, and it cost those who prayed with him very much. Brainerd prayed for the dark-skinned savages, and after two years of blessed work, it cost him his life, Two students in Mr. Moody's Summer School began to pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more servants into His harvest; and lo! it is going to cost our country five thousand young men and women who have in answer to this prayer, pledged themselves to the work. Be sure it is a dangerous thing to pray in earnest for this work; you will find that you cannot pray and withhold your labor, or pray and withhold your money; nay, that your very life will no longer be your own when your prayers begin to be answered. I have often said in my public addresses that it is a dangerous thing to pray for a blessing unless you want it. What a blessed thing when we are ready to receive."

It is said that a good plan to bring out the latent talents of teachers and to increase interest in the exercises on Review Sunday s to have short papers read by a number of teachers giving a synopsis of the lessons and bringing out the important points pertaining to them.

SAY SOES.

The Czar owns the finest emerald in Europe. It weighs only thirty carats, but is of perfect colour and transparency.

We may fill our lives with music if we know what chords to touch.

Let it run, and your cough may end in something serious. It's pretty sure to, if your blood is poor. That is just the time and condition that invites Consumption. The seeds are sown and it has fastened its hold upon you, before you know that it is near.

It won't do to trifle and delay, when the remedy is at hand. Every disorder that can be reached through the blood yields to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. For Severe Coughs, Bronchial, Throat and Lung Diseases, Asthma, Scrofula in every form, and even the Scrofulous affection of the lungs that's called Consumption, in all its earlier stages, it is a positive and complete cure.

It is the only blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder so effective that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

Perfection is attained in Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It cures the worst cases. Only 50 cents; by druggists.

For the relief of headache a plaster placed upon the back of the neck and allowed to remain until it "burns" is excellent; a stomachache is also decidedly benefited. Sick-stomach and vomiting are often soothed and checked by the grateful burning. In chest trouble mustard is of undoubted service.

A number one cough cure. Mr. Jas. H. Barnet, 243 Cedar St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes thus: "I am using Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in my family and deem it a number one medicine for coughs and colds, and my house shall never be without it."

Tablecloths should be folded once only for ironing, and that lengthwise. They should be ironed with a very hot iron until perfectly dry, and then there is no danger of a rumpled appearance afterward. They should be quite damp and free from starch. Fold them loosely crosswise, without ironing, and these folds will be easily smoothed out with the hand, leaving no crease but the middle one.

Greensboro Record: Mr. Wm. Moser, a farmer living near Liberty, had the misfortune to lose his left hand the other day. He was operating a feed-cutter, when in some way his hand was pulled into the machine and so badly damaged that it was found necessary to remove it.

Dr. Wm. R. Wood who for some years past has been the very efficient Superintendent of the N. C. Asylum for the Insane at Raleigh resigned last week and Dr. George L. Kirby, of Goldsboro was elected to fill the place.

A Distorted Cripple.

Dear Sir.—Last winter my daughter was attacked by la grippe and through the ravages of this mysterious disorder, reduced to a helpless cripple. From a bright, rosy, handsome child she became in three weeks so weak, emanciated, and in shape so distorted, that words fail me to adequately describe her condition By accident I learned of the Electropoise. I purchased one—more through desperation to leave no means untried, than through any belief in its efficacy. I confess, I thought it something on the order of a liver-pad, "made to sell" and a sort of mild humbug. It was with more than half way skepticism I applied it, in accordance with directions. Day by day as I observed the marked improvement in my daughter, my doubts vanished. In eight weeks after the first application of the Poise my little girl was fully restored, enjoyed sound sleep, a good appetite, and is now in the possession of vigorous health, and as to her figure, there is no trace even that she ever had the first stages of spinal curvature, or la grippe, which causes it. I use the Poise in my family as a tonic and preventive. I would not be without it under any circumstances. I feel that it has solved many a hygenic problem, and is to solve more, as the time goes on. Given your able little book, a Poise and common sense enough to put on a pair of rubbers, I think any disease can be mitigated, and if taken in time, destroyed. I have recommended the Electropoise to many of my friends, and I am glad to say where my advice has been followed and one purchased, good results have always followed. Thanking you for all your kindness, I am

Very faithfully yours,

FOR THE FAMILY.

ALWAYS.

There is always a stitch to make,
And always a step to take;
There is always a link to find,
And always a sheaf to bind;
There is always a page to read,
And always a path to weed;
And always a rift to mend,
Aye, and always a hue to blend.

There is always the weight of care,
And the cold, harsh blame to bear;
There is always the tear unshed,
And the gentle word unsaid;
There is always the doubt, the fear,
And always the scorn, the jeer.
These little things, oh, patient soul,
Make up life's grand, life's wondrous whole.

Items for Lady Readers.

If ever an artist was born, not made, Rembrandt, the great Holland painter, was, for he had few advantages. In the first place, he was of most humble parents, being the son of a miller and born in a wind mill. He had no advantages of school or example, no teacher, and was never thrown with artists in any way, and yet in the face of all these difficulties he became a most famous artist. He was intended for the law, as his five brothers were all either bakers or millers like their father, but before he was 12 years old he showed such a decided talent for drawing that he was allowed to study art. His first picture was painted when he was 21 years old. It was not long before Rembrandt became both rich and famous. When he was 27 years old he was married to a very lovely young girl. Saskia was her name, and Rembrandt used her nearly always as his model. He was simply devoted to her, and when she died, it was said the best of Rembrandt died with her. Certainly all his good luck went with her. Rembrandt became completely broken down; he no longer painted with his old vigor, and as his popularity decreased, so also did his money. Finally things got so bad that all his rich collection of pictures and furniture were sold by auction for his debts; then his engravings and designs went the same way, and finally the beautiful home itself was sold, and Rembrandt was left moneyless and homeless. But he kept on working.

He hired a house in a quiet little street near his old home.

He evidently married again, for about this time he painted a picture called "Rembrandt and His Family," and the smiling, rosy-cheeked lady in the group is certainly not the lovely Saskia.

Rembrandt's last work was a portrait of himself. He died when he was 62 years old. During his life he did a wonderful amount of work. He painted over 620 pictures, made 365 etchings, besides hundreds of other drawings.

He was a very affectionate man, and was also passionately fond of animals. Once he was at work painting a portrait group of a very distinguished family, and the news was brought to him that his favorite monkey was dead. He immediately had the body brought to the studio and made its portrait on the same canvas on which he was at work. The family became highly indignant and demanded that the monkey's portrait should be rubbed out, but Rembrandt refused to do it, and consequently he lost that job, for they engaged another artist.

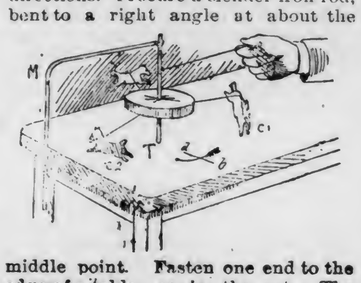
Things Useful.

Vinegar Sauce.—One and a half cups of sugar and one and a half tablespoons of flour in a little water, two tablespoons of vinegar, a quarter of a nutmeg, grated, and a pinch of salt. Over this pour a pint and a half of boiling water and boil for ten minutes. Just before removing from the fire add a dessert spoon of butter.

Nutmeg Cookies.—Mix together a cup of white sugar, three-eighths of a cup of butter, a third of a cup of sour milk, an egg, a quarter of a teaspoon of soda, plenty of grated nutmeg, and enough flour to roll thin. Bake in a quick oven.

Sand Tarts.—A cup of sugar, half a cup of butter, a cup and a half of flour and an egg. Roll out thin. Cut in rounds. Spread the top with the white of an egg, sprinkle with cinnamon and sugar. Bake in a quick oven.



Bits of zinc should never be thrown away. If it is used in the kitchen around the range, save all the trimmings when the edges become broken or curled and must be cut off, and when at last it is worn out and must be replaced, save the old piece; cut it up with an old pair of shears, or bend and break it into pieces, and occasionally throw some of it on the coals when there is a hot fire. It will then seldom be necessary to have the flues cleaned.

One quart of milk; one package Cooper's gelatine, soaked one hour in a little cold water; three ounces of almonds, blanched, dried, and pounded in a mortar, with a little rose water to prevent oiling; three-fourths cup of sugar; extract bitter almonds. Heat the milk to scalding; add the gelatine, the pounded almonds, and when you have stirred these over the fire ten minutes, the sugar. Strain through thin muslin, wringing and squeezing to get out the flavor of the almond. Flavor, and set in a wet mould to form. The next day turn it out and eat with powdered sugar and cream.

AMUSING SCIENCE.

A Nursery Toy Which Can Be Made by Any Intelligent Boy.

A very amusing game for children is shown in our illustration, and may be provided at small cost and with little trouble by carrying out the following directions: Procure a slender iron rod, bent to a right angle at about the middle point. Fasten one end to the edge of a table, as in the cut. The other end should terminate in a loop. Directly under this loop bore a small hole in the table. Cut from a wide cork stopper a circular piece of cork, and through its center pass a long nail from which the head has been removed. You will then have a rudimentary top. Lastly, cut out three figures of horses from pieces of cork, and attach them to the upper surface of the top by means of small bits of wire. Place the top in position as shown in the cut, the ends of the nail being held by the loop and the hole in the table. Wind a cord round the upper portion of the nail and draw it briskly out. The top will turn, carrying the little horses, and the horse which stops nearest to a certain point previously marked on the table gains the trick. More than three horses may be made, if desired, and interest is added to the apparatus by painting the horses different colors.—Once a Week.

A Wonderful Old Man.

The oldest postmaster in continuous service, and perhaps in years, in the United States, resides at Hammondsville, Jefferson county, Ohio. His name is W. H. Wallace and he is eighty-two years old. He has been in the service for the last sixty-three years, having been appointed to his present position during Andrew Jackson's administration. Mr. Wallace is also credited by the Adams Express company as the oldest agent in its employ, both in years and continuous service, and is also the oldest station agent on the Cleveland & Pittsburgh railroad, if not in America, having served in that capacity since 1852. He bears his years lightly.

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

"MIND THE BOW."

A little dancing, happy girl,
A father's gem, a mother's pearl,
Sat in the door at mamma's side,
When summer reigned both far and wide.

The sky grew black with sudden frown,
The lightning flashed, the rain came down,
The thunder almost rent the sky,
While birds were hid in coverts nigh.

The wind grew fierce in angry blast,
While all the heav'ns were overcast;
The storm so sudden and so rude,
Seemed like the coming of a flood.

The door was closed in sudden dread,
And in dismay the mother said,
"Does not my little daughter fear
That we shall have a deluge here?

The little dancing, happy girl,
With skin so tinted like a pearl,
Replied in accents sweet and low,
"Let's mind the bow! let's mind the bow!"

Ah, friends, when storms are loud and gruff,
Is not God's promise sure enough,
"My seal upon the sky I show?"
Let's mind the bow! let's mind the bow!

Opportunities.

BY MRS. CLINTON SCOVILLE.

Beulah stood, in a deep study, that Sabbath afternoon, at the side entrance door of the church. Her teacher had been having a little talk with her girls after the school session, and this sentence was revolving in Beulah's mind, "Do good as you have opportunity." "I don't see," was her thought as she walked homeward, "what opportunities I can possibly have this week; my time is fully occupied. There's propositions to make up in geometry from last week when I was sick; and my essay must be written, and with all the regular school work, I shall not have a moment of spare time. There's no use of talking, a girl can't get a high-school education and be a home missionary at the same time." I fear that Beulah was in anything but an amiable mood when she reached home. These conscience pricks and "stirrings up" to duty sometimes operate in this way before they take effect. In the evening, before starting for church, she told her mother some of the things Miss Wilton had said to them. "And I felt like telling her"—you see the bitterness and impatience were still there—"that if we could afford to keep a cook, and second girl, and sewing-girl, I could take part in everything, and have a 'finger in every pie,' just as the Riches and Bullions do," and the door closed as she went on her way to evening service.

As she passed their next-door neighbor's gate, Alice Benton, the half-grown daughter, was leaning idly over it. A sudden impulse came, "Will you go to church with me to-night, Allie?" "Don't know as I can; I'll ask ma." The Bentons were not church-goers, and Allie seldom saw the inside of one. In a few moments she returned, panting as she came, from her exertions in dressing hastily. "I can go; oh goody," and as the little hand slid into hers with a warm clasp, Beulah felt dimly that this might be an opportunity. At church, after a short sermon, the pastor suggested a song service, and afterwards a season of sentence prayer; and one brief sentence went up from the pew where Beulah was sitting; "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me." And on the way home the handclasp was renewed, and Allie said: "Church is so much nicer than hanging round home, and hearing ma and pa jaw at each other; I mean to go all the time with you if you want me." And a little latter, in the privacy of her own room, Beulah scored one opportunity improved.

Monday morning was dull and rainy. "No opportunities to-day," thought Beulah. "I'll have to work every moment to get through with what I'm obliged to do." So, with toilet attended to, and breakfast eaten, she started schoolward. At the door she enoountered Polly Edwards, a crippled schoolmate, who was striving, against many disadvantages, to gain an education, and thereby assist a widowed and invalid mother. She had a worried and distressed look. "What is the matter, Polly?" "Oh, mamma is so poorly; I can only come to school mornings this week, and I shall be so far behind with my afternoon studies that I cannot take the examinations, and—" the tears came.

"I can get up an hour earlier in the morning, and prepare one lesson" thought Beulah. "Polly, how will it be for me to run in evenings this week, and we will go over the afternoon work together?" Polly looked so encouraged. "You are so kind, Beulah; if anything would give me faith in Christianity, this would." Polly's father had been an unbeliever, and she, by example and influence, had put him in the same way of thinking. Meanwhile a sweet strain of music was beginning to softly trill in Beulah's heart.

"Do good, do good, there's ever a way,
A way where there's ever a will."

Eternity alone will reveal these little seeds of kindly impulse sown, and the resulting harvest.

Friday noon at the dinner table Beulah's mother said to her: "Didn't you tell me once that your teacher said if, after your essay for rhetoricals was written and corrected, you preferred to have some one else in the class read it, you could do so?" "Yes, mamma." "Well, I need you at home so much this afternoon; there is so much mending and putting away of garments to do. I don't see how I can get along without you." Poor Beulah! If there was any one study she took more interest in than another, it was composition. She had prepared her essay with care and now to have all that eloquence appropriated by another; but that cheery strain was sounding within:

"Do good, do good, there's ever a way."

"Well, mamma, I'll go back to school at once; Emma Grant will be willing to read my essay," and, that accomplished, she sat down to mending and darning with cheerfulness, which, though at first assumed, soon developed into the genuine article. And at the close of their afternoon's work her mother said: "My comfort, mother couldn't keep house without you." And that sweet strain is still repeating itself in Beulah's heart:

"Do good, do good, there's ever away,
A way where there's ever a will;
Don't wait till to-morrow, but do it to-day,
And to-day, when to-morrow comes still."

What Jedediah Was Afraid Of.

You would have thought to look at him that he was not afraid of anything, for he was very large and strong for a boy of his age. He walked with his head up like a soldier, He could whistle "Star Spangled Banner" and "Hail Columbia" and many other soldier songs. He was ready to go anywhere in the dark, and once he caught in his hands a rat that had wandered into the dining-room and held it up by the neck, while Bridget stood on a chair with her skirts gathered up around her, screaming with fright.

In fact everybody thought him a very brave boy, and for a long time no one but his sister Florence knew that he was not always brave.

Florence was two years younger than Jedediah and one of the brightest little midgets that ever a boy had for a sister.

Such fun as they had down by the brook playing Columbus! Jedediah was Columbus, and Florence was Queen Isabella. She wore a string of red coral beads around her neck and her sister Nora's bangle bracelets, and when Jedediah knelt before her and implored her to let him have some ships that he might go and discover the new world, she would rise and strip off her coral necklace and bangle bracelets and hold them out in a very majestic air saying, "You shall have the ships, Columbus. I pledge my jewels to raire the money."

Then Columbus would take the jewels, bow very low and say, "I thank your Majesty; you shall be Queen of the new world which I am about to discover," and disappear around a corner of the rock. In a remarkably short time he would come back bearing three small boats which he would call the Pinta, the Nina, and the Santa Maria. These he would push off into the water and watch them sail away.

Of course that was not quite the way the real Columbus did it, and the real Queen Isabella, doubtless, did not run along the shore with her hair streaming down her back, ready to give the ships a poke with a long stick if they did not go promptly on their way. But it was great fun, and Jedediah and Florence used to play it every pleasant Saturday. On other days they went to school.

Jedediah had been in school two years, but this was Florence's first term.

One day Florence came home crying bitterly, her apron torn and her face all dirty. A big dog had run against her and pushed her down.

"Where was Jedediah?" asked father, and Jedediah hung his head and said nothing.

"Jed won't walk with me; he goes on ahead with the boy," said Florence, all her wrongs bursting out at once.

"Why, Jed!" said his mother.

"Well, the boys laugh at me, and call me girl baby."

"Jedediah Henderson!" said his father, with a world of surprise and reproach in his voice. "So you are afraid of being laughed at! Well it won't do for you to play Columbus any more, for if Columbus had been afraid of being laughed at he would never have discovered America. The boys used to follow him through the streets and hoot at him and nearly everybody said he was crazy. But he kept right on and let them hoot.

"And suppose Fulton had stopped working on his steamboat because people laughed at him, and said a steamboat could never cross the ocean. Why, my son, all the the great men who have ever done anything, have been laughed at by the foolish people who do not know enough to appreciate them. If the boys laugh at you for taking care of your sister it shows that they do know what it is to be polite."

"I guess Jedediah never thought about it before, for I am sure he is not afraid of being laughed at for doing what is right," said his mother.

The next day, when school was dismissed, Jedediah waited at the girl's entrance for Florence, and when she came out he took her by the hand and started on. The boys began to laugh when they saw him and some shouted "girl baby," but Jedediah tucked his sister's arm around his a little closer, and said, "Don't you wish she were your sister?" and Florence looked so sweet and happy that I am sure they all did though perhaps they did not have courage enough to own it.—*Emma L. SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

On Thursday of last week Mr. Ira H. Lee, living a few miles from Lumberton was instantly killed by the falling of the top of a tree which he had fired an i was felling. He left a wife and seven children.

The Gingham Mill at Haw River has been so successful that the building will be doubled and its working power largely increased. It has been in operation only a few months.

Wadesboro is to have a national bank. It is understood that James A. Leak will be its president and Charles M. Burns its vice-president. It will be ready for business about the first of April.

Rockingham Rocket: One of Richmond county's extensive farmers—possibly the largest in the county—made a calculation a few days ago of the amount of fertilizers he will use this year. Reduced to pounds it amounts to 1,172,000 pounds. Of this about 300 tons will be commercial fertilizers; the balance cotton seed, compost, &c.

Goldsboro Argus: This promises to be a great year for the farmers hereabouts. They passed through last year's depression with less complaint than the town people; they are nearer out of debt than at any time since the war, and with economical methods there is no reason why most of them should not become independent.

DOMESTIC.

A colored woman living on Dr. J. W. McKay's plantation near Cheraw, S. C., while sitting in her house was struck and instantly killed by a stroke of lightning.

At Monroe, La., a verdict of $20,000 has been rendered in favor of Thomas and Elizabeth McGuire against the Vicksburg and Shreveport railroad for the killing of their son.

The Susquehanana river overflowed its banks near Wilkesbarre, Pa., compelling the electric railway to be abandoned and threating serious damage to other property.

After a year's idleness the glass works at Bridgeport, Ohio, will resume this week and be conducted on the co-operative plan.

The postoffice department of this country has secured the co-operation of the Canadian postal authorities in the matter of suppression of lottery literature in the mails.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette—Murat Halstead's well known paper—has been sold. The price is understood to be about $450,000.

The Denniston, Texas, cotton mills were sold last week to satisfy a judgment for debt. They cost $500,000 and were sold for $30,000.

Judge Geo. W. Stone, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, died on Sunday morning. He was 82 years of age. He had been on the Supreme bench about eighteen years.

The drought at Rio City, Texas, has been so protracted that, says the U. S. Collector of Customs there, women and children are starving to death, and three-fourths of the cattle have died. Corn meal, flour, rice and sugar have risen in price beyond the reach of the poor and water is selling at 12½ cents per gallon.

Baltimore Sun: Thomas A. Edison is reported to have perfected his latest invention, the kinetescope. The main principle of the kinetescope consists in the taking of a great number of impressions by a camera in a limited space of time, thus obtaining a continuous photograph of the entire motion of the object or person. Forty-six pictures are taken in one second. Yesterday Mr. Edison had Sandow, the strong man, go out to the factory, at Menlo Park, N. J., to be experimented upon. Sandow showed his eight movements for the distention of the muscles and Edison worked the kinetescope. The result was a complete series of plates showing every move of the giant during the twenty seconds of operating. The pictures are but an inch square, although the inventor says he shall be able to take pictures of a larger size soon.

FOREIGN.

The authorities at Rome have not been successful in arresting the anarchists who exploded the bomb recently. The Pope feels great fear lest the anarchists are directing their plots against the vatican.

Because of the scarcity of Mexican dollars India wants the coinage of British silver dollars.

Cardinal Leon Benoit, Roman Archbishop of Rome, died at Paris last Friday. On the same day Cardinal Francesco Ricci Paracciani died at Rome.

The Alcalde of Funte Reboll, in Spain, and the Sacristan of the local church were killed by the explosion of a dynamite bomb, supposed to have been thrown by an anarchist

News comes by cable from Shanghai, March 8, that an anti-missionary riot has taken place at Huchow in the province of Che-King. The missionaries stood firm and the rioters finally withdrew. There was no blood shed.

A cable dispatch to the New York Herald brings news of a very important find: The treasury of King Ousourtesen, of the twelfth dynasty, has been discovered at Dashour by Mr. Morgan, the director of the excavations going on in the interior of the pyramids. It was hidden in a tomb near relatives of the royal family. Jewels and gold-incrusted precious stones were in great variety, including a crown, probably the oldest specimen of Egyptian art, and exquisitely modeled lions. This discovery doubles the importance of Gnizen.

A Pacific cable from New Zealand via Samoa, Fanning Island, Honolulu and Vancouver to this country is now proposed.

CONSCIENCE.

WEBSTER defines conscience as, "The knowledge of our acts, states, or characters, as right or wrong; the faculty power or principle, which decides on the lawfulness of our actions and affections, and approves or condemns them; the moral faculty; the moral sense." Some others, instead of distinguishing the conscience as a distinct faculty of the mind, consider it the reason employed about the questions of right and wrong. Which of these views we may take or whatever definition we may make of it, all agree that every man has a conscience. When we have done anything as an act of our bodily or mental powers, or as an affection of our mind, and can know that it is right or wrong this inward monitor decides and reminds us whether it is right or wrong and adds its comfort or discomfort by approval or condemnation. It is not a standard of right and wrong. It only renders a decision as judge according to the standard we may have. It is therefore wrong for any one to appeal to conscience as a guide independent of some standard of right and wrong. Many are misled here for want of a simple distinction.

Conscience is the same in all, but all manner of deeds, some indeed, contradictory in the lives of the same person, have been done with the approval of this judge. PAUL said he had lived in all good conscience, both as a bigoted and persecuting Pharisee and as a humble persecuted follower of JESUS. The difference was not in the faculty or moral sense, but in the standard. In the one case he had believed that JESUS OF NAZARETH was a blasphemer and that this heretical sect should be destroyed by whatever means. In the other he was convinced that this JESUS is the true Messiah and that His cause should be maintained and His Church gathered and trained. As to the conscience, the Apostle had made diligent effort, had worked hard, to have it without offence, toward GOD and toward men. It is well known that religious fanatics have had the approval of conscience in deeds of inhuman cruelty; and all manner of unrighteous and uncharitable living has claimed its sanction. Even cannibalism and the fanatical slave trade of interior Africa takes refuge in the same. True their consciences are weak and defiled through ages of false religion or generations of cruel and evil lives. Still the moral sense, the power to approve or condemn, is there. It needs redemption, cleansing and instruction, with careful correction and control to make its decisions trustworthy. The conscience of the ritualistic Jew, as we learn from the sixth chapter of Hebrews, and much more that of the degraded savage and half civilized nations and the people of impure practices and false religions needs to be purged by the blood of CHRIST from dead works to serve the living GOD.

The conscience may be seared as with a hot iron as the flesh or skin may be charred and dead to all feeling. This is in a measure possible to the conscience which has been redeemed and offered for the service of the REDEEMER. There may be some reservation of gifts or possessions or powers, and when conscience has condemned certain actions or affections its voice has been stifled and its mandates unheeded or it may be, disobeyed. The voice will grow weaker, and gradually cease, and its sensitiveness be destroyed. It is therefore of vast importance not only to see that our standard of living is the right one and that the true LORD of the conscience is on the throne of our hearts, but that when conscience declares any act or affection disloyal to Him or contrary to right living, as His subjects we should avoid it, while we diligently practice everything approved by this judge as according to this right standard and loyal to this LORD

In the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, the nations are condemned because they did not obey the voice of conscience. They did not live up to the light they had. This may be said of all men in general and may be true of the very people of GOD who are inconsistent in many things and take refuge in the, all too common, excuse that their consciences do not condemn them. This may mean either that they have too low a standard of living or it may be a false standard or they have not obeyed promptly the voice.

The standard of the apostle in striving to have a conscience void of offence toward GOD and toward men, while it does not say how he was to know when this was done, is so far a good one. To apply it will require diligent and careful inquiry into the will of GOD, and ready acquiescence in that will and obedience to its commands.

This moral faculty has suffered all the ruinous effects of the Fall. It is defiled and must be renewed and rectified, although in the heathen it was not destroyed, but bore witness excusing or accusing. This we do not deny. But our present purpose is to point out in a general way what the office of this moral sense is, in our religious lives, what abuse is often made of it and what we may do to have its right sanctions; specially to warn against making it any standard.

Alas, how much inconsistency of Christians, how many religious persecutions, how much fanaticism and folly have been excused in this name! It is time to inquire who is the supreme LORD of conscience and whether we have completely surrendered our conscience to Him, and to ask further what is the standard we set up as His subjects and whether we are ordering our lives so as to have a conscience void of offense toward GOD and toward men according to that standard? The standard must be the glory of GOD and the directory the word of GOD.

BISHOP FOSTER, the METHODIST missionary, has returned from a tour through China and expresses the following opinion about that country:

"The Chinese empire is going to fall to pieces. The truth is that there is too much of it. There is a superabundance of everything. China embraces too many countries, and each country has too many provinces, and each province has too many districts, and each district has too many counties, and each county has too many cities, and each city has too many families, and each family has too many chileren. It is too large. That great empire which has stood for forty centuries must dissolve. They are talking about it all over China. A revolution is coming. It is a belief that England, Russia and France have jealous eyes on China, and when it does fall to pieces I believe the American republic should have a hand in the division. The revolution will be brought about by science. The spread of science among the Chinese will give their dissatisfaction definite shape. China to-day exists only on the soil."

CHILDHOOD OFTEN HOLDS A TRUTH with its feeble fingers, which the grasp of manhood cannot retain—which it is the pride of utmost age to recover.—Ruskin.

HERE AND THERE.

THE PAPERS THAT HAVE TRIED TO follow Lord ROSEBERY, the new premier of Great Britain, in his wirings in and wirings out on the question of abolition of the House of Lords and what is called Home Rule for Ireland, have had experience in acrobatic exercise that must be very perplexing to say the least. The premier is now in a fight for which he has no heart. He probably does not know himself where he will be tomorrow, and so no wonder his friends are not better off. Meanwhile, Rome Rule in Ireland is not in a way to be feared, and the House of Lords will live on till the present generation and many others, not unlikely, have passed away.

The premier has an inestimable advantage in having friends who are anxious to be satisfied, and it is not difficult to satisfy people in such a case.

NO ONE DENIES THAT ALONG WITH much real good, genuine, pure and altogether helpful work in the way of temperance reform there is some that is simply fanatical and so hurtful. But is all the fanaticism on that side? One would think that some of those who prepared matter on temperance in the International Lessons were decidedly guilty of rankest fanaticism in behalf of intemperance. Some have announced principles, to be taught children remember, which would almost seem to make total abstinence the sin and moderate drinking a grace the practice of which will enable to the exercise of the virtue of self-mastery. Was there no fanaticism there?

FROM FAR AND NEAR WE HAVE KIND references to the great improvement made in the paper. Some of our friends, despite the hard times, are sending us some new subscribers. We fear, however, that the efforts of co-laborers, to whom we are so much indebted for help extended gratuitously, and the outlay of means in buying and paying for special articles is overlooked by many.

NEVERTHELESS WE ARE SPARING NO pains and laying out our means to furnish entertaining and useful reading for young and old, wise and simple. We have contracted for the following unusually interesting and valuable articles

1. "AN HOUR WITH THE STARS."—By Sir Richard Stawell Ball, F. R. S. Royal Astronomer of Ireland. The series is fittingly opened with an article by one of the most famous astronomers of the century, whose recent book on "The Story of the Sun" has excited so much attention throughout the world. The article here announced is written in a popular vein, and is more fascinating than fiction.

2. "AN HOUR BENEATH THE SEA."—Charles F. Holden is one of the most popular and voluminous writers of the day on scientific subjects. Besides being a frequent contributor to the magazines, he is the author of numerous books among them being a "Life of Darwin," a "Life of Agassiz" and "Along the Florida Reef," the latter, a sketch of the author's life on the Florida Reef. Professor Holden is at present the editor of the Californian Illustrated Magazine.

3. "AN HOUR WITH THE INSECTS."—By Dr. Henry C. McCook. Some years ago Dr. McCook wrote a book under the title "Tenants of an Old Farm" being a series of charming sketches descriptive of the insect life of an old country place, the spiders being the chief tenantry. The book established the author's reputation as a keen, sympathetic and devoted student of certain forms of insect life, a reputation which he has sustained by many subsequent sketches in the same line. The article here scheduled is in Dr. McCook's most entertaining style, and will interest all classes of readers.

4. "AN HOUR WITH THE PLANTS.—By Dr. Charles C. Abbott. Few men since the days of Thoreau have done more to popularize natural science than Dr. Charles C. Abbott of the University of Pennsylvania. Under his sympathetic touch the dreariest upland and the dullest swamp become instinct with a hundred beautiful, interesting and varied forms of life. One of the best of his numerous books, "Waste and Wanderings," is based simply on the writer's observations and researches in an old swamp near his home in New Jersey. His paper, in this series, is a most delightful description of some of nature's marvels in the plant world.

5. "AN HOUR WITH THE BIRDS."—By Olive Thorne Miller. This is a delightful paper by this well-known student of birds and bird life. Mrs. Miller is a frequent contributor to the Atlantic Monthly and other magazines on this special topic, and she has also written "Nesting Time" and a number of other books detailing her experience and observations in the same line. Mrs. Miller's writings are always in A POPULAR VEIN but true to nature and full of sympathy aud tenderness."

IT MAY NOT BE AMISS TO SUGGEST that those wanting the articles referred to above ought to subscribe at once. In order to introduce the paper into families not getting it, and in the hope that they will so appreciate it as to continue for years to come, we put the price the first year at $1.50—that is we give them a few months gratis. This applies only to the first year and to families not getting the paper. No one is wronged by this; we give the old subscribers the extra treat gratis. We trust many will be induced to accept the terms.

WE HAVE SOME REASON TO BELIEVE that Rev. JOHN W. MOORE and Miss LIZZIE MOORE are now enroute for their future field of labor in Japan, but as the friends with whom we have co-operated freely in bringing about this result have given us no information on the subject, as naturally would be expected, we simply wait to hear from them, and may give our readers some good news next week.

OUR FRIENDS WILL MISS A GOOD DEAL if they fail to read the articles on the second and third pages—articles which collectively contain matter both useful and agreeable. We call special attention to the article of Rev. T. A. WHARTON on Synod's work. The article touches a subject upon which, though little has been said, very much not improbably, has been thought, and it will go far to quiet any dissatisfaction which may have resulted from a lack of information.

REV. WILLIAM BLACK.

The attention of pastors and people throughout the Synod should be called to the fact that Rev. Wm. Black nas entered upon his duties as Superintendent of Synodical Missions. At a meeting of the Executive Committee held in Fayetteville, Feb. 20th, it was decided in view of the exigencies of the times that large contributions should not be sought from the churches as heretofore, but that permanent subscriptions should be secured from as many churches as possible. The committee believed that the Church was as ready to respond to this cause as ever, but feared that churches might not be willing to open their doors to the Superintendent if as much was expected of them in these times as some churches had given heretofore. But the committee feels confident that all pastors and sessions will welcome the Superintendent to present to their people on this modest scale a cause that is vital to the progress and even to the very life of our Church in North Carolina. The committee cordially commends Brother Black to the churches, and bespeaks for him the hearty co-operation of pastors, elders and deacons throughout our bounds. At a time of financial depression like this Brother Black would have been unwilling to accept the responsibility of this work, but for his confidence in the earnest purpose of our people to do this work and his faith in the blessing of God upon it.

PEYTON H. HOGE,
Acting Secretary.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by

Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

An Impressive Appeal.

There has come into our hands, recently, a small publication, of half a dozen pages, bearing the title, "A joint appeal to all Protestant Evangelical Christians, in the United States and Canada, for a United and more earnest Movement in the Great Work of the World's Conversion."

We wish to invite special attention to this appeal—so that no one into whose hands it may come may fail to read it.

It bears no signatures and in these days when every busy pastor is so flooded with advertisements and appeals, of all kinds, it is very easy for this one to find its way into the waste basket, unnoticed. It deserves, however, better treatment both on account of its source and its intrinsic merits.

In 1893 a Conference of the Representatives of all the Protestant Missionary organizations, of the United States and Canada, to be held annually, was inaugurated. The second meeting was held in January 1894. The report of the discussions of that Conference are before us and contains a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee, to prepare an appeal, on the general subject of Foreign Missions. The result of the labors of that committee is this most interesting and striking paper, which we hope will find its way into the hands of every pastor and elder, we would like to say church member, in the State. We will have it sent to every Pastor. Do not overlook it brethren. Read it yourself carefully—and then read it, or preach it, in several sermons, to your people.

It is almost impossible to give an abstract of the paper, but, in order to give some idea of its value, we will give the following extracts from it:

"Those present were so impressed with the vastness of the work to be done, in order to give the gospel to the unevangelized nations, and so fully convinced that the time has now come, to unite in a more aggressive movement, for the evangelization of the whole world, that a committee was appointed to draw up an appeal, to all Protestant Christians in the United States and Canada, asking their full and earnest co-operation. by their prayers and their increasing gifts, for this great end."

It then proceeds to emphasize the following points:

1. "The whole Bible is a Missionary Volume."

"We earnestly call upon every Christian disciple to examine the word of God and see how every portion of it, from Genesis to Revelation, is instinct with the spirit of missions. It is a field book of universal conquests.

This is then beautifully, but briefly developed.

2. "Our Marching Orders."

"The command of our Lord to publish the gospel to all the world is clear and explicit and and admits no compromise. This great commission was given on four different occasions and four in different forms. These are carefully stated.

3. "Our Common Creed of Missions."

"We desire, in love for our blessed Lord and for all who have named His name, to call attention by way of encouragement, to the essential unity of the Church, with respect to those fundamental doctrines, upon which the missionary work is made to rest." Here follows a forceful statement of the truths we accept, and the errors we combat:

4. "No Need of Discouragements."

"Possibly many in the Church of Christ are disheartened by those obstacles, which arise in connection with mission work. But have not obstacles appeared in every stage of the Christian conquest?" Strikingly illustrated from apostolic and subsequent history.

5. "Missionary Success an Earnest of Divine Favor.

There is no sublimer story in human history than that which sketches the majestic moral of the Christian faith from Jerusalem, etc." Here are then given some fresh and inspiring facts. "But the great work is but just begun."

6. "Our Manifold Obligations."

This paragraph could not be touched without marring it. It is so brief, compact and impressive.

7. Union Against Unjust Criticism."

"There is need, just now, for union in missions as a matter of common defense. The cause of Foreign Missions is especially liable to assailment, as it is far off and therefore may be, more safely, made the subject of ignorant ridicule."

8. "The Final Rally of the Century."

"We call upon all who love the Lord Jesus Christ to pray, with all earnestness that these may be years of special harvest."

Our heart has burned within us as we have read this ringing appeal. We do not envy the Christian who can read it without feeling his pulse quickened and his purposes for more faithful and self-denying service confirmed.

THE HILLS OF THE LORD.

God ploughed one day with an earthquake,
And drove His furrows deep!
The huddling plains upstarted;
The hills were all a-leap.

But that is the mountains' secret;
Aye, hidden in their breast.
God's peace is everlasting,
Are the dream-words of their rest.

He hath made them the haunt of beauty,
The home-elect of His grace.
He spreadeth His mornings on them;
His sunsets light their face.

His thunders tread in music
Of footfalls echoing long,
And carry majestic greeting
Around the silent throng.

His words bring messages to them;
Wild storm news from the main.
They sing it down to the valleys,
In the love-song of the rain.

Green tribes from afar come trooping,
And over the uplands flock.
He weaveth the zones t gether
In robes for His risen rock.

There are nurseries for young rivers,
Nests for His flying cloud.
Homesteads for new-born races,
Masterful, free and proud.

The people of tired cities
Come up to their shrines to pray.
God freshens again within them
As He passes by all day.

And lo! I have caught their secret—
The beauty deeper than all.
This faith—that life's hard moments,
When the jarring shadows fall:

Are but God ploughing His mountains,
And the mountains yet shall be
The source of His grace and freshness,
And His peace eternal to me.

ANNUAL REPORT OF CHIENGMAI STATION.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

STATESVILLE, N. C., Feb. 27th, 1894.

EVANGELISTIC WORK.

The growth of the Church and the work of the evangelist are very closely allied. Our churches have grown because of the evangelistic work. Thirty of our elders from the different churches have been employed parts of the year and our elders almost universally have aided in this work. Their work under the direction of the evangelistic committee lies either at home or wherever the call is most urgent. They go—we follow and gather in the harvest. The longest and most noteworthy tour since the establishment of the mission was taken by Dr. McGilvary. Mr. Irwin, of Lampoon station, accompanied him. The tour extended over a period of five months and the towns and villages where we have any Christians to the North. From Chieng Saan they pushed forward to the North—going still North, through the Shan States under British Burma until Chieng Hoong was reached, the capital of Sip Song Punna, a confederation under Yunnan China. Everywhere they were kindly received. In every place they had eager listeners to the gospel. By this tour the extent to which the Laos language is spoken and the vastness of the territory to be reached is brought before us. The opening of Chieng Hai will be but the beginning of the work to the North not to be finished until the borders of China are reached. On their return Dr. McGilvary spent a month in the mountains among the Musser tribe meeting with every encouragement for the continuation of the work so auspiciously began among them. Ch. Boo Kaw, the first Musur convert, died during the year exhorting his people with his latest breath to embrace the gospel. We close our account of the evangelistic work with a few words of well merited commendation for our native pastor, Rev. Nan Tah. Yearly his services grow more valuable to our churches, and we would indeed sadly miss him if he should be called away from among us. He is "instant in season, and out of season preaching the Word." Wherever he goes he carries this gospel of Christ. Above all he lives his religion in his life—being one of the best illustrations of the power of the gospel, and is universally respected and loved.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Boys' School. Two terms have been held during the year, 118 pupils were enrolled during the first term and 87 the second. Total number enrolled 140, an increase of 35 over last year. About two-thirds of the pupils have been boarders. The Board having granted the request for an appropriation to enlarge the school building a teak room 30x32 feet was added to the former building and seated with desks sufficient to accommodate 150 boys. The school under the care of Mr. Collins and Miss McGilvary is accomplishing a grand work in training the young for future Christian usefulness. The advance class has completed a four year's course in the Old Testament History and a study of the life of Christ. Twelve of the scholars have united with the Church during the year.

Girls' School. Under the care of Miss Griffin and Miss Alice McGilvary, the school has completed a very satisfactory year. Sixty-six scholars were in attendance both terms, fifty of whom were boarders, thirteen of the pupils have united with the church. Perhaps the most encouraging feature in our educational work is this: All of the girls and all the boys except a very few come from Christian homes. When school is dismissed they return to Christian families and are shielded in a great measure from many of the temptations that assail the young in heathen lands—while their influence reacts on their homes and villages. They all understand more or less the religion of Christ—they know very little about temple worship—they are at home in the church—they would feel out of place in making offerings to Buddha Loon; providence permitting, we shall look to our schools for a grand army of Christian helpers to reinforce us in our work of evangelizing this land.

MEDICAL WORK.

Whole number of patients treated about 5,000. Early in the year the vice roy of Chiengmai issued an order giving the whole control of vaccinating into the hands of our resident physician, Dr. McKean. Over 3,000 persons have already been vaccinated so that the medical work has probably touched 8,000 persons besides the large number reached in the various mission tours; eighty ounces of quinine having been sold and distributed on the long tour to the North alone. Receipts have been sufficient to pay all expenses of medicines, instruments, assistants, &c. Evening worship is held on the medical compound to which all patients are invited and none leave the hospital without having had the plan of salvation explained and the claims of the gospel pressed on them. The medical work enjoys the favor of the princes and officials and all in authority. Much mustbe left undone because of the need of another physician in this station alone, besides one or two more for our evangelistic work in the North.

LITERARY WORK AND MISSION PRESS.

The book of Acts and the first half of the gospel of John have been translated by Rev. E. B. McGilvary. A Laos arithmetic and Laos spelling book for use in the schools have been prepared by Mr. Collins. Since our last annual mission meeting in November, 1892, 460,000 pages of the Scriptures and 436,500 pages of religious tracts have been printed. What this means to us is easier access to the homes of the people, to the temples, to the priesthood, to princes, to all classes. What it means to the people no one can estimate. Three thousand copies of the gospel of Matthew have been printed, many of which have been sold or distributed. The book of Acts is now in the press, and an edition of 3,000 nearly completed. A second edition of Mr. McGilvary's tract showing the way of Life has been issued. Two thousand five hundred child's catechisms and 1,500 copies of a tract briefly comparing the two religions Christianity and Buddhism have been printed. One thousand seven hundred and fifty rupees, nearly $1,600, have been received for work done and the sale of Laos books. Mr. Collins, a manager, reports that there is urgent need for a new press.

The needs of our work are many, but we cannot dwell upon them here. We close our report with hopes bright for the speedy conversion of this people from darkness to the light of Christianity. We are now leaving the past behind and entering upon a new year. What that year will bring of success or failure, joy or sorrow, of hopes fulfilled, or hopes deferred, we cannot tell. We simply take up our work anew, relying upon the promise of Jehovah God given to His servant of old. Josh. i: 9, "Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage, be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee withersoever thou goest."

I will only add that this, the report is of Chiengmai station alone and the churches under it. The stations of Lakawn and Lampoon make their own reports which have not yet reached me. At the meeting of Presbytery in December five men were licensed to preach the gospel, one of whom was ordained. The whole number of adults received on examination in all the churches were 300; non-communing members baptized, 183. The accessions for the six previous years were 110, 129, 180, 190, 241, 299. In the latest work by Dr. Dennis, "Foreign Missions After a Century" it is stated that the average accession per minister in the North Laos Presbytery is greater than in any other Presbytery connected with the General Assembly, home or foreign.

Surely we should thank God and take courage.

Sincerely yours,

D. McG.

THE SYNOD'S WORK.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

There is a wide-spread uneasiness making itself felt throughout the Presbyteries in regard to our Synodical evangelistic work.

This uneasiness is of no recent date. It began in the Synod of Tarboro, when Bro. Smith laid down the burden of his great work.

Alas! Since then the evangelistic breeze has lulled. The fever has abated in the Synodical body. One of two things is going to happen; either a slow convalescence and a healthy reaction from fever—or else we shall soon see a corpse, and later an uncoupled skeleton—a few bones in the regions round about Bro. Pell and other remnants in Person and Forsythe.

Meanwhile some of us are asking ourselves which is it going to be—a convalescence or a scattered skeleton. Just now, to some, the odds seem to be in favor of the skeleton—with no Ezekiel's inspiriting vision of a resurrection in sight. There has been a conspiracy of causes working towards this discouraging end. Chiefly of course, the resignation of Bro. Smith. The engine stopped when the fire went out; then the long reactionary interval between his resignation and the election of a new superintendent; the hard times which interrupted the pace which Bro. Smith had set for the churches; and last but not least the fact that by reason of their own exacting presbyterial duties, aggravated by the alarming falling off in Home Mission receipts—or for some other reason—the Synod's committee have relaxed their hold upon this work.

It looked like fever a year ago—it looks like blind staggers now. What is to be done? What can be done? Shall we let our work die and not even give it a decent funeral? These are gloomy questions, but in just such questions is the prevailing uneasiness manifesting itself. It is just these questions frequently put to the writer as to one supposed to know something of the inside working of the committee which prompts this little article.

Our answer is first: "things are not what they seem"—all the results of our recent missionary movement are being carefully conserved. By the energy and unabated interest of the superintendent, the salaries of all the Synod's evangelists now in the field are secured by individual churches or by funds yet due from subscriptions, and the revenues of the regular channels of collection. So that while the work may be standing still, it is nevertheless standing. Another hopeful fact and chiefest—the work is entrusted to one peculiarly qualified by business experience, nature and grace to be its superintendent.

It was with a heavy heart that Rev. William Black left his phenomenonally successful work in Union and Anson to lead what seemed to many a forlorn hope against the reaction in the Synod. Those of us who know him best cannot feel the slightest doubt, that all that any man can do, upon whom God has bestowed unusual gifts; a resistless enthusiasm, a large Scotch underjaw and a thorough consecration of himself, he will do. If he fails it will only be because his brethren refuse to support him. And just here a caution must be entered. It is not proposed, during this year, that the superintendent shall address himself to the task of raising money except incidentally. Until the present hard times be overpast it is the purpose of the committee to hold past gains merely. Those who look in the columns of the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN for a recurrence of Bro. Smith's merciless figures will be disappointed. Bro. Black will busy himself in trying to "save the pieces," to keep the ship afloat till it shall please God to give us a smoother sea. He will largely confine himself to visiting the Presbyterial mission fields and in raising them to self-support; in doing purely evangelistic work in destitute places, and in visiting churches to which he may be invited with a view to increasing their interest in the work and in securing annual contributions therefrom. This is the outline of his work which the committee had in mind when he was elected.

The Executive Committee at whose head Bro. Smith remains, will of course direct his labors and will share with him the burden and responsibility of those labors.

Brethren, of the Synod, shall we not hold up the hands of our dear brother as he engages in a work which seems so difficult and beset at this time with so many perils—not the least of which is the deadly chill consequent upon departed fever!

Bro. Black's presence in our congregations will be a blessing to us and to our people.

Let us ask God for, and work for, a turn of the tide in that great work which God raised up Bro. Smith so wonderfully to inaugurate.

T. A. WHARTON.

MY ROMISH FRIENDS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

This whole village, (in Maryland) is over-run with Roman Catholic influence; I confess to you that I came under its baneful spell, yet so gradually, so unwittingly. Listen: I became acquainted with some of the Catholic families here, soon after moving to the place. Through them I was introduced to some of the nun's at the Convent, where I was pressed to go, to witness an entertainment given to the public gratis. Those nun's were charming women, whose conversation was soothing, restful, delightful. Then as it seemed casually, I met Father H——, the parish priest. Now I know that it was planned for me to meet with him, as some other things were planned, in order to bring me and my whole family under Catholic influence. I was charmed with the priest as I had been with the "sisters." He was a refined gentleman, and a scholar, I met him at a church fair, he talked a great deal to me, and I thought him most entertaining. He met my husband on the train, one day and he came home delighted with him also. As both of us belong to Protestant churches it does look like rather more than ordinary politeness, and bon hommie for these people to be so very particular to interest us. Well, perhaps I had given them some encouragement to do so. I saw all around me evidences of their good taste, their refinement, and their religious zeal. Surely thought I, they have been grossly slandered, by those who know little of their religion. I read some of their books, one a novel, called Fabriola, was deeply interesting, in its descriptions of the torture of Catholics by Protestants. (!) I read with avidity many more of their books. One by Cardinal Gibbons, "The Faith of Our Fathers," in which is treated the denial of the Bible to the people, and the reasons therefor. Here, questioned I, nave I been wrong all my life? Is it because of too much Bible-reading and studying, that there are so many sects, and so much dissension in Protestant churches? Can this be true? Ah! how my faith trembled! My dear uncle said to me, "For shame! I thought you had better sense than to read their works, they are most dangerous and insidious." But I was almost under the spell, and replied, "I believe any one who reads them must admit that they have strong arguments, and one is that that church is the mother of us all." Uncle replied sadly, "Their literature is written for the purpose of making proselytes, and if they can accomplish that, it matters little to them whether they teach the truth or not." His words had their effect on me, but I was to go a step further yet, in my obstinacy and following the flatteries which had so beguiled me. Satolli celebrated mass at the Monastery, which was a gorgeous cathedral with entrancing music. I went twice to hear Satolli. Then he held a reception, when every one was graciously permitted to kiss his immense emerald ring, which the Pope had blessed. Being in a crowd of Catholic friends I did as the Romans did, and kissed the ring. With the touch of my lips to the lifeless stone, I experienced a shock and a disgust which has never left me since, though it was six months ago. Yes, the scales fell from my eyes, and from that time the whole thing has been unveiled to me. I see nothing to admire in their religion, either in doctrine or practice, and I wonder at myself that I should have been tempted to go so far. I know now that the intense regard of my Catholic friends was only pretense, for a purpose. Their influence is marvellous nothing can be more softly insinuating than they are when trying to make proselytes. I believe this is a part of their education. Thank God that I was not left longer a prey to their scheming. Let parents take warning, and keep their children from the Romish schools. Once fully under their rule one is a slave, body and soul. Time, talents, and property must be used only as the priest decrees. Those who have talent or money, are elevated to some high position in the Church, those of weak minds and no will-power are the veriest slaves that live.

The Depths of the Bible.

I am glad there is a depth in the Bible I know nothing about; that there is a height there I cannot climb to if I should live to be as old as Methuselah; I venture to say, if I should live for ages on the earth I would only have touched its surface.

I pity the man who knows all the Bible, for it is a pretty good sign he doesn't know himself. A man came to me with what he thought was a very difficult passage, and he said, "Mr. Moody how do you explain it?"

I said, "I don't explain it:"

"But how do you interpret it?"

"I don't interpret it."

"Well, how do you understand it?"

"I don't understand it."

"But what do you do with it?"

"I don't do anything with it."

"You don't believe it?"

"Yes, I believe it. There are lots of things that I believe that I do not understand. In the third chapter of John Christ says to Nicodemus, 'If you do not understand earthly things how can you understand heavenly things?' There are a great many things about my own body I do not understand; I don't understand nature; it is filled with wonderful things I don't comprehend. Then why should I expect to know everything spiritually?"

But men ask, "How can you prove the book is inspired?" I answer, because it inspires me. That is one of the best proofs. It does inspire us.—D. L. Moody.

BOOKS.

The popular author Edna Lyall gives in her strong pleasing manner a most interest- story of the great Civil War in England, in her work lately issued by Harper & Bros. New York, entitled To Right the Wrong. Miss Lyall weaves her story principally around the great reformer John Hampden; following history as far as possible. The most interesting minor character is a young royalist, who, from a strong conviction of justice of the cause, fights for religious liberty. He is thus placed in opposition to his family and from this circumstance are drawn several effective scenes. The book is fully illustrated and is up to the high standard attained by the publisher in binding and general make up.

Watlee, Burpee & Co., of Philadelphia have issued a unique book entitled The Beautiful Flower Garden. The author F. Schuyler Matthews, the Boston artist, associated with with Mr. A. H. Lewkes, a professional and most successful grower, gives valuable information in relation to landscape gardening, preparation of soil, culture of flowers, etc. Price 50 cents.

MAGAZINES.

The Century for March is fully up to the usual high standard of that magazine. The Tuilleries under the Second Empire is a most interesting article by Anna L. Bickwell, an Inmate of the Palace; Mrs. Van Rensselaer contributes, in her comprehensive and charming style, The Madison Square Garden, this article is beautifully illustrated by A. F. Jaccaci and A. Castaigne; Stephen Bonsal tells of a Pilgrimage to Lourdes; Drowsy Kent is depicted by Chas. de Kay, with pictures by John A. Fraser; Edward S. Holden gives valuable information about earthquakes and how to measure them; A Personal Tribute by the Comte de Paris to Philip Kearny; Major Andre's Story of the "Mischianza," are interesting; The Stories by Mark Twain, and Mary Hallock Foote, are continued; and Timothy Cole also continues the Old Dutch Masters. The Century Co., New York. Price $4 a year.

The Cosmopolitan for March is an especially interesting number. We note a portion of the contents: The Son of the Carpenter, by Lyman Abbott, is profusely illustrated with well-executed cuts of Bethlehem, the Jordan, Capernaum, and other places of the Holy Land; Mr. Howells, again keeps the interest of the reader in New York in his Altrurian Papers; The Teacher's College, one of the professional schools of Columbia University; The Quadrilles at the Court of Napoleon First; God's Will and Human Happiness, by St. George Mivart; The Disappearance Syndicate, by S. C. Crawford and Mr. Valdes' novel The Origin of Thought are the highest order upon the subjects of which they treat. The Cosmopolitan Co., New York.

CONCERNING HOPE.

BY WAYLAND HOYT, D. D.

Hope is expectation. It has an eye for horizons ampler and nobler than those of the narrow present. As a great teacher says "Hope covers all that ground which the mind occupies in looking into the future for certain great valnes and results, not merely in forelooking, but in looking forward with special and concurrent joy." Hope makes even the struggle of the daily life and the wear and tear of it "not like the convict's trample on the world's great treadmill, but like an ascent on the luminous step of duty to the very gates of heaven." "O blessed hope," exclaims Thomas Carlyle, "whereby on man's straight prison walls are painted beautiful, far-stretching landscapes; and into the night of very death is shed holiest dawn."

One of the finest pictures with which history can present you is that of Milton—old and poor and blind, odious to the restored royalists, his friends exiled from him, himself distrusted by those who in the brave days of Oliver Cromwell had most trusted him, slashed at by cutting tongues but abating not a jot of heart and hope—setting himself to the making of the mighty poem which he was sure the world would not willingly let die.

A picture like this, which some one sketched in shining words, once stirred me. Somebody had come from a distant province to visit Rome. He had stored his memory with the great sights that he might tell them to his friends at home. But one day was a red-letter day for him. He was walking along the Appian Way. A mighty and various crowd—soldiers, senators, favorites, ladies in lavish dress, were jostling each other in the thronged thoroughfare, riding, walking. Amid the concourse his eye falls for an instant upon a company of soldiers guarding and escorting a wan, wearied, half blind, manacled prisoner. The visitor is gazing at this sight listlessly. Just then there is a burst of music, then a wave of applause and shouting sweeps towards him; and then the golden chariot of the Emperor, drawn by splendid horses in glittering harness, and with Nero himself lolling in the chariot, dashes by. Ah, that is a red-letter day for this visitor. He has seen the Emperor! He thinks no more of the slight, manacled prisoner. When he goes home he hastens to tells his friends about the grand sight of the Emperor, and never thinks to mention his sight of the poor prisoner. But the really grand sight the visitor saw that day was not the Emperor, but was the prisoner. For the prisoner was Paul the Apostle, and he rules the ages. But the scepter of Nero has become but a forgotten bauble.

And one reason why this prisoner wrought so, and still rules so, is because of the hope in him. He knew himself, through hope, to be more than he seemed. He might be prisoner, but he was also ambassador of a deathless King and of a deathless kingdom. How he widens the horizon for the slaves, the poor, the persecuted of that great Rome, and for all men through the centuries as he says his benediction "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost."

Yes, the great doers have always been great hopers.

Tennyson sings of

"The mighty hopes which make us men."

Have you ever thought, my friend, of the worst loss which can come to a man? Loss of property? that is a sad loss, but not the worst. Loss of opportunity? nor is that the worst of losses. Loss of hope, when the heart dies and the courage fails, and the hands hang listlessly, and a man begins only and sadly to drudge—this, the loss of hope, is the blackest loss.

"I've just got back from Washington, where I've been since the election trying to get an appointment," said a politician.

"Gave up hope, eh?" said a sympathizing friend.

"O no," was the quick reply. "I came home to hope. It's cheaper to hope here." I like that, my friend; hope anyway. Get, if you must, the cheapest place to hope, but hope!

I think we should not refuse to lose hope, even in such hard times as now grip us—for one reason, because God is. I like much that I snatch from "Luther's Table-Talk:" "At one time I was sorely vexed and tried by my own sinfulness, by the wickedness of the world, and by the dangers that beset the Church. One morning I saw my wife dressed in mourning. Surprised, I asked her who had died. 'Do you not know?' she replied: 'God in heaven is dead.' 'How can you talk such nonsense, Katie?' I said; 'how can God die? Why, he is immortal, and will live through all eternity.' 'Is that really true?' she asked. 'Of course,' I said, still not perceiving what she was aiming at; 'how can you doubt it? As surely as there is a God in heaven, so sure is it that He can never die.' 'And yet,' she said, 'though you do not doubt that, yet you are so hopeless and discouraged.' Then I observed what a wise woman my wife was, and mastered my sadness."

I think we should also resolve never to cease from hope because Christ is. It is winter now, but God's gift of the summer is ahead. And how much that gift includes—soft airs, waving banners of leaves, choirs of birds, the green grass hanging its robes of verdure from all the hills, the bespangling of the flowers, what multitudinous and various gifts the gift of the summer means! And what surprising things the gift of Christ includes. When you are downhearted wait a little to meditate on this Scripture, and see if you can after all help hoping: "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" I think we should also hope because the Promises are.

"I stood amazed and whispered 'Can it be
That He hath granted all the boon I sought?
How wonderful that He for me hath wrought!
How wonderful that He hath answered me!'
O faithless heart! He said that He would hear
And answered thy poor prayer; and He hath heard
And proved His promise! Wherefore didst thou fear?
Why marvel that thy Lord had kept His word?
More wonderful if He should fail to bless
Expectant faith and prayer with good success."

I think we should also hope because God's plan is one of steady and sure advancement: "Wherein God shows us things in the slow history of their ripening."

And we should also hope because Heaven is. Let Jerusalem come into your mind, was the charge of the prophet Jeremiah to the exiled Jews. Let the Heavenly Jerusalem come into your mind when your heart fails and your hope flags. This life is but a vestibule to the eternal temple. And every shyest and largest and utmost hope shall be brimmed with fulfilment there. Sang the ancient Psalmist: But I will hope continually. Amid even the blackest night make that your song.

GOD'S REMEDY FOR SIN.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Some years ago I read, in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN an article written by a friend who visited a minister and spent some time with him, and was so astonished neither to see, or hear, act or word, showing impatience that he expressed himself pleased and surprised that even a minister should be able so completely to control his temper, as, when they were school-boys together, he was governed by it.

The minister told him, he never was able to control his temper: but that he went to Jesus and told Him it was too strong for him and asked Him to rule it and He did.

When I read this I was a slave to an acquired habit, not one for which I could make the excuse that it was natural to me, and, I could not help it. I was greatly troubled on account of the power it had over me, and the waste of time and money it caused, and the injury it was to the influence for good that it was my duty to exert: I asked Jesus to make me free and He did.

The reason, given, why many who believed on Him, did not confess Him, was: "For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." The parents, of him who was born blind, even after Jesus opened his eyes, "feared the Jews; for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that He was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue." The man, to whom Jesus gave sight, because he gave true testimony, was accused of teaching the Pharisees and was cast out.

And is there not now a prejudice in the minds of Christians (?) against direct, personal, acknowledged faith in Jesus Christ, as the Savior and Deliverer from the power of sin, in individual cases? Is not this the reason, that of the ten who are cleansed, only one returns to give glory to God, and that one must be brought through trial, before the duty, of telling others about the cleansing is made plain?

Bad habits are the fetters, with which Satan binds his captive to lead him at his will; but Jesus is "a stronger than he" and casts him out "by the Spirit of God" and so liberates every one that believes on Him and there never was one brought to Him in faith, even by another, who was not made whole."

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

Eyes.

It happened not long ago to a friend of mine who has been very short-sighted all her life, to have her eyes "measured" for glasses which have given her a new sense of the wonderful world she lives in. The first time she went to church after the new glasses had revealed to her the manner of place the world was, she felt embarrassed at seeing so much and so clearly. Walking through the aisle to her pew, she beheld for the first time, though she had heard him preach for years, the clear-cut, keen and benevolent face of her pastor. She saw the choir, too, a fine-looking set of young people, and observed with pleasure the thoughtful faces of the elders and deacons.

The new glasses had introduced her to a new world, simply by revealing to her what had always been there. No change had been wrought in the world, and her environment remained what it had long been. But all was altered for her. Revelation had been granted, and she could almost say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see!"

Something like this happens when one who has never realized the loving-kindness of God suddenly awakens to a sense of it.

The spirit's vision was dim. Enlightenment being granted, there came a new comprehension of God's meanings, a new insight, a new and wonderful charm about all that surrounded the life. The groping step was changed to wing-like fleetness. The blind saw.

But God's dear love had been there all the while.—Aunt Marjory, in Christian Intelligencer.

Go!

A little word, but oh, what a tremendous meaning lies hidden in those two letters!

Go! It signifies activity. It means to move forward. Advance! Backed by the Holy Ghost it has "the ring of conquest." It should be written over every page of life's history. It should be the key-word of duty for every disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ. The evil age in which we live, the countless souls dying without the great salvation, demand that we give intense emphasis to that word. Follow its history through the Word of God and try to catch something of its meaning. Endeavor to get it incorporated into your very being. Let it be the great spiritual dynamo that shall put into life and zeal every thought, every purpose, every muscle, bone and nerve for Christ that is "mighty to save."

But where shall I go? Go to the lost wherever you may find them. Accept each opportunity God gives you, and lift up Jesus, who has said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto men." In the shop, in the store, in the home, in the church, in the palace, in the hovel, on the street, anywhere, everywhere. Acts viii. 4.

"Go—and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Presbyterian Banner.

Graces of Manner.

It is the little graces of manner that make up a charming personality. For instance, an exchange remarks that so few people know how to receive a favor graciously. Ask them to render you a service, and they could not be more ready than they are. But try to offer them a courtesy, and see how quickly you will retire from their presence with a feeling of wounded pride and annoyance. Some will refuse outright, and others will accept as if they were bestowing a royal condescension. To accept something that we do not want, for which we have no use, to accept it in such a manner that the one who offers it will feel that he has rendered a desired service, is the height of consideration and good breeding. The strong, capable and able-bodied do not like to be served. It is much easier to serve one's self than to lie back and be waited upon. They truly feel that it is more blessed to give than to receive—blessed, perhaps because they do not want to receive. But such people would deny to others what they claim most strenuously for themselves—the right to confer a favor or to discharge an obligation, the sense of which sets heavily upon them.—Chicago Standard.

Silent Influence.

"I have no influence," said Elsie Lee to her old friend, Miss Tomasin. "Why, I am so timid when in company with others that I hardly dare raise my eyes or open my lips."

"That may be," replied the old lady, "and yet you are always exerting your influence wherever you go. You cannot help yourself. An hour ago I bought a little bunch of violets from a German flower girl, and I set them on yonder shelf, beside my dear mother's picture. It is a very tiny bunch, and a person entering the room would very likely not see them, for they do not challenge attention. But every nook and corner of the apartment feels their presence, for their fragrance is pervading the atmosphere. So it is with you, my dear. You love your Saviour, and you try to serve Him. You think you cannot speak for Him, but if you live for Him, and with Him, in gentleness, patience and self-denial, that is better than talking. It does more good. The other evening young Halcomb, who is thoughtless and giddy, made a jest of a verse of Scripture in your hearing. You wished, I saw, to protest against his act, and tried to do so, but the words would not come. Yet your pained look, your quick blush, your instinctive, indignant gesture, spoke for you, and the young man turned and said: 'I beg your pardon, Miss Elsie." Was not this a proof that he saw and felt your condemnation?"

Silent influence is stronger than we sometimes think, for good and for evil. Let us not underestimate it. The light of day, the warmth of spring, the nightly dew, and the snow, enshielding tree and flower, are all voiceless; yet have their influence—the influence of loving deeds.

FOREIGN MISSION COMMITTEE NOTES.

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions met in the Mission Rooms, Monday, March the 12th, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Acting Secretary gave an account of his visit to the Union Theological Seminary, reporting that he had personal interviews with nine of the Seminary students who were looking forward to Foreign Mission work; and that according to the testimony of the Seminary faculty, all of these were among the picked men of the institution.

Mr. Charles R. Morton and Mr. C. R. Womeldorf, members of the present Senior Class, were appointed as missionaries to Brazil, to be sent out when the way is clear.

Rev. J. Wallace Moore, and his sister Miss Lizzie Moore, were authorized to proceed at once to their field of labor in Japan, as soon as the funds for that purpose are forthcoming; and Miss Emma Boardman, under appointment to China, was authorized to go with them, provided she could make her arrangements in time.

A letter was read from the Rev. F. A. Cowan, of Brazil, stating that he had been for some time confined to his bed by illness.

A leaflet styled "The Mission of the Southern Presbyterian Church in Brazil," by Miss Charlotte Kemper, was ordered to be published. The price of this will be four cents, and it will be ready for distribution in a few days.

The Secretary was instructed to send Foreign Mission collection envelopes to all the churches within our bounds where the envelope system is not already in use. Will the brethren who are using this system, and therefore do not need the envelopes, kindly drop us a postal card to that effect, and thereby save us the trouble and expense of sending them envelopes unnecessarily?

Reports were received from most of our stations in China and Japan. All of our workers were reported as being well and pursuing their work without interruption. Letters were also read from Rev. J. G. Hall, Rev. W. M. Thompson and Rev. H. B. Pratt.

The Treasurer reported that the collections for March were coming in slowly compared with last March. It is hoped that our church treasurers having funds for Foreign Missions in hand, will send them in promptly, so that they may be received in time to be acknowledged in our annual report. We can only report money received up to the 31st of March.

S. H. Chester,
Acting Secretary.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Concord:—Last Sunday, 11th inst., was the occasion of the regular communion services at the First Presbyterian church. Preparatory services were held Friday night and Saturday morning, when the pastor was assisted by Rev. Mr. Lancaster, pastor of Rocky River church. Ten persons were added to the membership of the church Sunday morning. In the afternoon an interesting household meeting was held.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Danbury:—Rev. C. Miller writes: We are having a glorious meeting at Danbury under the preaching of our Synodical Superintendent, Rev. Wm. Black. The whole community is stirred. The court house where we preach is crowded. Several of the most prominent citizens have made confession of Christ. The meeting still continues. To God be the praise.

VIRGINIA.

Death of Mr. J. D. K. Sleight:—We learn from the Baltimore Sun of the death of Mr. Sleight, of pneumonia, at his home in Richmond on Thursday of last week. Mr Sleight was 62 years of age. He was born in Sag Harbor, L. I., but came to Richmond before the late war. For many years he had been business manager of the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, and without detraction from the credit due and liberally accorded others, it is probably fair to say that the eminent success of that department of the Church's work is in good measure due to the diligent and wise discharge of his duties. Mr. Sleight was a ruling elder in the First church, Richmond, but of his relations as such we have no knowledge, doubtless here as elsewhere he was faithful and efficient. We do know that pre-eminently he was capable in Sabbath-school work. For twenty-five years he had been Superintendent, says our informant, of the Sabbath-school of his church and was at the time of his death Superintendent of the Sabbath-school work in East Hanover Presbytery.

Bethel:—Eight received into communion on profession on 4th inst., and Christian work greatly promoted in the community.

Hat Creek:—The first Presbyterian preaching here in months was held by Rev. D. P. Rogers on 4th inst. Two persons united with the church on profession—one a lady 91 years old.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Greenville:—The Southern Presbyterian says: The result of the meetings held by Dr. Guerrant in Greenville has been an accession of some fifty to the membership of the Presbyterian church. We have not received definite news, as the brethren of Greenville have their own church paper and prefer to wait a month to let the world know what they are doing.

ALABAMA.

First Church, Birmingham:—This church has called Rev. W. B. Jennings, of Macon, to the pastorate. The Macon flock are opposed to Mr. Jennings leaving them, but he has not yet decided as to his course.

LOUISIANA.

Baton Rouge:—Three members received on profession. Rev. Dr. J. Y. Allison, pastor, assisted by Rev. G. E. Chandler. Dr. C. Alphonso, Smith, Professor in the University of Louisiana, and a son of Rev. Dr. J. Henry Smith, of Greensboro, N. C., was ordained a ruling elder.

TEXAS.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

A Presbyterian League:—An organization has been formed to be known as "The Presbyterian League of Dallas County," (Texas.) It consists of all the ministers, ruling elders, and deacons of our church within the county, and meets for the present on the Monday night after the first Sunday of each month in some one or other of our churches. Its object is to discuss such topics as we wish to have brought prominently before our people. The first topic for discussion is "The Relation of Outside Societies to the Church," with Rev. W. L. Lorance to open the discussion. The next topic, and the only other one selected yet, is, "The Importance of Training Children to attend Church," with Rev. S. B. Campbell, D. D., to open the discussion. We will be guided in selecting matters for discussion by what we feel the need of in our pastoral work. Would it not be well to have such Leagues organized all over our Church?

WEST VIRGINIA.

Martinsburg:—Meetings of some weeks. Six received on profession and six by letter.

Elkins:—Six received on profession on 4th inst., making eighteen since the first of the year. On 11th inst., Dr. J. C. Jones was installed ruling elder. Rev. C. S. Lingamfelter, pastor.

Romney:—Fourteen new members have been added lately.

Pendleton Church, Franklin:—Twenty-one received on profession; church members greatly revived and family worship established The weather was exceedingly inclement and the people had to go through mud and snow to attend service. The services were held by Rev. F. J. Brooke, Synodical Evangelist.

ARKANSAS.

Gurdon and El Dorado:—These churches the charge of Rev. I. P. Osborne have lately received—the first four members on profession, and the other one on profession and one by letter from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

NEW MEXICO.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The First Prssbyterian Church of Eddy:—Was organized by Rev. Robt. H. Nall, D. D., Evangelist and Superintendent of Home Missions of Dallas Presbytery, on Sunday, March 11th, 1894, with twenty-one members; three elders and two deacons. A corner lot was donated for a church-building. Outlook very hopeful.

FOREIGN.

As we have given heretofore the news about the withdrawal of Rev. E. B. McGilvary from connection with the mission work, of the Northern Assembly, in Siam, it is proper that we should append what here appears from the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions under which Mr. McGilvary held his appointment. Our readers will remember that Mr. McGilvary sent in his resignation before referring the matter to his Presbytery. The Board having best of reasons for believing Mr. McG. would not consent to continue longer in the work accepted the resignation. Since then February 19th, ult., the following was received by the Board from Mr. McGilvary:

"I laid a communication before Presbytery stating my views on the question involved in the action of the last General Assembly, and asked its advice as to whether I should maintain my connection as a minister with the Presbytery. The answer of the Presbytery was to lay my communication on the table for a year in view of existing circumstances. Meanwhile I have relieved my conscience, and will most heartily agree to withhold my resignation from the Board."

This letter and the foregoing facts were laid before the Board February 19th, and the following action was suggested: "A letter having been received from Rev. E. B. McGilvary, dated December 20th, 1893, in which he states that he had submitted to the Presbytery of North Laos the question of his withdrawal from the Presbytery, and that the Presbytery had voted to defer the whole matter until its next meeting in December, 1894, in view of which Mr. McGilvary expresses his wish to withhold for the present his resignation as a missionary of the Board; therefore, it is recommended that the Board reconsider its action accepting the resignation of Mr. McGilvary, as taken December 4th, 1893, and agree to his withholding the resignation until the Presbytery reaches its decision."

The whole matter was referred back to the Committee and Council for consideration and further report. They now present the above statement and recommend the adoption of the minutes as presented at the last meeting of the Board. The report of the committee was adopted.

Mr. McGilvary received his education in North Carolina, among his friends and the relatives of his father, the venerable Rev. Dr. Daniel McGilvary, a native of North Carolina, formerly a member of our Synod, but for over thirty years a missionary to Siam. The son is a minister of rare ability and his many friends in our State will rejoice that there is still room for hope that in time difficulties in the way of his continuance in his present field of service will be removed. His course has been marked by that frankness and conscientiousness that inspires respect even with those who differ radically from him in opinion.

DEATH OF REV. THOMAS R. MARKHAM.

[EDITORIAL.]

Dr. Thomas Railey Markham died in New Orleans, near midnight of Monday, 12th inst. He had resisted an attack of the grip for some weeks attending to his pastoral duties the while, but was finally compelled to take his bed. The sickness developed into typhoid fever of which he died.

Dr. Markham was born in Fayette, Miss., December 2d, 1828, and received his earlier education at Oakland College. He pursued his theological studies three years at Princeton and afterward at Columbia Seminary. He also spent some months perfecting himself in some branches at Yale College. He was ordained by the Presbytery of New Orleans May 24th, 1857, and took charge of Fulton Street (afterwards La Fayette) Presbyterian church. Here he faithfully served, with intermission of the years of the war during which he was a chaplain and major-general in Confederate service, until called to his heavenly reward.

During the day of Monday the numerous inquirers at the home of the sufferer attested the solicitude felt by the community at large. At the bedside of the dying servant of Christ along with members of the family, oppressed with the awful solemnity of the occasion, calm, yet not more composed than he, were his brother ministers, Dr. Mallard and Dr. Palmer. The Picayune gives some columns to an account of the life and death of Dr. Markham—death so befitting such a life. We can give but a few short extracts:

"Perhaps no man has numbered among his friends so many different sects, although a strict adherent of the Presbyterian church. In the latter years of his long life his simple dignity and quiet fortitude placed him beyond the pale of one creed, and he became in a measure one of the immortal few of whom all men offer unrestrainedly the tribute of love and admiration. The end of his great usefulness has not come with death. His spirit will continue to live beyond the tomb, inspiring generations yet to come with the memory of a noble and beautiful example.

"The final scenes fittingly transpired after the veil of darkness had fallen upon the city. The night was a lovely one, as calmly peaceful as the soul which has passed beyond its stars. There was nothing terrifying in the soft obscurity of the evening hours; as the dying man looked from his chamber window, he might have perceived, in the shadows, the angels waiting till he joined them.

* * * * * *

"The dying pastor asked that some of the old hymns of the church might be sung. Soon the words of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," filled the room and floated out upon the night air. When the words were sung:

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to Thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll;
While the tempest still is high.
Hide me, O, my Saviour, hide,
Till the storm of life is past,
Safe into the haven guide;
O, receive my soul at last,"

"A smile lighted up his countenance, and he audibly but whisperingly said: "Good night, Good night," the last sensible words he was heard to utter.

"Now and then a slight convulsion, seemingly painless, would pass over him, but his breathing was as peaceful as an infant falling to sleep upon its mother's breast, and thus this great soul passed to the God who had place it in its earthly tabernacle, where it had nobly done the work which fell to its hands—it had left the world better because it had lived."

The Southwestern Presbyterian says that once more after uttering the words "Good night!" "he called for a ministerial brother, and Dr. Palmer repeated to him the words: "For we know that if the earthly house of this our tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens!" Responding to his moving lips, Dr. Palmer bowed his ear and caught one of the last utterances of the dying pastor: "Tell my people not to get a scientific preacher, but one who will preach the simple gospel!" A few minutes to 11 o'clock he exchanged the midnight, irradiated by his Saviour's presence, for the light of eternal day!

DEATH OF REV. DR. FERDINAND JACOBS.

[EDITORIAL.]

From the Southern Presbyterian of 15th we get the following news:

"On last Sunday morning, just as the Sabbath school exercises were closing, Dr. W. P. Jacobs who superintends the school was handed a telegram, announcing the sudden death of his venerable father, Rev. Ferdinand Jacobs, D. D., of Nashville. The news was unexpected as the death of this aged minister was quite sudden, occurring a little after midnight Saturday. At the request of Dr. W. P. Jacobs, Rev. W. S. Bean who was present conducted morning service, and the announcement of the death was received with sorrow by the entire congregation. Many of the children of the Orphanage were in tears, not only from sympathy with their beloved pastor, but from personal affection for the deceased, who spent all of last summer here and was much beloved by the Orphange children. Dr. W. P. Jacobs left for Atlanta Monday morning, and the funeral services will be conducted in Clinton. Dr. Ferdinand Jacobs was in his eighty-sixth year and had been in fairly good health. He was wellknown as a teacher during his long life of usefulness, and we shall publish next week a sketch of his life and labors. He leaves two sons and two grandsons in the ministry."

Dr. Jacobs was born Aug. 10th, 1807. From Hampden Sidney College he went to Union Theological Seminary to prepare for the ministry. Here he spent three years. He was ordained by Lewes Presbytery in 1836. Much of his life was spent in teaching. He was Principal of Washington Academy in '36 and '37—subsequently, with some intermissions of pastoral service, he was a professor in Oglethorpe University, Principal of Charleston Female Seminary, President of Laurensville Female Seminary, Principal of Lacy Cobb Institute and '78-'80 President of Laurens Female Seminary. His pastoral work has been in different Southern States principally in Georgia and South Carolina. Of late years this father in Israel has been incapacitated by age for active work.

Memphis, Tenn., March 17th, 1294.

Mr. Editor:—The Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Smith has missed entirely the point of my article on Beneficiary Education. I stated explicitly that while the whole report on Education adopted by the Synod of South Carolina was well worthy of re-publication, I quoted only so much as was intended to show why the Central Committee of Education did not receive enough money to pay its appropriations. This was the whole story which I undertook to tell. I thought the report presented my point very forcibly. It was not my purpose or my business, nor was it in my power to show what Synod had done outside the Central Committee. Doubtless Synod had done far more for Education outside the committee than it had done for it. And this Synod had a perfect right to do. But surely when a Presbytery recommends its candidates to the Central Committee for aid, its contributions to our treasury ought to bear some reasonable proportion to the amount of aid asked for. Charleston Presbytery asked aid for eleven candidates and paid into treasury $186.

PASTORAL LETTER ON CHURCH AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

To the Ministers and Churches of the Synod of North Carolina:

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Dear Brethren:—In the name and by the authority of the Synod we address you this second pastoral letter "in order to increase interest and effort in Church and Christian Education, both male and female."

The Church of Christ and notably the Presbyterian Church has always cared for the education of her children in colleges and seminaries of learning, and in preparatory and primary schools, either under formal Church control, or, at least, under decidedly Christian auspices and influences. We may assume without argument that this is both right and necessary.

It is not the purpose of the Church to seek official control of all education, but to seek the best results for our Lord whether through Presbyterial, parochial, private, or public schools. None but godly men and women ought to have charge of the young and the Bible ought to be used as a text-book in every school. The concerted action of God's people in each community will accomplish much in making every school a nursery of piety.

The Synod has urged the "ministers under their charge to preach and instruct the people" on this subject: and has exhorted "sessions, officers and private members of the church to provide in every way possible for schools in which the Bible shall be a text-book."

Why may not every session adopt education as a matter of abiding interest? Much may be done. Mission schools may be established in many communities where general education is already well provided for.

In country districts the public schools may be supplemented by efficient private schools of similar grade. Many churches might establish or revive the old fashioned academies or schools preparatory for college as is already done in some places.

It has been demonstrated that the mission school may be established in every mission field with large promise of usefulness. The mission force may be more than doubled in this way, the teachers becoming lay helpers.

Presbyteries can not do better than foster female education as well as male. The daughters will become the mothers and will impress and transmit their own piety and faith to the next generation.

Davidson College, your own school, so long owned and blessed of God is more prosperous and more worthy of your confidence than ever before. Fifty candidates for the ministry are now in training there and there are not more than five or six students who are not professing Christians. The Bible has the place of honor in all her classes and a thorough and comprehensive Biblical training is made a necessary part of liberal education.

One Collection for Church and Christian Education will be taken in the month of April as directed by the Synod.

Brethren ought we not to be much in prayer for God's blessing on the young that they may be trained for Him?

Please read this letter, or cause it to be read, in all the churches.

We pray grace, mercy, and peace on all you His people of this Synod,

Yours in Christ,
J. B. Shearer,
Agent and Chairman.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Second Quarter. Lesson I.

(April I.—Jacob's Prevailing Prayer.)

Gen. xxxii. 9-12, 24-30. Commit vss. 28-30.

Golden Text.—I will not let thee go, except thou bless me. Gen. xxxii. 26.

Topic.—Believing prayer prevails with God.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON.

First Step. Read the account of Jacob's life, service and family in chap. xxix, xxx; of his flight, and treaty with Laban, xxxi. Note the host that met him as an encouraging reminder of Bethel (xxxii. 1, 2); the message to Esau and the discouraging answer (vss. 3-8); his plan to appease Esau by successive presents and messages recognizing Esau's lordship. Try to form a conception of Jacob's state of mind. He has learned much of God, and looks to Him in prayer for help, but is still the wily, astute, self-confident man of affairs, without a full realization of his own weakness, and of his dependence on God. That gives the proper point of view for understanding the lesson.

Second Step. Study the prayer of Jacob in vss. 9-12, as involving (a) Recognition of God as the God of the covenant (vs. 9); appealing to God's promises (vss. 9, 12); confession of unworthiness and acknowledgment of mercies (vs. 10); petition for others as well as himself. Study until you realize the scene at the ford (vss. 24-29). Jacob having disposed all his forces according to his wisdom is about to cross when in the darkness an unknown and unseen power lays hold upon him and holds him back; Jacob meets force with force; his antagonist will put forth no more power than sufficient to meet Jacob's strength, to see if Jacob will yield; but when Jacob's tenacity remains unbroken, he with a touch disables him; Jacob recognizing now the divinity of his antagonist clings to Him—no longer in opposition, but in prayer for blessing. The blessing is given and Jacob's name changed to Israel. Note the significance of the name given the place, the reminder of the struggle in Jacob's lameness, and the memorial of it in the habits of his descendants (vss. 30-32).

Third Step. Take up any difficult points and solve them with your helps.

Vs. 24. There wrestled. It was the man who detained Jacob, and Jacob who resisted during the physical contest. The question of Jacob's absolute submission to God must be settled before he can be permitted to enter the land as its heir.

A man. Evidently a theophany of God, as in chap. xix. He is called in Hos. xii. 4, "the Angel"—i. e., the Angel of the Covenant, the Second Person of the Trinity.

Vs. 25. *When he saw * * * prevailed not, he touched.* There is nothing strange in that God prevailed not at once. It is just what had been going on with Jacob all his life, and with us all our lives, while we are resisting God. At last God puts forth his hand and "touches" us, and brings us to our knees. But we often hear the mark of that touch all our lives. May not an experience like this, rather than his persecutions, be the allusions in Gal. vi. 17?

His thigh. The main reliance of a wrestler. Some one has remarked that He did not touch his arms; he could cling, though he could no longer wrestle.

Vs. 26. "I will not let thee go." This is the kind of resistance God likes. He does not want to go without blessing us, but He wants us to want the blessing, and to detain Him for it. So Jesus (Luke xxiv. 28, 29.)

Vs. 28. No more Jacob. The name was given as a humorous allusion to what seemed an accident of his birth, though perhaps it was regarded as an omen of his character (xxv. 26). It had now become associated with the characteristics of his mature years (xxvii. 36). Now that the nature is changed, the name must be changed.

Israel, A Prince of God, or God's Captain.

Fourth Step. Make your summary of the lesson based upon the outline given under the Second Step, and the fuller understanding given in the Third Step.

[It should be remembered that not only the selection of the passages but the Title and Topic—all above the words "Study of the Lesson"—is the work of the International Committee. These titles and the combination of the two passages would seem to lay the emphasis of this transaction upon Jacob's prayer, and to overlook the significance of the wrestling. The view we have given is that of all the best Biblical scholars. The expression "wrestling in prayer" as based on this lesson is a mistake. "Yielding in Prayer" is the true idea. Jacob did not prevail until he ceased to wrestle and began to cling to God in humble dependence.]

Fifth Step. Study leading topics in the light of God's word.

1. Ways of resisting God.
   - Disobeying His commands. Rom. x. 21; Jer. vi. 16; Jonah i. 1-3.
   - Not heeding His providences. Ps xcv. 8,9.
   - Opposing His cause. Acts v. 39; xxvi. 9, 14.
   - Resisting the Spirit. Eph. iv. 30; Heb. x. 29.
2. God striving with man.
   - By His messages of grace. Is. i. 18; Jer. xxv. 4; Rom. x. 21, Matt. xxiii. 37.
   - By His providential dealings. Lam. iii. 7; Hos. ii. 6; Jon. i. 4.
   - By His Spirit. Gen. vi. 3; Gal. v, 16, 17.
3. The necessity of self-surrender.
   - In the heirs of promise. Gen. xii. 1, xxii. 7-12.
   - In general. James iv. 6, 7; Ps. li. 17; Rom. xii. 1.
   - For prevailing in prayer. Matt. vi. 10; xxvi. 39, 42; 1 Jno. v. 14.
   - For receiving power. 2 Cor. xii. 7-10.

Sixth Step. Have we surrendered to God? Are we able to sing:

"Oh, to be nothing nothing,
Only to lie at His feet
A broken and empty vessel
For the Master's use made meet."

How many of us get to Bethel—"the House of God"—where we hear His promises, who never come to Peniel where we see "God's face" and submit ourselves to Him in loving, trusting service. 2 Cor. iii. 18.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Bring out strongly Jacob's long life of resistance to God and reliance on human, questionable, and sometimes wicked methods, and the necessity for finally convincing him that he was helpless in himself, and that all his strength was in God.

Prize Questions.

Last week several sent as their answer to No. 33, the Hymn, "What various hindrances we meet." The hymn contains one allusion to the incident at Bethel, "Prayer climbs the ladder Jacob saw," but that is not enough to enable us to say that the hymn was founded upon it. The general idea of the hymn is on entirely different lines. "Come thou Fount" has an allusion to a memorial stone, but it is to one that Samuel raised.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF MAR. 8.

34. The Nazarites. Num. vi. 2, 3.
35. The Rechabites. Jer. xxxv. 14.

Correct answers were received as follows, including some for March 1st. NEW QUESTIONS.

40. Find a scene in the life of Christ when He prevailed by yielding His will to God's.
41. Find in the Epistle to the Hebrews a reference to that scene parallel to the reference in Hosea to the scene of this lesson.
42. What N. T. saint, like Jacob, had a physical weakness to remind him to rely on Christ's strength?

Teachers' Exchange.

WHEN TO STUDY.

As to time I would suggest that the morning hour is the best. Says Gulburn; "Nor can the importance of the morning hour be overrated. That the morning hour, immediately after rising, should be scrupulously consecrated to God, that the earliest thoughts of the day should be filled with God, that the homage of self-dedication should be renewed before starting on another pilgrimage, that we should listen to his small voice of warning and encouragement, as it issues from the pages of his written Word,—all this is so essentially bound up with peace and holiness of the day, that one might say the two are inseparable. The tone and sentiment and feeling throughout the day is sure to take its coloring from the morning hour."

We may as well settle it in our minds that time is indispensable for systematic home study of the Bible. The best time is the morning; we must take the morning for it. But here is the rub. "We are too busy and hurried in the morning in our home. We cannot give the time for family Bible study'. How was it with Joshua, the commanding general of Israel's army, the quartermaster-general, the judge, and everything? He meditated on the law of the Lord day and night. Remember Chinese Gordon and his white handkerchief in the Soudan. Remember that there are tens of thousands of the busiest men living, who now succeed in obtaining morning time for Bible study at home. How sinful and foolish to neglect Bible study at home for the excuse of the lack of time, when you constantly make time for other and inferior engagements?

A certain fixed hour should also be rescued from Sabbath for home Bible study—Selected.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Mar. 14, 1894.

Bishop Hurst gave some interesting facts concerning the great American University, to be located here, in his closing address to the Washington Conference. He mentioned that a New York lady had lately contributed $100,000 and afterwards added a donation of $750, and that $61,720, had been contributed by preachers alone of the $100,000 it is proposed to spend on Asbury Hall, one of the University buildings. The conference on the spot added $1,146 to this fund and took steps that will result in adding thereto. The Bishop said that the corner-stone of the University would be laid this year and that he had the promise of a Presbyterian to subscribe $25,000 as soon as that cermony was performed. While the University will be under the control of the Methodist church it is not propos d to make it distinctly a denominational institution. Several other denominations will be represented upon the Board which will have direct control of the University.

The committee which had charge of the Moody and Sankey meetings has made public the results of its work. The cost of the four week's meetings was in round figures $4,000. Messrs. Moody and Sankey charged nothing for their services, but it is expected that a purse will be raised and presented to them, or to Mr. Moody's training school at Northfield, should they decline to accept it. According to the cards in the hands of the Secretary of the committee there were 4,000 converts, and considerably more than half of them were men. Upon each one of these cards is the name of the denomination which the writer prefers, where there was a preference. These cards will be turned over to the ministers of the churches nearest the residences of the signers, and it is expected that the most of the signers will soon be formally enrolled as members of our churches. Another result of these meetings, by no means to be overlooked, is the largely increased attendance at our churches, larger now than ever before. Many of the converts were hard drinkers, one of them having been a drummer for a large whiskey house; who after hearing one of Mr. Moody's temperance sermons forwarded his resignation and determined never to have anything to do with the accursed stuff again, either as a seller or as a drinker.

A very important statement concerning the reciprocity clause of the new tariff bill was this week made by Senators Voorhees and Vest. According to these gentlemen the popular impression that the repeal of the reciprocity clause of the McKinley law, as proposed in the new tariff bill, will abrogate the reciprocity agreements now in force is erroneous. They say that the repeal will not interfere with agreements now existing, but will prevent the making of any new agreements, or treaties, of a similar nature. Speaking of treaties, it is not believed that the proposed amendment to the tariff bill, which was inserted by the Finance Committee at the request of the sugar interest, abrogating the commercial treaty between the United States and Hawaii, can get a majority in the Senate.

The Senate has devoted this week to a discussion of the Bland bill for the coinage of the seigniorage, which will be voted upon tomorrow. Its passage is regarded as assured. The House is devoting its time to the regular appropriation bills. No agreement has yet been reached by the Senate Finance Committee as to when the tariff bill shall be reported to the Senate, but the indications point to one in a few days.

In Hospital in Wilmington, N. C., on the 5th of March, MARY GEORGE, daughter of Mr. R. B., and Mrs. Hattie Cromartie, of Bladen county, aged 22 months. It is well with the child. "The Master plucked this flower" from our garden to plant it in His own.

On Jan. 7th, 1894, in Carthage, N. C., at the residence of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Bettie Stuart, Miss POLLY STUART, in the seventy-second year of her age. She was born in Robeson county, N. C., near Lumber Bridge, Dec. 31st, 1822. She united with Antioch church October 26th, 1848.

She had made her home in Carthage for the last twenty-three years with her brother, the late William J. Stuart, and since his death with his widow. Up to the time of her death she was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church in Carthage. Hers was a sweet, gentle and refined nature with a Christlike character. She completed her seventy-first year on the last day of 1893 and on the first Sabbath of the new year she received her summons to come up higher. Her church-membership was then transferred from the church militant to the Church triumphant, where she is now numbered among the general assembly and Church of the first-born and the spirits of just men made perfect,

And Sabbaths have no end."

In Greensboro, N. C., on March 13th, 1894, Miss JANE STOVALL She was born in Orange county, N. C., June 2d, 1830. Most of her life was spent in her native county. Many years ago, she made a profession of faith in Christ, and united with the Presbyterian church. The summons came suddenly: "The Master is come, and calleth for thee."

Mrs. ELIZABETH ALLEN fell asleep in Jesus on Jan. 24th, 1894, aged 71 years. For sometime she had been in feeble health when she was attacked with grippe and after two weeks suffering died as she had lived in the faith. For many years she had been a consistent member of the Mills River Presbyterian church She leaves two daughters and many friends to mourn their loss. P.

FOR THE FAMILY.

CHRIST OUR SUBSTITUTE.

Jesus, in Thee our eyes behold
A thousand glories more
Than the rich gems and polished gold
The sons of Aaron wore.

They first their own sin-offering brought,
To purge themselves from sin;
Thy life was pure without a spot,
And all Thy nature clean.

Fresh blood, as constant as the day,
Was on their altars spilt;
But Thy one offering took away
Forever all our guilt.

Their priesthood ran through several hands,
For mortal was their race;
Thy never-changing office stands
Eternal as Thy days.

Their range was earth, nor higher soared
The heaven of heavens is Thine:
Thy Majesty and Priesthood, Lord,
Through endless ages shine.

Immortal glories crown Thy name,
Thou blessed Priest and King;
May heaven and earth resound Thy fame,
Each day fresh praises bring.

Items for Lady Readers.

In 1423 was born the great English painter, Sir Joshua Reynolds. His father was a minister and he was so poor and had such a big family that he was obliged to teach school also, in order to support his eleven children. Joshua was the seventh child. He was not like other boys, fond of playing and fun, but was very quiet and thought more about drawing pictures than anything else. His sisters were also fond of drawing, but they were so poor they couldn't afford to buy pencils and paper, so they used to draw pictures on the whitewashed walls of the long hall with burnt sticks. Joshua's pictures were the worst of all, and the girls would make fun of him and call him the clown.

One day Joshua drew the picture of a wall with a window in it, on the back of his Latin exercise. His father was so provoked at him for wasting his time," as he called it, that he wrote underneath it: "This is drawn by Joshua in school out of pure idleness." But the old gentleman soon changed his mind, when he saw the drawings Joshua could make when he was a few years older, and so he allowed him to study painting instead of becoming a doctor, as he first intended him to be.

Joshua painted his first oil painting when he was only twelve years old, and this is how he did it: While he was in church one Sunday he made a sketch of the minister on his thumb nail, and he enlarged this sketch in a boathouse, using a piece of old sail for his canvas. Is it any wonder he succeeded as artist when he had so much perseverance and patience? Joshua studied under a portrait painter in London for a couple of years, and then returned to his home in Devonshire, where he soon painted thirty portraits of people in the neighborhood, who paid him $15 a piece for them.

Joshua was crazy to go to Rome, but he was too poor to afford the trip. One day he had the good fortune to meet a sea captain, who took a great fancy to the young painter and offered him a free passage on his vessel to Rome. Of course Joshua accepted the invitation gladly. He remained in Rome for two years. While there he caught a severe cold that him so deaf he was obliged to use an ear made trumpet for the rest of his life. He got so homesick that he finally left Italy and returned to London. Reynolds was probably never surpassed as a portrait painter. During his second year in London he painted 122 portraits of the most prominent people. His income from his work was $30,000 a year.

When the Royal Academy of Art was founded in 1768, Reynolds was chosen its first president and was immediately knighted by the king, and so he was known afterwards as Sir Joshua Reynolds. Later on, he was elected mayor of his native town, Plympton.

Reynolds was always at work from morning until night. When he was 66 years old he lost the sight of his left eye through overwork, and two years later became almost totally blind. He died in 1792, and had a very large funeral, ninety-one carriages following the body to the grave. He died a very rich man. During his life he painted fully 3,000 pictures.

Things Useful.

Celery Toast.—Cut a few stalks of celery into pieces an inch or two in length and cook in boiling water, slightly salted, until tender. Add a little milk and sufficient flour to thicken the liquor to the consistency of cream. Season with butter and salt and pour over thin slices of toasted bread; serve hot. Asparagus may also be cooked and served in the same way. Cooked celery is believed by many to be of great benefit in rheumatism.

To Cure Earache.—Put a live coal from the fire in a cup and pour a teaspoonful of granulated sugar over it. Be careful not to let it blaze, and at once insert a small funnel over it, holding the tip of the funnel in the ear. The smoke gives instant relief.

How to Treat Tired Eyes.—Eyes that are tired from loss of sleep, overuse or traveling can be refreshed by being covered half an hour with a linen cloth lifted out of water as hot as can be borne and laid dripping over the lids.

Eggs A La Lavelette.—Pour into a flat tin dish cream to the depth of a quarter of an inch, bring it to the boil quickly; then drop in sufficient eggs, and cook them till the whites are hard; season to taste, and serve in some flat dish. About one-quarter of a pint of cream to six eggs would be required.

Metropolitan Cake.—Two cups of sugar, one of butter, one of milk, nearly four cups of flour, the whites of eight eggs, three teaspoons of baking powder, lemon flavoring to taste, a tablespoon of ground allspice, one and a half tablespoons of cinnamon, a teaspoon of cloves, a quarter of a pound each of sliced citron and chopped raisins. Mix the sugar, butter, milk, flour, baking powder, eggs and lemon flavoring. Take nearly three-fourths of this mixture and bake in jelly tins. To the rest add the remainder of the ingredients, stir well and bake in jelly tins. Put together with frosting, alternating light and dark.

THE SUGAR PALM.

A South American Tree Which Produces Lots of Sap.

The sugar maple of New England has a rival.

It grows in the Andes of Chili at a height of from 3,000 to 4,500 feet above the sea. It is a curious variety of that most useful, wonderful tree, the palm, whose varieties also give us dates, and coco, and cocoanuts, and fans.

This palm is not slim and graceful like most kinds we see in tropical pictures. It is about fifty feet tall, with a very thick trunk, enlarging in diameter from the ground up to about half its height, and then tapering again to the top, where its long leaves spread out.

These sugar palms produce great quantities of sweet sap, which, when boiled down, makes both molasses and sugar of a peculiar but delicious flavor.

On one estate the trees grew in such numbers that once it was determined to count them, but after counting several hundred thousand, and more than half remaining uncounted, the task was given up.

THE SUGAR PALM.

What "larks" it must be for children when "sapping" time and "sugaring off" come round! But the Chilians do not collect the sap in the way the New England farmers collect sap from the maple tree. No; instead of boring small holes in the trunk the palm is cut down and beheaded of its crown of beautiful leaves, and then the sap begins to flow from the upper end and keeps on flowing for months. Every morning a thin slice is cut off to prevent the wood from hardening and forming a crust through which the sap could not flow.

A good tree will yield nearly 100 gallons of sap. A very queer thing is the fact that the sap will not run if the tree lies with its head downwards. It will only run upwards!—St. Louis Republic.

index, numerous illustrations and maps, and Dictionary compiled from Dr. Smith's standard work.

"The BEST condensed Commentary on the whole Bible. It is the cream of the Commentaries carefully collected by three eminent scholars. Its critical introduction to each book of Scripture, its eminently practical notes, its numerous pictorial illustrations, commend it strongly to the Sunday-school worker and to the clergyman. Then it is such a marvel of cheapness." Rt. Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D.

THE CHRISTIAN'S

SECRET OF A HAPPY LIFE.

This Work, the demand for which has been so great as to wear out two sets of plates, has now been put in entirely new form. The book having become an accepted classic in devotional literature, it was thought wise to issue this new edition in a compact form, and in a variety of bindings. Occasion has also been taken by the author to thoroughly revise the whole work besides adding considerable new matter.

Few Books of a Religious Character have been accorded such Hearty and Universal Endorsement from all Denominations.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain rom saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transform ed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light." New York Evangelist.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THE BEST I CAN.

"I cannot do much," said a little star,
"To make the dark world bright;
My silvery beams cannot struggle far
Through the folding gloom of night:
But, because I am part of God's great plan,
I'll cheerfully do the best I can!"

"What can be the use," said the fleecy cloud,
"Of these few drops I hold?
They will hardly bend the lily proud,
Though caught in her cup of gold:
Yet I am a part of God's great plan,
So my treasures I'll give as well as I can!"

A child went merrily forth to play,
But a thought, like a silver thread,
Kept winding in an out all day,
Through the happy, golden head:
Mother said, "Darling, do all you can,
For you are a part of God's great plan!"

She knew no more than a glancing star,
Nor the cloud with its chalice full,
How, why, and for what all strange things are;
She was only a child at school:
But she thought, "It is part of God's great plan,
That even I should do all I can."

So she helped a younger child along
When the road was rough to her feet,
And she sang from her heart a little song
That we all thought passing sweet:
And her father, a weary, toil worn man,
Said, "I too, will do the best I can!"

Our best? Ah, children, the best of us
Must hide our face away,
When the Lord of the vineyard comes to look
At our task at the close of day:
But for strength from above, 'tis the Master's plan,
We'll pray, and we'll do the best that we can!

A Small Affair.

Nellie Davis stood by the window gazing disconsolately at the gray, cold-looking clouds; and even the promise of snow, and possible sleighing and skating which seemed hidden back of them, did not lessen the dissatisfied expression, or cause her to answer less impatiently the teasing voice of her brother, who had just entered the room.

"What's the matter, Sis? You look as glum as an owl," he exclaimed.

"O Paul! do be quiet and not bang the doors so, and your whistling makes my head ache."

"Don't bother her, Paul," said Mrs. Davis. "Nellie is quite disappointed; she wants to invite Mary West and her three cousins from the city over here Thanksgiving evening, and because I tell her we cannot afford French candies and other expensive things; she has given up the idea."

"Fiddlesticks!" exclaimed Paul. "Ned West is a capital fellow, if his father is so rich, and his sisters must be nice if they are anything like him. I think they would like to come, even if we didn't have anything more than apples and walnuts; and here is fifty cents, Nellie, I earned yesterday, I'll give you for an extra dish. Do ask them."

"O Paul!" and Nellie smiled in spite of her decision to look and feel miserably. "What can I get with fifty cents in the way of nice candies? You are real good though. But you keep the money; I don't want to invite them unless we can have something nice."

"Now, children, just listen to me," said Mrs. Davis, "Mary West and her cousins know we are far from rich, and I think they are all sensible young people enough to enjoy themselves without any extra-nice things. As you say, Nellie, they have and see plenty of such things at home. I suggest that you take Paul's fifty cents, buy two quarts of molasses and some peanuts, and make your own candy."

"That's just splendid, mother," cried Paul.

Nellie's face brightened, though she wasn't sure it would be at all nice, "it seemed so very common" she added.

"Don't be a goose, Nel," broke in Paul's voice. "I say, let's have the molasses and do as mother suggests."

The young people were invited, Nellie saying they were going to make candy and have a good time.

Paul invested his fifty cents under his mother's directions, bringing promptly his friends, among whom were the Wests and a few other schoolmates. They were at once set to work popping corn, cracking nuts, picking out the walnut meat as carefully as they could to preserve as many as possible in an unbroken state.

When the molasses was ready it was poured on large platters and shallow tins, well buttered beforehand, and the whole walnut meats placed on the sheets in such a manner that when cool enough it could be marked out in cunning little squares, just about right for a mouthfull.

The peanuts, freed from their shells and brown skins, were stirred into a portion of the molasses, and that poured in quite thin sheets, ready to be cracked into small bits when cool.

This answered for candy; and apples, pop-corn, and some good cake made out the refreshments.

Games and music followed, and one of the West girls recited one or two selections.

When good-night was said, Ned West, in his frank, boyish way, declared he had not had so good a time in a year, and the rest of the young people agreed with him.

"Well, Nellie," said Mrs. Davis after they had all gone, "are you sorry you invited them, and haven't you had a good time, even if you didn't have ice-cream and French candies?"

"Yes, indeed, I am glad, for I had a splendid time, and the others seemed to, but who would have thought that fifty cents, with some cake and just the things we had, would do so much?" answered Nellie.

"Your city acquaintances are true ladies, and their brother a gentleman, for we gave them the best we could, with a sincere welcome, and they appreciated it. True hospitality, and a good time, as you phrase it, doesn't depend on the amount of French bonbons and costly things, but in our giving our friends the best we can afford, and making them feel that we are truly glad to see them."

What One Girl Did.

Some girls exert an uplifting influence upon all who them. Peace and purity, charity and cheerfulness, seem to abide with them, like angels protecting them from harm, causing their companions to love them, and to love their virtues for their sake. Where they go quarrels cease. Where they are no one would dare to be rude. Their parents find comfort in them, Brothers are fond of them. Sisters cling to them. Friends admire them. Gracious influence radiates from them, and blesses all whom it touches.

Once it happened that a young man, who was "sowing his wild oats," became acquainted with one of those young girls to whom innocence is as vital as pure air. The magnetism of her goodness made him a changed man. He forsook his evil companions, and, when chaffed about the influence of Miss M——, he said:

"When I am with her, I want to be good, and I hate myself for being bad. I dare not call on her after visiting my old haunts. I had to choose between them, and she drew me upward more strongly than they were pulling me down."

Another one was at a party. Wine was served with refreshments. She refused repeated invitations to take a glass of it. A young man told another, as the two were talking of the entertainment the next day:

"I came very near breaking my pledge. The smell of the wine was so tempting it sent a cold shiver down me. But just as I was going to yield I heard Miss Blank refuse wine. That gave me courage to hold out. I watched her all the evening, and I made a bargain with myself. I said, 'If she drinks, I will.' I was hoping and fearing that she would, but as often as she was asked she declined; and every time, she answered with more vim, I thought, and she saved the day. If it hadn't been for her I wouldn't have pulled through; and to-day I'd have had a swelled head and a big load of remorse, for I'd have gone on a drunk."—Christian Guardian.

Stone by Stone.

Tom and Robert were walking through the woods. They came to a stream of water; both stopped, deliberating what was best to be done.

"I am going to leap it," said Tom.

"I am going to work my way over, stone by stone," said the more prudent Robert.

Tom leaped, and, missing his footing fell into the middle of the stream, whilst Robert, working his way carefully from one stone to another, landed safe and dry on the other side.

Boys, learn the lesson while yet young; the shortest way often appears the longest. Do not try to leap across the stream of difficulties that separates you from the shores of success. Perseverance, diligence, and determination are all stones cast across the stream of life. A leap will bring you down among them, wounded and bruised. But, conquer them, stone by stone, and ultimately you will reach the other shore—the coveted land of success. Remember, do not leap; work your way across the stream, stone by stone.

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A heavy hailstorm fell at Moncure on Monday last.

Rains have fallen in the middle section of the State greatly to the benefit of vegetable crops.

Greensboro Patriot: The granite quarries at Mount Airy are now engaged in filling heavy orders from Cincinnati, and 200 men are employed. This number is to be increased to 300. The orders will keep all busy for twelve months at least.

Goldsboro Argus: There was a heavy frost in these parts yesterday morning when the early risers issued from their domicils, and it is probable, in consequence, that the predictions prevalent yesterday are true—that the peach crop is killed.

Rockingham Rocket: In conversation with a prominent farmer of this county the other day he remarked that the prospect for a large small-grain crop was better than he had ever known before, and that more acres were given to these crops and less would be given to the cotton crop than had been given since the war.

Fayetteville Observer: Mr. James Pate, in shooting at a wild turkey last Friday near his house at Gray's Creek, riddled his little daughter's head with shot. The child, who is about seven years old, was sitting in the window of the house when the turkey flew between it and Mr Pate who fired. He was so excited that he did not see his child until after the shot was fired. Dr. Marsh was immediately summoned and found that, besides the child's head being filled with shot, several had entered the brain; notwithstanding all this, however, the little child is reported as doing well.

DOMESTIC.

The Union depot at Denver was totally destroyed by fire last Sunday. Loss $300,000.

A cyclone swept over Longview, Texas, on Sunday morning before day. It struck a grove near that place, tore up trees, demolished houses and killed ten or twelve persons.

Isaac Prouty & Co., of Spencer, Mass., largest shoe manufacturers in the world, have assigned. Liabilities about $1,000,000.

The expenditures of the United States Government for the eight and a half months of the present fiscal year, have exceeded the receipts $52,000,000.

By a decision of the Court of Appeals of Virginia the State is not bound to receive coupons in payment of State taxes.

FOREIGN.

A petroleum tank steamer arrived in Shanghai a day or two ago, but the Custom-House authorities refused to allow the petroleum to be landed in bulk. The British, Russian and German consuls stand together in insisting it shall be landed and trouble is expected.

Phrayot, the Siamese mandarin, charged with the murder of the French inspector, Grosgurin, and his Annantise escort, has been acquitted on all the charges made against him. The decision is likely to lead to complications, as the murder of Inspector Grosgurin was one of the incidents which led to the Franco-Siamese war. France refuses to evacuate Chantaboone until the culprits are brought to justice.

It is said the Portuguese commander upon whose vessel Admiral De Gama found refuge will not deliver him on the demand of the Brazilian government.

President Peixoto of Brazil, in a letter to the New York Herald announces to the American public with congratulations the close of the civil war.

Lord Posebery delivered an address in Edinburgh in which he asserted views regarding the House of Lords and Home Rule, contradictory to those he uttered in Parliament.

A demonstration of trades unions was held in London last Sunday to demand the abolition of the House of Lords.

The railroad from Tren-Tsin to Shanghai Kwan, China, is a settled fact. News to the Picayune says: The new route is being patronized by immense numbers of passengers, and carries large quantities of heavy goods which formerly had to be conveyed with immense labor in springless carts and on pack animals. Steps are well advanced for an immediate extension eastward from the foot of the Great Wall to the Tailin river.

SAY SOES.

The Princess of Wales, who is extremely fond of her garden at Sandringham, in everything connected with which she takes the greatest interest, has ordered a number of apple trees from Denmark for the purpose of having them tried in England. The name of the sort in question is the "Traasteen," and is considered the finest apple in the world.

It is by all odds the best liniment. Mr. Chas. Metzger, 217 Geyer Ave., St. Louis, Mo., is of the same opinion. He says: Salvation Oil is the best remedy on earth."

It is certainly detrimental to sleep with the head and face covered with blankets, because by so doing you re-breathe the vitiated air expelled from the lungs, and poison the blood with carbonic acid gas. If sleep is to be refreshing and we are to live healthy lives the bedroom must be well ventilated, and the air constantly renewed.

Two or three tablespoonfuls of black coffee every two hours, alternated with one or two teaspoonfuls of Burgundy, is said to be a sure cure for typhoid fever. The coffee is said to rouse the patient from the stupor which accompanies the attack, and to stimulate all the functions.

Prof. Sargent states that the nutmeg hickory of Arkansas is the strongest of American woods, whilst the West Indian birch is the weakest. The most elastic is the tamarack, the white or shell-bark hickory standing far below it. The least elastic and the wood with the lowest specific gravity is that of the Ficus aurea. The heaviest wood, and the most valuable for fuel, is the bluewood of Texas.

PEACE OF CONSCIENCE.

"Conscience does make cowards of us all." We do not need to be told this for we know it of experience. Because all have sinned and come short of the glory of GOD; because there is no man that liveth and sinneth not, and because these sins are remembered we are made afraid. Sometimes the sins of our past lives come very suddenly before us. It may be we have long forgotten them and had thought their memory had perished. But we were mistaken. The visit to some long left place, the sight of some long lost face, the reading of some line in a book or paper or some more trivial circumstance has recalled the deed. We may refuse to think about it, or we may face it to force it out of being, or we may stop to think about it. In any way we may deal with it, the deed is there and the reminder of it makes us unhappy. We wish to know if there is any way to treat this so that we may remember it and yet have peace of conscience. Our catechism says there is, and that this peace of conscience is one of the benefits that either accompanies or flows from justification, adoption and sanctification.

In considering this we dare not trifle with it, for it is a serious and solemn matter. We recognize this truth that every sin is a fact. Murder, theft or a lie is a fact. So is hatred or heart-murder and every sinful thought. Each one has cut a gash in the moral universe. The wound may close and heal, but the scar remains. The LORD of the conscience cannot forget the fact. As the ALL-SEEING EYE of the universe He saw it. It may have been done in secret so that no man could know it, but He knows and cannot forget it. The person who did the deed cannot forget it. It may sometimes seem so, but it is not so that we can forget. This is acknowledged, together with the awful certainty that the fact may be recalled at any time before our consciousness.

We are now asking how is it possible and what is necessary that I may recollect any sinful deed without distress. The answer must not provide mere partial or temporary relief. It must give permanent relief. It is not enough therefore to say that the thing we call sin is some light thing or that the recollection of it is a mere hallucination or nightmare, some horrid dream. No, kind reader. at least the writer, whatever others may do, realizes that sin is a real hateful fact before GOD and the sense of guilt is a real soul sorrow or burden. It cannot be relieved by travel or diversion or treatment as if it were a form of bodily disease. It will not give way to mere resolution that we will not think of it nor suffer it to trouble us. It is not fair, honest nor sufficient to take refuge in any form of religious belief or system of so-called Christian faith or ethics that denies the reality of sin. It cannot be dealt with after this manner. The soul has seen the spiritual meanings of the law, it has found in the moral law not merely so many things required or forbidden, but the terms and conditions from GOD for those who would enter into covenant with Him. His soul has been brought into contrast with the holiness of the LORD, and in this light has seen the fact which we call a sin, and found it real and awful. This soul refuses any temporizing.

If this soul would have peace of conscience there are some things that must be. There must be a full and sorrowful confession of the sin to the person against whom it was committed. As every sin is primarily and essentially against GOD it must be confessed to Him. We do not stop to illustrate this nor to show that the confession must be genuine and honest and with purpose and desire to be relieved of its guilt never to commit the sin or any sin in the future; though all that is true. But as a child wishing to be restored to parental favor must confess the sin that forfeited the favour, so must we our sin to GOD. Not to any priest or intermediary but to GOD alone the sin must be confessed as against Him. Then it must be confessed to our fellowman and all reparation and restitution made so far as in our power; so far as the sin is against that fellowman. We can never settle the matter nor secure peace of conscience unless we do at least that much. After that must come to us the assurance that we are forgiven. We cannot be as if we had never sinned, but if moved to this, as alone we can be, by the love of GOD in CHRIST, when thus assured, we may have a new sense of happiness, our soul may be as the storm swept earth in the shining of the sun after rain. Its leaves will be brighter and plants and flowers and fruits will spring and bloom and ripen more surely. What a bliss is that!

But it cannot be received in full measure where any doubt can rest on our title of assurance. This peace cannot be if offered on any conditions that would dim the holiness, sully the honour or break the law of GOD. He must be just and as such the justifier of the ungodly. There must be no mere bribery or broken law unsatisfied. The government of GOD must be administered with absolute truth and justice. The great fatherhood of GOD must not be disgraced. The family must not be outraged. There must be some assurance that as transgressors we shall not continue in sin.

All this is possible only through the redemption which is in CHRIST JESUS; as He has kept the law with perfect obedience and suffered the penalty, making atonement for us. This is our warrant that we shall be accepted, and accepted we shall be cleansed and saved from future sinning. No man shall enter Heaven over prostrate law or humbled justice or outraged government. It is a blessed fact of the blissful experience of every one who has with confession come to GOD relying on this merit of CHRIST and His atonement and intercession that his sins are forgiven. But every sin must be so confessed whenever remembered. It will require only once such a confession and ever afterwards it may be remembered without pain. From every such confession as we arise to duty we may hear the MASTER say; Go, in peace.

NEW YORK PRESBYTERY ALREADY has had a taste of what is in store for it in the future. A number of young men from Union Seminary made application to the Presbytery for license. It is needless to say something like a storm arose. Dr. JOHN HALL prevailed in having the students admitted as they had entered upon their studies before the relations between the Assembly and the seminary were severed. If the students otherwise were properly qualified this was the only fair course to take. But it looks wondrously like temporizing. It settles nothing for the future, but it does make it easier to overlook irregularities in the days to come.

HERE AND THERE.

"WHAT YOU THINK, THAT YOU ARE." The real man is within you not without. Words, looks, actions, you can mould and fashion so as to appear as you wish to your fellow-men; but you cannot hide your real self from the eye of Him who searcheth the heart and requireth truth in the inward parts. The character for eternity is formed by the thoughts nourished in time."—Earnest Thoughts for Every Day.

THERE IS SUCH A THING AS OVERDOING in economizing; certainly there is such a thing as economizing in the wrong place, or in the wrong way. The Independent says very sensibly:

"These are hard times. It must be so, for everybody says so. Naturally prudent people practice economy: That is praiseworthy, provided it is done wisely. The mere luxuries should be the first to be cut off; but be careful that you do not class necessaries among luxuries. The education of your children you cannot afford to abridge; the support of your church and its various lines of work you must not lessen; and your religious newspaper, the cheapest and one of the most useful and valuable things you get, it would be sheer folly to sacrifice. It is worth to you many times the sum you pay for it. It will reimburse you in manifold forms, again and again, in recreation, instruction, suggestion, encouragement, improvement. It is a silent, but constant and powerful influence for good. You need the food it provides for mind and soul as much as you need meat and bread and drink for your physical welfare."

WHY NOT SO TRAIN YOUR CHILD AS to make him a total abstainer from intoxicating liquors from the very first dawn of intelligence? Teach him to regard spirituous liquor as a thing to be shunned as one would deadly poison. Thus trained he can never become a drunkard. Thus trained he may save you and others a life of misery to which nothing else is to be compared. Thus trained he will, in all likelihood, prove a useful and prosperous member of society and live such a life here as will secure his eternal wellbeing. Neglect this training and how can you divest yourself of the fear that ruin temporal and eternal may overtake him. If every boy could be trained from infancy to total abstinence, in less than two generations there would be no necessity for laws regulating liquor-selling, for there would be next to nothing of liquor-drinking. Begin early and save your boy.

EVERY MAN HAS HIS FAULTS, HIS failings, his peculiarities. Every one of us finds himself crossed by such failings of others from hour to hour; and if he were to resent them all, or even notice all, life would become intolerable. If for every outburst of hasty temper, and every rudeness that wounds us in our daily path, we were to demand an apology, require an explanation, or resent it by retaliation daily intercourse would be impossible. The very science of social life consists in that gliding tact which avoids contact with the sharp angularities of character, which does not argue about such things, which does not seek to adjust or cure them all, but covers them as if it did not see. So a Christian spirit throws a cloak of love over these things. It knows when it is wise not to see. That microscopic distinctness in which all faults appear to captious men—who are forever blaming, dissenting, complaining—disappears in the large, calm gaze of love—Earnest Thoughts for Every Day.

OUR BROTHER, GRAHAM, THE SYNOD'S Agent of Foreign Missions, sends us the statement concerning the "MOORE FUND" which appears on our fourth page. It was written the first time he was at his study table for four weeks. During that time, we regret to hear, he had an attack of serious illness. We have good reason to hope he is now rapidly recovering. We learn from a private letter that notices in the secular papers of the starting of Mr. MOORE for the foreign field have caused some to withhold amounts raised for his support. We earnestly urge, at Mr. GRAHAM'S request, that churches or individuals send in at once the balance of $41.74 needed to send forward Mr. MOORE and his sister.

UNION SEMINARY, NEW YORK, promises to be a thorn in the side of the Northern Church for years upon years to come. What shall be done with those candidates for the ministry who are imbibing the doctrines of Doctor BRIGGS? Will the Presbyteries exercise that care in examinations of candidates which will prevent the doctrines becoming diffused throughout the Church? With the leniency for which Presbyteries are remarkable this becomes a serious question. With all the care possible can Presbyteries totally exclude objectionable persons, or suppress their influence over congregations?

WE HEAR LITTLE OF GENERAL BOOTH and the Salvation Army schemes of colonization. The latest seems to be that a syndicate of capitalists has purchased some 200,000 acres of land in Southern Mexico, on the Pacific coast, and proposes to settle 5,000 families most English upon it. The land is said to be excellently adapted to agriculture.

WE CLIP THIS ITEM:

The annual report of the trustees of the Stephen Girard estate, which is under the control of the city of Philadelphia, shows the net annual income of the city property and coal mines to be about $925,000. Only about half of this is needed in maintaining Girard College, and so the fortune goes on growing. Last year the trustees planted on the estate at Girardville 20,000 trees. In 12 years 150,000 trees have been planted there, making a large forest. It is proposed to plant 20,000 more this season.

THERE IS ONE OF THE EDITORS OF THE Presbyterian [of Philadelphia], that paper tells us, who feels a close personal interest in the good work accomplished by the First Presbyterian church, of Wilmington, and rejoices therein. This is said in copying the item concerning the dedication of Abbie Chadbourn Memorial room and Anniversary Hall. The editor, is of course Rev. Dr. MATTHEW B. GRIER, who about forty years ago was the pastor of this church. As he looks with joy upon what the younger ones are doing to perfect the work he may almost be said to have begun, the few now living who entered the church under his pastorate, who were united in marriage by him, who received his faithful ministrations in seasons of sorrow as well as joy, look back upon those times with feelings of affectionate regard for him which grow only more tender and more strong with age.

Resolutions Adopted by the Synod of North Carolina.

The Synod of North Carolina, gratefully sensible of its obligations to the North Carolina Presbyterian for publishing and disseminating not only the views of its churches, but the actions of all its Presbyteries and agencies, adopt the following resolutions:

1*st. The North Carolina Presbyterian is an indispensable agency for promoting and maintaining every enterprise in which the Synod is engaged.*

2*d. That the success and efficiency of all its enterprises would be vastly enlarged by a largely increased circulation of the paper.*"

3*d. Synod's agent of Publication, in co-operation with the agents of Publication in the Presbyteries, is instructed to concert measures for securing this greatly to be desired result.*

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Conducted by
Rev. T. R. Sampson, Asheville, N. C., Secretary for Foreign Missions of Synod.

Heathen Claims and Christian Duty.

The title of this article is taken from a notable address, which we have read several times with the greatest pleasure and profit, delivered on the first of November last, by Mrs. Isabella Bishop in Exeter Hall.

The address contains so much which we have thought ourselves and tried to say, most clearly developed and expressed, that we will confer a favor upon our readers, by letting them hear what this most estimable lady thinks in her own language—as our limits will permit:

"It is not as a mission worker in even the humblest department of mission work, that will speak to you, but as a traveller, and as one who has been made a convert to missions, not by missionary success, but by seeing, in four and a half years of Asiatic travelling, the desperate needs of the unchristianized world.

"There was a time when I was altogether indifferent to missions, and would have avoided a mission station, rather than have visited it. But the awful, pressing claims of the unchristianized nations, which I have seen, have taught me that the work of their conversion to Christ is one to which one would gladly give influence and whatever else God has given to one. I would like to pass on some of the ideas which have suggested themselves to my own mind, in my long and solitary travels, and perhaps especially since I came home, full of the needs of the heathen world and to some extent annoyed at the apathy and callousness of the Christian Church at home.

"In each of the countries visited I have avoided, as much as possible, European settlements; my object was to live among the people, sharing their lives as much as possible.

"Wherever I have been I have seen sin and sorrow and shame. I cannot tell of fields whitening to the harvest, nor have I heard the songs of rejoicing laborers bringing the sheaves home. But I have seen work done, the seed sown in tears by laborers sent out, honest work, work which has made me more and more earnestly desire to help the cause of missions, from a personal knowledge of work in the mission field.

"Naturally, among those at home there is a disposition to look at the work done. On my own part there may be too great a disposition, possibly to look at the work left still undone, because to me it seems so vast and so appalling.

"We sing hopeful, triumphant hymns, we hear of what the Lord has done, of encouragements which a merciful God gives inadequate and feeble efforts, and some of us perhaps think that little remains to be accomplished, and that the kingdoms of this world are about to become 'the kingdoms of our God and of His Christ.' But such is not the case, and I think that we may, instead of congratulating ourselves upon the work done, though we are thankful for what God has enabled us to do, bow our heads in shame that we have done so little and served so little.

"The work is only beginning and we have barely touched the fringe of it. The natural increase of population in the heathen world is outstripping, at this moment, all our efforts; and if it is true, and I believe it has never been contradicted, that four millions only have been baptized within this century. It has also been said without contradiction that the natural increase of the heathen world, in that time, has been two hundred millions, an awful contemplation. It is said that ten hundred millions on our earth are not in any sense christianized, of these thirty-five millions pass annually in one ghastly, reproachful, mournful precession to Christless graves. Nineteen centuries have passed and only one-third of the population of our earth is even nominally Christian.

"We are bound to face these facts and all that they mean for us—and to ask ourselves how we stand in regard to this awful need.

"In China alone we have but one missionary to half a million of people. I think that we may say, to us belongeth shame for this our neglect.

"The Moravians have one missionary out of every sixty of their members. We have but one out of every 5,000 members. Were we equally impressed with love and obedience, we should have 200,000 missionaries and our contributions would be $100,000,000 a year. What an object lesson this is to arouse the sleeping conscience with!

"We spend $15 a head upon drink, while our contributions for the conversion of this miserable world are but 20 cents per head. These statistics are dry enough, but they are filled with dreaming, and an awful meaning, if we would only dwell upon them, each one of us, in our own heart in the sight of God."

"This is as much as we can give this week of this striking address. We will give some even more impressive extracts from it at another time.

A SONG OF DRIFTING.

Evermore we are drifting on with the restless tide,
But there must be a bound to the ocean—a home on the other side;
Somewhere there is a Gilead sweet with the healing balm,
And the storms may rave, but the rainbows are arched in the skies of calm!

Windeth the river weary, through forests no no man hath trod,
Where the darkness is shut from the shining of the lamps in the windows of God;
But out from the gloom it flashes in the light of the day to be,
And mingles its weary waters with the mother tides of the sea.

We are not hopeless, homeless! Wherever our feet may roam
We are going, like little children, to the gates of our Father's home;
And though dark be the way, and dreary, when life with its strife is past,
We shall enter in at the portals and rest in His love at last!

GRANT TO GIVE AND ITS TRAIN ATTENDANT.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

The exegesis of a Greek preposition has precepitated upon an unoffending public vitriolic volumes of polemic theology, emanating from the subtile intellects of reverend gentlemen "with manners as mild as the milk upon the whiskers of an unweaned kitten." Recalling this fact the layman who makes timid excursions into the purlieus of theology, trembles at the prospect of an exegetical excoriation from those:

> "Who prove their doctrine orthodox
> By apostolic blows and knocks,
> And decide all controversies by > Infallible artillery."

But not to lengthen-out the thread of our verbosity finer than the staple of our argument, we would ask some of the clerical brethren and not a few laymen who follow in their wake, "What is your authority for the expressions, 'grant to give' and its congeners, 'grant to bless' and 'grant to make?'" If these expressions were not used by some whose English sits sweet upon the lips and who "speak with all the allurements of a filed tongue," we should not think it worth while to cumber the columns of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN with grammatical comment.

As might naturally be expected, these odd phrases occur only in prayers and invocations, and if errors at all, they have become spiritualized by their environment, and apparently authoritative because used by men who in matters of literary taste know whereof they speak. Hence our timidity in leading the attack upon these veteran phrases strongly entrenched in a fortress of sacred usage that seems well-nigh impregnable. To begin ab ovo, what is the origin of "grant to give?" May we conjecture that it is found first in the writings of the seventeenth century theologians whose phraseology forms a sort of sacred scoria which too often conceals the thought that lurks beneath its incrustations? As our training in seventeenth century theology, however, is, like Orlando's beard, a younger brother's revenue, this a mere conjecture and doubtless a hazardous one.

It is certain that the idiom is not Biblical. A careful examination of all the references under "grant" in Young's Concordance reveals the fact that in the Bible this verb takes after it either a noun or a subordinate clause introduced by that. The one apparent exception is Rom. 15: 5, but here it is clear that in the expression, "Grant you to be like-minded," the infinitive is dependent primarily upon "you" and only secondarily upon "grant." Maetzner in his colossal English Grammar, under Infinitive with and without to, gives no warrant for 'grant to give' or 'grant to bless.' But even if these expression are sanctioned by an out-of-the-way theological usage, do they not smack of the odd, like "such an one," "I trow not" and similar archaisms which attract to the language with the inevitable result of detracting from the thought. Again ought any oddities of diction, even though sanctioned by Scripture itself, to be admitted into a spontaneous outpouring of the heart's most sacred longings, and aspirations,—a confidential talk with the risen Jesus. Does not any stereotyped expression, especially if it is odd, betray a false lack of earnestness and sincerity on the part of him who offers the prayer? Words that burn are the usual outcome of thoughts that breathe.

But this is somewhat apart from our purpose and yet not altogether so. For we wish not only to find out the authority for "grant to give' but to emphasize the fact that the diction of prayer should conform to the every day speech just as closely as is consistent with reverence. Most of us who are called upon to pray in public—and the writer would be the last one to exclude himself from the list of delinquents—slip sometimes into the conventional and otiose, and we all know why. The lips move but the heart is far away.

But words influence thoughts and the habit of using odd or stereotyped expressions in prayer, must ultimately stereotype the thought and ossify the soul. I have often thought that there are too many prayers, never too much prayer, and that vain repetitions lead to the varieties of speech.

> "God needs not iteration nor vain cries.
> Vague ambages and witless ecstacies,
> Avail not: ere a voice to prayer be given
> The heart should rise on wings of love to heaven."

But I forbear and leave this aspect of a great subject to others far more capable of handling it with luminous suggestiveness. C.

In January, 1894, I asked 546 persons to send me $800. From 42 I have received $79.25. Leaving 504 still to send $720.75. Will you not at once respond and be one of the number to aid, and thus reduce the number not heard from? Do not forget to send me the one, or five, or ten dollars as you can. This will be a small amount to you, but I shall miss it unless you send it, and not sending is delaying in building the new church.

Remember, the Catholic church is to be built by the contribution of one lady guest from New York. Remember there is no Protesant church at the Hot Springs, and I ask many protestants to help, so that it will fall lightly on each one. We have a small room at present used as a chapel in which we meet. Send something at once please to the pastor, Rev. Wm. C. White, Warm Springs, Va.

Show Faith by Works.

I went to San Francisco some fifteen years ago to buy a threshing-machine. I examined one that was recommended. It seemed to be all right, but I did not and could not feel sure in regard to it until I saw it work. It was made to thresh grain, and when it did so rapidly and well I was satisfied. Now, if I had taken that "workmanship" home, and sat down before it day after day, and studied the cylinders and the drapers, I might have had some confidence in it. But that confidence would have been vague and unsatisfactory. An hour of practical testing in the harvest field was worth more to me than months of examination and comparison with other machines would have been. And is not this the only way to test the reality of our conversion? Human machinists make mistakes and failures. Their workmanship may not do that "unto" which they have made it. But God's power and wisdom are infinite. He can not err. If he constructs, or rather reconstructs, a man "unto good works," the man will do such works. And if he fails to do them, it is certain that that man is not a new creature (creation) in Christ Jesus. (See 2 Cor. v. 17, R. V. margin.) Let us show our faith by our works.—C. E. Babb.

Is The World Growing Better?

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

To attempt an answer to this large question in a brief article seems almost like attempting to carve yonder City Hall on a cherry stone. A man blinded by optimism would unhesitatingly answer Yes; a blear-eyed pessimist would as promptly say No. A discriminating observer would probably reply: It is growing better in some portions and in regard to some things; and in some other quarters there is a retrograde tendency in religion and morality. The wonderful advance made in science, art and mechanical inventions has nothing to do with the question, which is purely ethical. Brain-culture does not mean heart culture; steam engines and telegraphs are not spiritual agencies. In making humanity permanently better, God's Word is the standard, and God's Spirit is the regenerating factor.

The progress which has been made in Christianizing heathen peoples during this nineteenth century (which may well be called the Century of Foreign Missions) is familiar to every person of intelligence. China, Japan, the Dark Continent and nearly every portion of the globe has been thrown open to Gospel propagation. The number of converts to Christianity is at least a million; and several millions more have felt the influences of Christian civilization. Great masses have not been suddenly revolutionized, as in Luther's time; but one by one individual hearts yield to the Gospel in nearly all lands. As a serious offset to these glorious results, the commerce of nominally Christian nations is often poisonous; Britain carries opium into China and India, America and other civilized nations carry rum into Africa; the Gospel goes in the cabin and hell goes in the hold of the same vessel! The average sailors to foreign ports are very far from being Gospel missionaries. Then, too, it must be remembered that where the spread of science and of popular education have uprooted heathenism, there has often been a reaction from superstition into infidelity. This is a danger in Japan; and Keshub Chunder Sen once remarked: "I fear for my Hindu countrymen that they will sink from the hell of heathenism into the deeper hell of infidelity"—the swing being from a bad religion into no religion at all. An honest view of the great missionary enterprise to-day reveals great preparation and great promise of success, rather than many magnificent achievements already wrought. Blood tells; and God has intrusted his Gospel to the Anglo-Saxons and the other most powerful races on the globe. The religion of the Bible is the only religion adapted to universal humanity, and in that Bible is a divine pledge that to all humanity that religion shall yet be preached.

What is the outlook in our country? In what respects are the spiritual skies brightening? In what are they darkening? One of the Bible tests and tide-marks is the prevalence of brotherly love among those who are professed disciples of Jesus Christ. That tide is steadily rising. Sectarian controversies and jealousies are dying out; the different denominations are drawing more closely together, and co-operate more cordially in all enterprises of evangelization and Christian charity. Many new methods of Christian work are springing into existence which enlist increasing numbers of church members; and religious activity is both a cause and a consequence of spiritual health. The last national census shows a steady growth of Christian churches and a larger relative membership in those churches than was presented in the previous census. There is a broad belt of blue sky in that quarter. Sanitary regulations in the large towns are improved, and cleanliness is a help to godliness. Thanks to the heroic efforts of one or two Augean-table cleansers, the former open sale of obscene literature is suppressed to a great extent. The drunkenness that disfigured society, and destroyed so many homes in the days of my childhood, has been immensely curtailed by the temperance reform; the chief danger now is that a relaxation of moral effort in opposition to the drinking usages may allow those usages to steal gradually back again. This danger is increased by the enormous influx of foreigners who have never been educated to abstinence. There are other indications, besides these just named, that are full of encouragement. On some portions of the field Christianity is making splendid gains. For this let us thank God and take courage.

When we look in some other quarters we discover some sad signs of deterioration. While there is an increase in the membership of Christian churches there is a lamentably steady diminution of attendance upon places of religious worship. Careful investigation shows a constant falling off in church attendance, both in the large towns and in the rural districts. The chasm between the churches and the masses—especially what are styled "the laboring classes"—is growing wider every day! This is a most alarming symptom. In spite of all the blessed influences of Sunday-schools, Young Men's Christian Associations, and societies of Christian Endeavor, there is an increasing swing of young people away from the house of God, and therefore from soul-saving influences. The Sabbath is not as generally kept sacred as formerly; one of the indications of this sad fact is the decrease of church attendance, and another is the enormous increase in the circulation of godless Sunday morning newspapers. If some Christians study the Bible more than formerly, there are too many others who are "snowed under" by a secular Sunday press that is hostile to the Holy Spirit.

The increasing materialism and mammonism work against spiritual religion, and the social customs which wealth breeds are adverse to spiritual life. As one illustration of this a distinguished New York pastor said to me, sadly: "Forty years ago my people lived plainly and attended prayer-meeting: now they are rich and our weekly services are almost deserted." Another uptown pastor said to me: "An old-fashioned revival is almost a moral impossibility in our uptown congregations." Half-day religion is on the increase almost everywhere. Sporting and gambling are more rife than formerly; what is still worse, the gambling element enters more largely into the transactions of trade and traffic. Divorces are becoming more easy and abundant; and, as Mr. Gladstone once said to me: "This tends to sap one of the foundations of society."

All these are portentous evils to which none but a fool will shut his eyes, and by which none but a coward will be frightened. God reigns, even if the Devil is trying to. The practical questions for each of us are: How can I become better? How can I help to make this old sinning and sobbing world the better?—Independent.

A Flaw in The Bolt.

A workman in a machine shop in Ohio was making a patent mower. He had just forged a bolt to fasten one end of a rod, when he discovered a slight flaw in the iron. "No matter," he said, "it will not be discovered. It may last for a good while, and when it breaks the owner of the machine will only have to buy a new one." That mower was shipped to California. The purchaser had a field of wild oats just ready to cut. If not mowed immediately the grain would all shell out, and the hay would be only straw. These wild oats are one of our most valuable hay crops, but must be cut just at the right time. The mower was started in the field, and worked beautifully for an hour. Then suddenly that bolt gave way. Before the machine could be stopped the rod it fastened was broken. "Too bad." said the farmer. "A flaw in the bolt. Well, there's half a day lost, for I must go to San Jose and get another." He drives to the hardware store; but no rod can be found to replace the broken one—none nearer than San Francisco. He telegraphs to San Francisco to have one sent by express. It comes at noon next day. Price of rod and bolt, express charges and telegram make quite a bill. Besides nearly two days are lost, and the field of oats is damaged so that it is hardly worth cutting. All this annoyance and loss because a careless workman used a piece of iron with a flaw in it. He might have replaced it with a perfect bolt in ten minutes. He did not mean to subject a stranger to so much worry and cost, and would be very sorry, no doubt, if he knew the history of that bolt. But his carelessness was just as injurious and criminal as if he had deliberately planned all the possible results. When men know that certain consequences may follow from their not doing what they ought to do, or from their doing what they ought not to do, they are reponsible for those consequences. We all see this readily in regard to material things. But do we remember, as we should, that our characters, our tempers, our lives are influencing others? That a flaw in them may not only grieve, but ruin an immortal soul? Suppose some one is watching you or me to determine whether Christianity is a reality or a sham. Suppose we get angry at some trifle; suppose we are dishonest in some little thing. He says to himself: "If religion don't make people any better than that, I don't want it." We go into eternity. We stand before the great white throne. The books are opened. The history of all human lives is revealed. We see just where each has affected others. We see where bolt and bar have come together in the great complicated machinery of society. We see how a thoughtless act, and idle word, has blighted a human soul. It may be the soul of a stranger whom we met but once. It may be the soul of our child or of our dearest friend. How important then that we be faithful always—"faithful in the least." Human lives are so woven together in a network of mutual influence that our most careless look or tone may be the turning point of some soul's eternal destiny.—Occident.

Forgiveness of Injuries.

An old clergyman of considerable and varied experience once expressed the opinion that the point of Christian morals in which even good men most generally failed was in the forgiveness of injuries. They were prone to retaliate whenever opportunity offered, or if they forbore so flagrant a breach of the law of love, yet they rejoiced in the calamity of those who had injured them, thus transgressing a principle of Old Testament ethics (Proverbs 17: 5). Such persons should remember that the true heaping of coals of fire upon the heads of one's enemies means the subjecting their enmity by assiduous kindness. It requires grace to persevere in a course of this kind but if asked for from on high it will be given. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in one of his papers, puts the matter in a very striking manner, and we are quite sure that he does not overdraw the picture. Hear him: "There is your neighbor B—— who has wronged you, and in a way not very easy for human nature to bear. There is only one style of revenge that Christianity sanctions. The very next time that man gets into trouble, go and give him a helpful lift. If he is sorely pinched in purse, offer him a loan; if his business runs low send him some customers; if you see a bit of crape on his door bell, hasten there to offer him your sympathy and your service. Do that, and you have killed an enemy and made a friend at one shot. No weapon has such 'sure fire' as the weapon of love."

Live for Something.

"Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the stmsor of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with, year by year; you will never be forgotten—your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as the stars of heaven."—Chalmers.

SPRING.

Spring, with that nameless pathos in the air
Which dwells with all things fair;
Spring, with her golden suns and silver rain,
Is with us once again.

Out in the woods the jasmine burns
Its fragrant lamps, and turns
Into a royal court with green festoons
The banks of dark lagoons.

In the deep heart of every forest tree
The blood is all aglee,
And there's a look about the leafless bowers
As if they dreamed of flowers.

Is it Nothing to You?

The salvation of the souls of men is the most important subject that can engage the attention. The Bible represents it as of supreme interest to God the Father. He so loved the world, lost in sin, that he gave his Son to save all who will believe. It is of supreme interest to Christ, for he gave his life in order to save men, and lives to intercede for all who come to God in his name. It is of supreme interest to the Holy Spirit, for he comes to bless the truth to men, to persuade them to believe, to regenerate, to sanctify, to lead in divine life and service. Whatever the unbelieving world may think of it, God, who made and redeemed man, and who waits to regenerate and sanctify, counts the salvation of the soul as the highest, greatest, most important issue that can be raised upon this earth.

And so the apostles considered it. In love and loyalty to Christ, whom they trusted and obeyed as the only hope of a lost world, they went out, not counting their own lives dear, to urge men to be reconciled to God, and died in defense of the gospel. The martyrs held this to be the central and overarching question of life. They were willing to give up home and friends and station and comfort, and their lives even, rather than deny Christ, in whom was the only hope for themselves and for other souls. The missionaries of the cross have held that the thing above everything else, important, is the salvation of the soul, and to carry the gospel to the lost they have given up all the joys and comforts of their own lands and homes, and have gone to those who were lost in dark and heathen lands.

This is the belief of the whole evangelical Christian world to-day. This is the message sounding out from hundreds of thousands of pulpits in Christian lands; emphasized in song and sermon and prayer; filling volumes and tracts and religious papers; proclaimed by pastor and evangelist and teacher; insisted upon by Christian parents and friends; streaming out from the pages of God's holy word in warning cry and in passionate pleading.

The Christian world is astir to-day with revival interest and power. Souls are being converted in villages, towns and cities all over the land and throughout the world. Tidings come of awaked communities and of rejoicing Christians. The fire is still spreading. The Spirit is still striving. The prospect is brightening. Hearts are tender. Many are striving in prayer.

It is a time for every Christian to be in earnest before God in securing the salvation of many souls. It is an easy thing to interfere with and check the work of God's Spirit. Diversions in the way of social life or of inconsistent attitude may be effectual in keeping souls in death. Holding aloof from special work in which others are engaging may neutralize the efforts being now put forth. The indulgence of a harmful spirit, or of bitterness and worldliness, may be for the death of some who might be saved. Let every one who is counted as a Christian be one in spirit and in truth, and results may come over which earth shall be glad and the very heavens rejoice.

If every Christian should be outspoken for Christ, and should succeed in bringing one soul to Christ this year, the Church would be doubled, and if this process might be carried on for ten years, the whole world would be led to Jesus Christ. However this be, let each one of us, for ourselves, resolve before God that we will not be indifferent to this great matter. Let worldliness and selfishness die out of the heart. It is something to us. It must be something to us. When eternity strikes our vision, we shall certainly realize that to secure our own salvation and that of others was all that was really worthy of serious attention.—Herald and Presbyter.

The Shadow of Peter.

BY OBADIAH OLDSCHOOL.

What a picture Luke paints in Acts v: 5. He has just told us in verse 12 that "by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought." And the popular enthusiasm rose so high that those who could not get access to Peter, the leading apostle, watched for him as he came down the street on his way from the temple, and brought out their sick, in the hope that his shadow would fall on them as he passed by. They knew that if he laid his hands on them they would be healed. And if by his hands why not by his shadow? They reasoned as the woman did who touched the hem of our Saviour's garment. Their faith in Peter was so great that they believed healing power not only dwelt in his body but surrounded it like an atmosphere. This atmosphere was represented by his shadow, and hence they tried to get their sick folk into it. Luke does not say that any one was actually healed by the shadow of the apostle. We have a somewhat similar statement in Acts xix: 12. There it is said that handkerchiefs and aprons were taken to the sick from the body of Paul, and that "the diseases departed from them." Because Luke tells the result in this case and fails to in the other, some infer that the shadow was not as effectual as the handkerchiefs. And they may be right. Yet the sick in Jerusalem were nearer to Peter when his shadow fell on them, than those in Ephesus were to Paul when the handkerchiefs were taken to them. In that case we do not believe of course that there was any virtue in the handkerchiefs. They were but signs and symbols of the faith of those who brought them, in God, and in Paul as his representative. Why should not similar faith have been honored in Jerusalem? And can we think that Peter was indifferent to the pleading looks and voices of those sufferers as he passed by? Must he not have stopped and laid his hands upon them, or spoken to them, "in the name of Jesus of Nazareth," as he did to the lame man in the temple?

But why this faith in the shadow of Peter? Those people were Jews. They were familiar with the Old Testament. They knew what David wrote in the Psalms about putting his trust under the shadow of God's wings, Ps. xxxvi: 7, and about abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, Ps. xci: 1. They knew what Solmon wrote in Canticles ii: 3. "I sat down under his shadow with great delight." They had read in Isaiah about God's covering the prophet with the shadow of his hand, and in Hosea that "they that dwell under his shadow shall return and revive as the corn and grow as the vine." The shadow was to them the visible sign of invisible power and grace. When David went into the tabernacle and stood before the ark of the covenant, he did not see God; but he had a special consciousness of his presence. That ark containing the two tables of the law and over it the cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy seat, was an impressive symbol of divine justice and mercy, righteousness and love. When he read the books of Moses, the record of God's dealings with the children of Israel, he felt that he was sitting, like his ancestors in the wilderness, under a pillar of cloud, a visible manifestation of the invisible power and glory. We can often see a shadow when we cannot see the object that casts it. But the shadow is a revelation of the substance. It could not exist without the substance. Hence we should act in view of it as if we saw that which it represents. It is not folly to be encouraged or warned by shadows.

I have read of a traveller who was going through a wild region with a large sum of money. It was a cloudy day. But suddenly as he was entering a deep defile, the sun broke through the clouds, and he saw on the road before him the shadow of a man with a gun in his hand. The man was behind a rock, and thought that he was thoroughly concealed; but the shadow revealed him. The traveller did not say "Why should I fear; it is only a shadow?" He knew what the shadow meant, and, thanking God for that streak of sunshine, he turned his horse and rode rapidly away. If that traveller had been looking out for a place of shelter, as night drew near, and had seen the shadow of a castle on the sands of the desert, he would have hastened to where that shadow lay, being sure that it represented a welcome reality.

We are all travellers. The great realities that determine our characters and destinies we cannot see. They are spiritual. But they cast shadows upon our path. There is a sense in which we may call the Bible a shadow. It is a book indeed, but it is not like any other book. We cannot account for its wonderful revelations, without believing in a supernatural power that inspired the writers. As we read we are compelled to say, "This is from God. No human genius could paint such pictures as these." Hence when we peruse and ponder the words which assure us that God is love, that like as a father pitieth his children so the Lord pitieth them that fear him, we can say with the bride in Canticles: "I am sitting under his shadow with great delight and his fruit is sweet to my taste."

And God's institutions and ordinances are like his Word, the shadows of great and blessed realities. When we sit in the sanctuary on the Sabbath, and unite in singing his praise, how forcibly we are reminded of the great assembly of saints and angels, "where congregations ne'er break up and Sabbaths never end."

When we meet around his table on the earth, and commemorate his dying love, we are overshadowed by the thought of the marriage supper of the Lamb. These are not mere forms and ceremonies. They "serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." (Heb. viii: 5).

Then, as an earthly pilgrim rejoices "in the shadow of a great rock in a weary land" so let us rejoice in our Bibles, our Sabbaths and our sacraments. In them we have an earnest and a foretaste of the coming glory and blessedness. In them so much of heaven comes down to earth as we can comprehend while yet in the body. And we know that ere long these shadows will flee away, and we shall see God face to face and be with him in the cloudless sunshine of his love forever and ever.—Interior.

Begging the Body of Jesus.

Joseph of Arimathea was a good man, and yet he was afraid of the Jews; and so he never confessed his faith in Christ while Christ was living. But when he was dead, he went boldly to Pilate and asked for his sacred body. Perhaps it was remorse that made him so bold. Perhaps only one who had been secretly a friend could have secured this favor, and saved the body from further outrage. Perhaps Joseph's nature was such that he was bold only in a sudden emergency—as is shown by much of the heroism of our nature in daily common life.

And yet, was it not pitiful that Joseph's boldness came so late? Touching service he rendered to the Master's body. Perhaps he saved it from the fires of Gehenna, to which, doubtless, were committed the bodies of the two thieves; and he gave it embalmment, and put it into his own unused tomb. All beautiful! But we can hardly help sadly saying: "O Joseph, if you had only shown some kindness to our Lord while he was yet living, when other men were speaking against him or forsaking him, we should honor you more! You missed your opportunity, or caught only at its departing skirts." And the lesson for us is this—we must do good while we may. Who can tell how soon those whom we want to help will slip away from us, or we shall go, and leave them behind? We let the living go, unloved, unhonored, and then are inconsolable over their ashes. It is so in our use of the money we accumulate. We love to keep it a little longer; and so the young man whom we might help to an education, or start in business, or lift over a hard place is no longer with us. We lose, too, one of life's chief joys. It is said of the late Governor Morgan of New York, that when, in his own mansion, he gave a hundred thousand dollars to Dr. William Adams, president of Union Theological Seminary, as he watched him drive away with the securities, he experienced a thrill of delight that all his business successes and all his public honors had never brought him. It was the turning-point in his life. He was always a generous giver. The men who do good only after their death seem to me like Joseph of Arimathea as he begged the body of Jesus.

It is so of personal work to save men's souls. Our Sabbath-school pupils, the members of our parish, slip away from us, and we say over their silent dust, "If I had only been more personal with this one, if I had got closer to him, he might have been saved." How often do ministers go to the death-bed of men on whom they had counted to exert some more potent influence next week or next month! And they look for them, and they are gone. That familiar story of Dr. Chalmers' stay with a stranger in the house of a Scottish nobleman, and their charming social evening intercourse, with the stranger dying in the act of retiring, and the comment of the great Scottish preacher, "Never in my life before did I feel the meaning of the words, 'Be instant in season, out of season,'"—who can ever forget?

Then the application the subject has to words and acts of kindness among family and friends. The Saviour said of the Jews that they persecuted and killed the prophets, and then built them magnificent sepulchers. It is a custom still observed. We criticise our public servants mercilessly while they are in office; but when they are dead, we lavish praise indiscriminate and fulsome. How much more just to say the kind things while they live, and how much better service should we get while doing so! No man ever reached a station so exalted as to make him insensible to praise or blame, and the best man would be vastly better, as well as happier, if we said the kind things we think. For we do think kind things. We say to ourselves: "Now, I ought to tell this man how well he is doing his work, how much the church, the public, the nation, owe him." But we neglect it, and when we take up the paper the next morning, he is dead. As Mrs. Preston says:

"If you have but a word of cheer,
Speak it while I am alive to hear."

Let us beware, too, lest, like Joseph, we lavish our love only on the bodies of our dear ones. It would be curious to know how often the costly pageantry of funerals is an unconfessed effort to set right some of life's wrongs, that seem so hideous in the presence of death. How often, alas! men embalm a body that has enshrined a life that our neglect or coldness has made wretched. It is not always because men are bad, but thoughtless, or timid, or too mindful of public opinion, that they neglect a duty until the one to whom it is owed has passed beyond their reach.

"We have careful thought for the stranger
And smiles for the sometime guest:
But oft for our own the bitter tone,
Though we love our own the best.
Ah, lips with the curl impatient!
Ah, brow with the shade of scorn!
'Twere a cruel fate were the night too late
To undo the work of the morn!"

How to Spoil The Boy.

If you want your gray hairs dishonored by a spoiled and ruined son, adopt the following directions:

1. Let him have plenty of spending money.

2. Permit him to choose his own companions without restraint or direction.

3. Give him a latch key and allow him to return home late in the evenings.

4. Make no inquiries as to where and with whom he spends his leisure moments.

5. Give him to understand that manners makes a good substitute for morality.

6. Teach him to expect pay for every act of helpfulness to others.

7. Allow him to occupy a seat in church with the boys rather than the pew with his parents.

8. Permit him to regard the Sunday-school unsuitable for a boy on the verge of young manhood.

The Difference.

There are too many people, both in city and country, who require a more pleasant day and more favorable conditions for going to church than for almost any other purpose. If there is slush or ice on the pavement they feel quite excusable for staying at home; but they would not think of declining an invitation to dine with a friend if they had no better excuse. It is seldom that the roads are too muddy or too rough to keep the farmer from going to market with his produce, but how frightfully bad are they on the Sabbath! The young people must get to the social entertainment, however disagreeable the weather, but it is only at a time of unusual religious interest that many of them will encounter the storm to attend the prayer-meeting.

Temperance Safe Guards.

A young man of our acquaintance passed through many temptations in town and city, in college and in University, and never formed the drinking taste or habit. The secret of his safety lay in the fact that he was taught, from his earliest years, not only temperance principles, but to hate liquor in every shape. The power of early education is great, and is an important factor in the temperance-reform. Mothers and fathers who begin in childhood to teach their children the evil effects of strong drink, and who create in them a disgust for it, and who follow up their precepts by prayers and example, have little reason to fear they will go back upon their training, or fall into intemperate ways. Intelligent and persistent home instruction and example are among the best and safest temperance safe-guards ever invented.—Presbyterian.

Rev: Fitzhugh Banks, from Norwood, La., to Wilson, La.

Rev. S. C. Alexander, from Prattville, Ala., to Monticello, Texas.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Second Church, Charlotte :—The debt which has been hanging over this church for years has been raised. A few weeks ago Rev. J.H. Boyd, the pastor, preached a sermon which stirred the congregation to action on this matter. A committee, Messrs. Jno. E. Oates and Joseph Wearn, was appointed to secure the necessary funds. The Presbyterians of Charlotte, and in this they are not unlike Presbyterians in some other places, can be depended upon to act promptly and efficiently in cases such as this when properly laid before them, and so, the money was raised at once. In fact $23,000 were raised where only $21,786 were really needed. Everybody contributed. There were 362 names on the church manual from whom contributions could reasonably be expected: 381 persons, in fact, contributed. The three congregations of Charlotte worshipped together on Sunday night, 18th inst., and held a service of thanksgiving and praise for the success attained. Rev. J. H. Boyd made a statistical report expressing the gratitude of the people and giving God the glory for what he had enabled them to accomplish. Dr. Preston, of the First church, and Rev. F. D. Hunt, of Graham Street church, made most appropriate remarks, and letters of congratulation from pastors of the various churches of other denominations in the city were read.

Rev. A. M. Hassell :—A correspondent writes from Godwin that this brother is doing good work and giving great satisfaction in his new field of labor, including Bluff, Dunn and McMillan's in Fayetteville Presbytery. He and his family are quite an acquisition to the community at and near Godwin. Tho times are hard with us, we are making an effort to add to their comfort by enlarging the manse.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Danbury :—The Lord has blessed us richly at Danbury. We had Rev. Wm. Black with us from March 10th, to March 19th. The Spirit accompanied his preaching with power. The congregations were good. The Lord favoring us with good weather. The whole community was moved. Many came from a distance especially from Dan River neighborhood. Some twenty-nine made profession of faith, seventeen of whom joined the Presbyterian church. Five also joined by certificate. Some of the leading gentlemen of the place were among the converts. A pleasant feature of the meeting was the healing of the breaches. It is delightful to have peace and love in our community. Some backsliders were reclaimed, and altogether the meeting has resulted in a great blessing. Bro. Black has greatly endeared himself to the hearts of our people. The Lord be praised for His goodness.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Rev. A. T. Graham :—Friends of our pastor, Rev. A. T. Graham, who has been sick for some time, will be glad to learn that he is improving. We trust he will soon be able to resume his pastoral duties.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Roxboro :—On March 18th, Mr. H. Field and Dr. J. A. Wise were ordained and installed ruling elders, and Mr. E. G. Thompson was in like manner set apart to the office of deacon in this church. The names of two new members were announced, making five additions since the meeting of Synod.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Smithfield :—Rev. John A. McMurray, writes March 19th: It gives me pleasure to report, that six new members were received into the Smithfield church yesterday. This number is one more than the whole membership when I began my work here. We have now nineteen members with a good prospect of more to follow soon.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Winston First Church :—The third Sabbath in March was observed as the first anniversary of the settlement of the pastor, Rev. Robert E. Caldwell. One hundred and two persons have been received into the membership. Forty-five upon profession of faith. There has been no special effort beyond the usual services, but each Sabbath the door of the church has been opened and scarcely a week has passed without one or more accessions.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Installation of Rev. S. M. Rankin :—The committee appointed at a recent meeting of Fayetteville Presbytery, consisting of Rev. A. N. Ferguson, Rev. W. B. Arrowood and Elder A.D.Brown, to install Rev.S.M. Rankin pastor of Antioch church, met at said church on Saturday, 17th of March, and performed the duty assigned. There was a good congregation in attendance. And after the installation service was over, it was pleasant to see a large proportion of the membership present coming forward and giving the new pastor a hearty hand-shake, in token of cordial reception and affectionate regard. May this relation long exist to the glory of God.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Adger :—The Southern Presbyterian says: Rev. Dr. J. B. Adger has been ordered by his physicians to cease for a while from active work and to rest. His pulpit in Pendleton will be supplied during the month of April by Rev. D. A. Todd, of Laurens.

GEORGIA.

Adell Church :—Was visited lately by Rev. Dr. J. B. Mack and ten persons received into membership.

MISSOURI.

Monroe City :—Seven additions to the church on profession of faith. Preaching by Rev. A. A. Craig and Rev. R. H. Latham.

Plattsburg :—The church here has been revived and strengthened ; there were nine additions to the church. Preaching by Rev. O. W. Gauss.

KENTUCKY.

Covington :—Rev. W. H. Neel was assisted by Rev. W. E. Keller in a recent meeting in which nineteen members were received.

TENNESSEE.

Hendersonville :—Rev. W. L. Rosser, pastor, was assisted by Rev. Dr. R. C. Reed. There were eleven additions.

DOMESTIC.

The N. Y. correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says : Rev. A. Lambert, a Catholic priest of the Redemptorist Order, has left the Church and announces that he will hereafter devote himself to Protestant evangelical work. He has for some time been a member of the band of missionaries who have radiated from the house of the order at Saratoga. Father Lambert was born in Belgium forty-four years ago, and has been in this country for five years. He was ordained to the priesthood when very young, and then did missionary work in the West Indies,

Independent : At the meeting of the New York Presbytery last week the question of students connected with Union Theological Seminary came up again before the Presbytery, five having presented their application to be taken under the care of the Presbytery. This application was opposed by some very earnestly, in view of the fact that they were obtaining their training in a seminary out of sympathy with the Church. After some discussion, in which Dr. John Hall urged that the young men be admitted to the care of the Presbytery, it was decided that they be so received by a large majority. The union of the Brick church and the Church of the Covenant was consummated, the special act by the Legislature having passed.

Presbyterian Journal : Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard is planning the erection of a church near her country home on the Hudson as a memorial of her husband. It is to be beautiful in architecture, and will be the most costly church edifice ever erected by one individual in the United States. Mrs. Shepard makes it a point to carry out every enterprise that her husband was engaged in, in such a way as he would have done had he lived. There is no difference in the gifts to different charities, no changes have been made in the household or the newspaper or in any other thing in which he was interested. The old employes and servants of the household remain, and in every way Mrs. Shepard's loyalty to the memory of her husband is very touching.

N. Y. correspondence of the Baltimore Sun : The Rev. Peter O'Callaghan, one of the priests of the Paulist Community, who made his studies at the Catholic University, Washton, D. C., where he was ordained sub-deacon just one year ago, will leave here tomorrow to go to Harvard University, Cambridge, to preach and conduct the services in Appleton Chapel on next Sunday evening. It will be the first time a Catholic priest has so officiated at the university. Father O'Callaghan is a son of Dr. O'Callaghan, of Salem, Mass., and graduated at Harvard with the class of '88, hence the invitation to preach. He is twenty eight years old. The Rev. Mr. O'Callahan says of his sermon: "Its title is 'Rationalism in Faith,' and the text is from Psalms xi : 'Thy testimonies are become exceedingly credible.' I am not sure yet whether I shall wear a surplice and stole while I preach, but I think I shall wear my cassock. The prayers, while extempore, will begin in the way that all Catholic prayers for such services do. You know we have Sunday evening services in English in the church here. The services in Appleton Chapel will be Catholic, though the form is Protestant, because a Catholic priest is conducting it. I shall certainly do the best I can, with God's help, to represent the Catholic Church. It is not because of any supposed eloquence that I was chosen, but because there are few priests among the graduates of Harvard and the president of the Catholic Club happened to be a great personal friend of mine."

Pee Dee Presbytery will meet at Florence, S. C., Friday, April 13th, at 8 p. m.

JNO. G. LAW,
Stated Clerk.

HOW SHALL THEY BE SENT?

[Correspondence of the N C. Presbyterian.]

The China Mission appeal for twenty new missionaries to be sent out during 1894. Is it not a little request to a church of 200,000 members ? Our Executive Committee says : We will send out new men if churches or individuals pledge their support. Will not some brother whom the Lord hath blessed with property support a missionary ? Will not some liberal sister pay the salary of an elect lady ? Will not church sessions call a congregational meeting to see what fixed sum the people will annually give ? Will not the Ladies' Societies and Sabbath-schools unite in sending a labourer to China ? How shall the Gentiles believe in the precious Saviour of whom they have not heard ? "And how shall they hear without a preacher ?"

THE REVISED DIRECTORY ONCE MORE.

Many of the Presbyteries have deferred action on the adoption of the Revised Directory for Worship sent down by the last Assembly, until their spring meetings. So far as the writer has been able to ascertain, only one Presbytery, Ouachita, has rejected it, while twenty-four have adopted it, viz: Arkansas, Pine Bluff, Florida, Ebenezer, Transylvania, Chickasaw, Central Mississippi, Ethel, Louisiana, Potosi, Holston, Mecklenburg Bethel, Enoree, Pee Dee, Dallas, Paris, Chesapeake, East Hanover, Greenbrier, Lexington, Maryland, Roanoke, and Winchester.

This encourages the hope that the proposed revision will be approved, and this troublesome matter thus set at rest. The Church has become thoroughly wearied with it, and would long ago have dismissed the whole subject, but for the fact that the work had to be done, sooner or later. The Form of Government and Rules of Discipline have been revised—the Old Directory is not in harmony with them. It is absolutely necessary that all parts of the Book of Order should be made to harmonize. The Revision now before the Presbyteries for their approval, accomplishes this desirable end.

In their effort to be strictly conservative, and to make only such changes as were absolutely necessary, the Committee may not have carried the revision far enough. But they have produced a Directory which the Church can safely adopt, and whatever defects are disclosed by its practical use, may be corrected, one by one, as those of the other parts of the Book of Order have been.

If the Presbyteries adopt it, we will have a Book that is uniform throughout. If they reject it, the work will have to continue at great expense of time, labor, and money, until a satisfactory revision is made. It is to be hoped that the patience of the Church will not be farther taxed with this matter. It is at least safe to adopt this most conservative revision. E. M. G.

A STATEMENT AND APPEAL.

Made by Kinston Presbyterian Church for Aid in Building a Church.

To all who are interested in extending Presbyterianism in Eastern North Carolina :

DEAR FRIENDS :—We are few in number (nineteen all told) and most of us not blessed in this world's goods. We have no house of worship or any place in which to hold Sunday-school, and have to pay rent for the use of the Opera House for all our services. We ask assistance from all those who are willing to help us in our great need. We have a good lot paid for and about $400 subscribed.

If our brethren and friends of the stronger churches can help us now, such help will be most gratefully received by us. Perhaps some of you have never lived in a town where there was no Presbyterian church. Think of how it would be to you, and you can judge somewhat of our state of feeling dear friends.

If Presbyterianism is to prosper in this part of the State, a church here is a necessity ; there is room—plenty of room for our church to work for souls. But the needful funds are not with us. Will each pastor to whom this is sent kindly say a word for us and take up a collection ? Much can be done here if we can build immediately, whilst much will be lost by delay.

Funds may be sent to any member of the committee and will be properly applied.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

Washington, D. C., Mar. 21, 1894.

This has been temperance week in Washington. The first gun, if such an expression be permissable in this connection, was fired Sunday afternoon at the first of a series of special meetings under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., which are to be continued for two weeks. The principal speaker at the first meeting was the Indiana orator, Mr. Luther Benson, whose picturesque flow of language never fails to hold the attention of an audience. Here is a short extract from his address : "Paint a picture, and start by depicting on it everything that is horrid, revolting and disgusting. Then place on it a deserted home, with a mother and her innocent children suffering the pangs of hunger and clothed in rags. Paint on it trees whose fruit is poison. Put on it scenes of the most shameless degradation. Trim it with bleeding hearts, and then turn on it all the horrors of hell itself and you will not have one tithe of the truth about intemperance. Man's tongue and ingenuity could not conceive a lie evil enough, distorted enough, to approach the evils of intemperance. It is the evil of evils and the crime of crimes. How this grand Republic of ours would grow and glow but for the rum cancer which is destroying thousands of bright young lives annually. Could we but stop the traffic it would depopulate our penitentiaries, jails, calabooses, and alms houses, and the bright sunlight would be streaming through their open doors. Instead of locking up a man with whiskey in him let us lock up the whiskey before it gets into the poor man."

Sunday evening the oldest temperance organization in Washington, and some say in the United States—The Congressional Temperance Society, held its sixtieth annual meeting, it having been postponed from Fsbruary 25th, the proper date, in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Gen. Neal Dow, and being held two days in advance of that event in order that it should not conflict with the popular celebration which had been arranged by the W. C. T. U., for the 20th inst. The annual report of the Secretary, Rev. F. D. Power, did not show that the society was doing much more than setting a good example ; it has never been as numerous or as useful as the friends of temperance would like it to be. The report criticised the use of wine at State dinners and praised Mrs. Cleveland for never drinking it ; also Mrs. Carlisle for having presided over a cabinet dinner at which no wine was served. The portion of the report, however, which should be most carefully studied is embraced in the following extract therefrom : "Once in thirty years the people of the United States drink the full value of all their property. Three millions of wage-earners walk the streets empty-handed while one thousand million of dollars of the people's money goes yearly to satisfy the rum king. Lately a procession of 18,000 men walked the streets of Chicago, bearing a banner with the inscription : 'Our children cry for bread.' Then they went to a grove, settled down, and drank 1,400 kegs of beer. Silver agitates the people from sea to sea, though the entire coined money is less than $500,000,000. Tax tariff is a problem, though it amounts to less than $30,000,000 ; the great pension question amounts to less than $150,000,000, but the nation's liquor bill is $1,000,000,000."

The Neal Dow anniversary meeting, which was held last night in Convention Hall, was a great success from every point of view. Large audience, good speaking by prominent orators and grand singing by the same choir which was such an enjoyable feature of the Moody and Sankey meetings. It would have warmed the heart of the "grand old man" of Prohibition could he have been present and heard the spontaneous enthusiasm with which the thousands of Washington's best people assembled in his honor greeted each and every one of the numerous references to him by the various speakers. It was a meeting long to be remembered by all who attended it, and it will doubtless have a good effect upon the other temperance meetings to be held under the same auspices during this and next week.

Congress has been assured in an official communication from the President that there is no occasion for anxiety on account of complications likely to follow the landing of British marines at Bluefields, on the Mosquito Coast of Nicaragua, the British government having stated that the commander of its vessel only did what the commander of an American vessel would have done under the same circumstances—landed Marines for the preservation of life and property during a local disturbance.

The Bland coinage bill was considered at the cabinet meeting yesterday and will, it is expected, be taken up again at Friday's meeting. The President has untll the 29th inst., to decide whether he will sign it, veto it, or allow it to become a law without his signature.

The revised tariff bill has been reported to the Senate and notice formally given that it will be called up April 2d. Its ultimate fate is still in doubt, as several of the majority Senators are opposed to some of its provisions—notably the income tax. T.

Second Quarter. Lesson II.

April 8. Discord in Jacob's Family.

Gen. xxxvii. 1–11. Commit vss. 3, 4.

Golden Text. See that ye fall not out by the way. Gen. xlv. 24.

Topic.—Joseph hated for his dreams.

I. THE STUDY OF THE LESSON

First Step. Read the sequel to the last lesson in chap. xxxiii. Jacob prevailed easily with Esau because he had first prevailed with God. Jacob's gifts seem to have made little impression on Esau, but God had prepared Esau's heart. Note in the events of chap. xxxiv. the disastrous fruits of polygamy and idolatry in Jacob's household showing themselves in moral weakness and unbridled passion in his children. Jacob was a changed man now, but he must still reap the bitter fruits of former sins. Note the fulfilment of Jacob's vow at Bethel, the cleansing of his house from idolatry and the deaths of Deborah at Bethel, of Rachel at Bethlehem (Ephrath) and of Isaac at Hebron (ch. xxxv.)

The Chronology. The fixed points are (1) That Jacob was 91 when Joseph was born (for Joseph was 30 when he stood before Pharaoh and after seven years of plenty and two of famine Jacob gives his age as 130). (2) That Jacob left Padan-Aram 6 or 7 years later (xxx. 25–32 and xxxi. 41). (3) That Isaac died when Jacob was 120 (xxv.26, and xxxv. 28). The uncertain points are (1) How long Jacob was in Padan-Aram. He was there not more than 50 and odd years for his twin brother's marriage at the age of 40 preceded his going (xxvi. 34, 35; xxviii. 6, 7), and not less than 20 years (xxxi. 41). There must have been a considerable interval between the 14 years of service for his wives and the 6 years service for his cattle, otherwise Joseph the "child of his old age" would have been only 6 years younger than Reuben the first born. (2) How the period of his 22 or 23 years in Canaan before his father's death was divided. How long, for instance, he sojourned at Shechem and at Bethel before he came to Isaac at Hebron. Within this period the events of the lesson took place. The sale of Joseph was certainly after Jacob came to Hebron (xxxvii. 14), and so after the death of Rachel. But the time when Joseph was 17 years old and when he had his dreams may have been before that event.

Second Step. Study the lesson before us and decide in the light of subsequent events and the development of Joseph's character and abilities. 1. Whether Jacob's preference for Joseph was mere favoritism to the child of his old age, or a discriminating recognition of his mental and moral endowments. 2 Whether his method of manifesting this preference by Joseph's dress was a weak display of vanity or a mark of rank to designate him as the heir to the birthright (1 Chron. v. 2). 3. Whether Joseph's dreams indicated that he was spoiled by his father's favoritism or that he felt within him the consciousness of power and capacity for high position. (Of course, in ether case, the dreams were God sent, as prophecies of the future). 4. Whether Joseph's telling his dreams indicated vanity and self-conceit or guile-less innocence. 5. Whether his bringing the evil report of his his brethren unto Jacob was (a) idle or malicious tale-bearing, (b) official fidelity, as overseer over the sons of the bond-maids or (c) recoil from evil and desire for their reformation, apart from any official oversight. What does it indicate as to the confidential relations between Jacob and Joseph? 6. Did the sons of Leah hate Joseph for the same reasons as the sons of the bond-maids, or from envy of his present relations with Jacob, or from jealousy with regard to the birthright? 7. Note Jacob's wisdom in checking Joseph about his dreams while in his heart he attached importance to them.

Third Step. Take up any points of difficulty and consult your helps.

Vs. 1. Jacob dwelt. This is evidently the conclusion of the narrative about separation of Esau and Jacob after the death of Isaac, and should have been attached to chapter xxxvi.

Vs. 2. This begins a new narrative like that of chapter xxxvi. Like that it goes back of the events just recorded to make a complete story. As we have seen, we cannot say just how far back. It was twelve years before the death of Isaac, but whether before the death of Rachel we cannot say.

Was with. As a messenger or go-between for his father (of vss. 13, 14).

Vs. 3. The son of his old age. The original is "a son." Benjamin is evidently in the mind of the writer when he avoids the definite article. But whether he was born at this time we do not know. If so he was of very tender years.

A coat of many colors. The original is obscure. The R. V., has in the margin "a long garment with sleeves." Delitsch says it was "a garment reaching to the ends of the arms and to the feet." It indicated rank and position as distinguished from the short sleeveless tunics of laborers.

Vs. My Sheaf. Here he is a laborer along with the rest.

Vs. 9. To me. Here he is separated from the others, and while they are immeasurably increased in dignity they acknowledge him as lord. His parents came into this dream but not into the other.

Vs. 10. His father rebuked him. Note that in each case it is others who supply the interpretation.

Fourth Step. Write out a summary of the lesson (beginning with vs. 2) according to the view you take of the questions raised in the Second Step, and compare it with the one below.

SUMMARY. When Joseph was seventeen years he was placed with the sons of the bondmaids as a messenger or go-between for his father, and reported to his father their evil deeds. The hostility of his brethren was further increased by the preference his father showed him, and by their jealousy lest this preference and the dress of rank given him indicated a purpose to set aside the sons of Leah and give the birthright to the firstborn of Rachel. This became more acute when Joseph had dreams of pre-eminence that he guilelessly told his brethren.

Sixth Step. Study the principal topics of the lesson in the light of God's Word.

1. Lesson for parents.
   Study the causes of the difference between Joseph and his brethren in
   (a) Jacob's love for Rachel, Gen. xxix. 20; Job. xiv. 4. (Contrast with Leah xxix. 31 and unlawful relations to the bondmaids.)
   (b) Jacob's love for Joseph xxxvii. 3. (If there was weakness in Jacob it was in loving the others less, not in loving Joseph more. Children grow up best in an atmosphere of love).
   (c) In the pure surroundings of Joseph's youth, compared with the idolatry (xxxv. 2); the intrigues, jealousies, and strifes (chs. xxx, xxxi) surrounding the youth of the older sons. How often the reformation of the father, and the introduction of religion into the home comes too late for the older children.
2. Lesson for children—The boy the father of the man.
   (a) Constant amid temptations, xxxvii.2; compare xxxix. 9.
   (b) Faithful to his trust, xxxvii 2, (last clause); xxxvii. 14–17; compare xxxix. 4–6, and 22, 23; xli. 39, 40; Matt. xxv. 23.
   (c) High ideals, xxxvii. 7, 9; compare xli. 41–45. Luke ii. 49.

Fifth Step. The practical lessons are the importance of wholesome influences around the birth and childhood of our children, and the value of early piety in our children, and of high (but unselfish) aims.

II. TEACHING THE LESSON.

Avoid dwelling upon the partiality of Jacob even if you so regard it. The fallibility of parents is not a wholesome subject for children. Press the lessons of constancy, purity, fidelity as valuable in forming the character for life's responsibilities, and seek to fire the hearts of your scholars with a consecrated ambition to be of use in the world.

Prize Questions.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF MAR. 15.

37. *The family of Shem. Gen. ix. 26, 27.
38. The family of Japheth. Gen. ix. 27.
39. Because he came from the other side of the Euphrates. The word is derived from one signifying "beyond," or the verb "to cross over."

(We are somewhat perplexed as to how to treat the answers to this last question Those who gave answers such as, "Because he was the founder of the Hebrew nation," are of course counted out. The nation was named for him, not he for the nation. But many give the answer "a descendant of Eber." This answer is wrong. Abram would not have been designated by the name of an obscure and remote ancestor, especially as there is no trace of the name among other descendants of Eber. But as this is given in some old authorities (though now abandoned by all Biblical scholars) we dislike to count it against those who gave it. Still it would be unfair to those who gave the right answer to give it full value, so we will mark it with a † and give it half value.)

SECULAR NEWS.

NORTH CAROLINA.

[Correspondence of the N. C. Presbyterian.]

Mr. W. G. Hubbard, President of the Peace Society of the Friends delivered here to-night a forceful lecture on "Thought and Love: The Civilizing Forces of the Century." He planted his feet firmly on the Savior's declaration "Love your enemies" and showed that wa was incompatible with this divine utterance. The lecture was full of humor and of striking, suggestive thought.

Next Saturday the Seniors will celebrate Maxwell Chambers Day in the usual way—that is by speeches morning and night. Many visitors are expected on this occasion, for it has grown to be a sort of Commencement in embryo. On Friday night the Junior Class will give an entertainment, the nature of which has not yet transpired, but we have no doubt it will prove as entertaining as its predecessors of a like character.

Davidson College, March 21st.

We note that Mr. John D. Williams has resigned from the presidency and directorship of the Bank of Fayetteville. The institution has prospered under the presidency of Mr. Williams who enjoys the reputation of being one of the very best bank managers of the State. Mr. E. J. Lilly resigned as director at the same time. The board tendered thanks to those gentlemen for past services and elected Mr. Williams as assistant to the Board of Directors—thus testifying to their desire to retain the benefit of his mature judgment and enlarged experience. Dr. H. W. Lilly was elected president and Judge R. P. Buxton vice-president. Mr. W. N. Williams and Dr. T. M. Hunter were elected directors

On the night of Monday the biting cold winds prevented frost at Wilmington, but vegetation next morning wore a scorched or wilted look. Much fruit probably was destroyed and such truck vegetables as could not be protected. In the middle section of the State there was snow. It will be some days before the extent of the damage can be even approximated.

DOMESTIC.

Gen. A. H. Colquitt, Senator from Georgia, died at his residence in Washington City on Monday morning last at 7.10 o'clock. He was in his 70th year.

On last Sunday a cold wave struck the lower Mississippi valley. The peach and strawberry crops in Tennessee are said to be ruined. The same result about Madison, Miss.

The public school building in South Evanston, Illinois, was destroyed by fire last week. The loss is said to be $50,000. Six of the children jumped from the third and fourth story windows and were seriously hurt, though not fatally. The others escaped injury.

A severe storm with floods of rain submerged the railroads in Arkansas last week and destroyed communication for some days. Bridges were destroyed and levees broken.

Some vandals broke into the different Protestant churches in Ocean Springs, Miss. They stole the communion service of the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches and afterwards endeavored to sell them.

Heavy floods have prevailed over the Southern part of Texas. Crops on many farms have been destroyed and the farms delayed. Every bridge in Nacogdoches county has been washed away.

Heavy frost has seriously damaged the fruit crops in West and Southwest Texas.

Railroad cuts have been blocked and railroad trains stopped in Wyoming by snow. In some places the temperature fell below zero.

FOREIGN.

Another fearful explosion of dynamite occurred at Santander, Spain, last week. On November 3 1, it may be remembered, a Spanish steamer blew up from explosion of a part of her cargo of dynamite. Divers went down recently to recover the dynamite which had sunk and was still in the wreck. While a number of men were engaged in this business the explosion took place killing ten and injuring thirty of those thus engaged.

On last Sunday an aeronaut, Wilton by name, after feeling assured from experiment that it was safe to do so, ascended from Cannes. He had gone up some distance when the wind veered and took him rapidly out over the ocean. The balloon was without ear and the valve would not open. He dropped some hundreds of feet into the sea and was drowned before help could reach him.

It seems from last accounts that the war in Brazil is not over yet. De Mello has joined the Southern insurgents and they have a strong force, so it is said.

A Moravian invasion of Mexico is now probable. A delegation arrived a few days since in the northern part of Chihuahua and are making arrangements to establish there a colony of several thousand polygamous Mormons. The settlers will go from Utah. The government has been very liberal and ganted a concession of nearly three million acres of rich land in one body.

News comes that the schooner Storm King was struck by an iceberg in the northern Pacific ocean and wrecked during a late gale. The captain and crew narrowly escaped with their lives and after great hardships reached land safely.

Three different Arctic expeditions are planned for the coming summer. One party will go in relief of Lieut. Peary now wintering at Bowdoin bay and will bring them home. Another will start for Smith's sound in May, under Professor Steen and search for Bjorling Kalsienius who were lost from the Ripple last year. It will make scientific research a main object and will be absent three years. The third expedition will be sent out by the U. S. government for scientific purposes. It will start, as will the others, from St. Johns, New Foundland, and will be gone four years.

Christian Leader:

No young man ever climbed the ladder of success with a bottle of whisky in his pocket.

Ruskin:

Without the resolution in your hearts to do good work, so long as your hands have motion in them, and to do it whether the issue be that you die or live, no life worthy the name will ever be possible to you, while, in once forming the resolution that your work is to be well done, life is really won, here and forever.

Lutheran World:

Many parents have the habit of criticising and pointing out the faults of their pastor in the presence of their children. What wonder, then, if their children break away from the Church, and even become dissolute. If parents feel that their pastor needs an overhauling, they had better do it when the children are in bed, for few things are more likely to cause a young person to dislike the church.

Bi.flast Witness:

To fight evil with evil simply doubles the evil. The "heaping coals of fire on the head" of enemies is not the object but only the result of returning good for evil. He that returns good for evil for the purpose of "burning', his enemy, does not really give good for evil, and there will be no good result. But the only vengeance a Christian can take on anyone is this. You try to kill an enemy by making him your friend. You do that which tends to burn out the evil spirit within him.
